Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the failure to raise points of order in reference to any measure in the Committee of the Whole does not prevent their consideration when a measure has passed from the Committee of the Whole into the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to say in reference to the resolution that I consider the question it raises one of the most important questions that can come before the Senate; and I should like the Senate to pass on it independently, at a time when it is not complicated with the consideration of any other question. I am unwilling to have the ruling of the Chair the other day stand—the ruling that failure to raise a point of order in the Committee of the Whole precludes its being raised in the Senate.

I therefore ask for the reference of the resolution at this time, and will discuss it later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the resolution will lie over for one day. Is it the intention of the Senator to have it referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my intention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Chair will state, however, that it is not the universal custom among presiding officers to hold in such a way as to make necessary the adoption of this resolution. The present occupant of the chair has looked into the matter somewhat, and he thinks a distinct error was made by the Presiding Officer who recently made the ruling referred to by the Senator from Texas. The plain language of the first clause of Rule XV is that all bills and amendments must be considered as in the Committee of the Whole, and when thereafter these are reported to the Senate that the amendments shall again be considered. If the word "considered" is a limitation upon the power to make a point of order after the bill or amendment has been reported to the Senate, it is obviously a like limitation upon the power to make a point of order in the Committee of the Whole.

If the question shall arise during my brief occupancy of the chair, I shall not hesitate to hold that a point of order can be presented in the Senate, even though it may not have been urged in the Committee of the Whole. In the event such a point had been raised in Committee of the Whole and overruled or sustained, I take it for granted that even if there should exist a difference of opinion as to the specific case between different presiding officers presiding in the Committee of the Whole and the Senate, respectively, that the one would not assume to overrule the other in the particular case. As a matter of comity among presiding officers the ruling would be permitted to stand so far as that identical instance is concerned, notwithstanding these casual occupants of the chair should differ in opinion as to the rule.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It seemed to me to be so clear that the matter stands just as the Chair has stated it that I believed it essential to have the Senate pass on it by resolution, after the ruling the other day by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We can get the matter up at some time by informally submitting it to the Senate when it is presented, and thus take the judgment of the Senate on the disputed question involved.

No objection having been interposed, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JONES. I desire to give notice that on to-morrow I shall submit an amendment to Rule XXV in the nature of a substitute providing for a reorganization of the standing committees of the Senate, to take effect at the beginning of the Sixty-fourth Congress, so that said rule shall read as follows:

XXV.

1. Beginning with the Sixty-fourth Congress, the following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

COMMITTEES OF THE FIRST CLASS.

A Committee on Appropriations.
A Committee on Commerce.
A Committee on the District of Columbia.
A Committee on Finance.
A Committee on Foreign Relations.
A Committee on Interstate Commerce.
A Committee on the Judiciary.
A Committee on Banking and Currency.
A Committee on Public Lands.

The foregoing committees shall consist of not to exceed 11 members each, and shall be so constituted that each Member of the Senate shall be a member of one of said committees and no more.

COMMITTEES OF THE SECOND CLASS.

A Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.
A Committee on Rules.
A Committee on the Census.
A Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.
A Committee on Claims.
A Committee on Education and Labor.
A Committee on Insular Affairs.
A Committee on Immigration.
A Committee on Naval Affairs.
A Committee on Pensions.
A Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.
A Committee on Printing, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.

A Committee on Engrossed and Enrolled Bills, which shall have power to act jointly with a similar committee or committees of the House of Representatives, and which, or some member of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed the Senate or both Houses, to see that the same are correctly engrossed or enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, shall present the same forthwith, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person, and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.

A Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which shall have power to act jointly with a similar committee of the House of Representatives.

A Committee on Audit and Control of the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

The foregoing committees of the second class shall consist of not to exceed 13 members and no Senator shall be placed upon more than two of said committees at the same time.

2. The aforesaid committees shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed.

PRICES OF OIL.

Mr. OWEN. I submit a short memorial from citizens of Tulsa, Okla., which I desire to have printed in the RECORD, together with certain data bearing upon the relative prices of Oklahoma oil and oil in other parts of the country.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TULSA, OKLA., June 6, 1914.

To WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States; and
To the CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The vital welfare of the independent oil producers and the independent refiners and consumers of the Nation imperatively demands that oil pipe line companies be made common carriers and that they be adequately divorced from oil-producing interests; and we beg your most urgent consideration of our appeal for earliest possible relief.

Crude oil prices.

	Per barrel, April, 1914.	Per barrel, June 4, 1914.
Pennsylvania	$2.50	$1.80
Ohio, North Lima	1.40	1.19
Illinois	1.45	1.15
Oklahoma:
Cushing	1.05	.75
Healdton	.70	.50

Compared to Pennsylvania, at $2 per barrel, the Cushing oil is worth $1.85 per barrel and the Healdton oil is worth $1.50 per barrel, on the authority of Dr. Allen, chief chemist of the Bureau of Mines.

The Healdton oil is bringing but 33⅓ per cent of its market value acknowledged and fixed by the Standard Oil monopoly as fair in Pennsylvania.

The great wrong is obvious.

Will Congress give the remedy?

TULSA, OKLA., June 10, 1914.

Senator ROBERT L. OWEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Dr. Allen, chief chemist Bureau of Mines, just reported to corporation commission that on basis of $2 per barrel for Pennsylvania oil, Cushing worth $1.85; Healdton, $1.50. Carroll, of Commerce Bureau, in Washington, says 8 cents per barrel reasonable transportation cost from Tulsa to Gulf points.

OKLAHOMA OIL AN EQUAL OF EAST HIGH GRADE—COMPARATIVE RUNS OF PENNSYLVANIA AND CUSHING OILS SHOW THEM PRACTICALLY ON A PAR—FIGURES ARE INDISPUTABLE—NEWS CORRESPONDENT FURNISHES HERE MOST INTERESTING ITEM TO OKLAHOMA PRODUCERS SEEN IN MANY MONTHS.

TULSA, OKLA., June 2, 1914.

MID-CONTINENT OIL NEWS,
Okmulgee, Okla.

GENTLEMEN: One of the Pennsylvania refiners to whom the writer has been shipping Cushing crude oil has had a comparative run of 100 gallons Cushing crude and 100 gallons (approximately 2.4 barrels) of Pennsylvania crude oil. The runs were made by a laboratory which is recognized as the highest authority in the United States on tests of oils, including crude and all grades of refined and lubricating oils, waxes, residium, etc.

The test is made in an experimental still and is taken in 20 units of 5 per cent each. The test of the 20 units are as follows:

DEAR SIR: We have had comparative runs made by the ——— of the Pennsylvania crude we are now running and of the Cushing crude gotten through you.

The tests of the 5 per cent units are as follows:

	Gravity.		Gravity.
Crude oil, Cushing	41.8	Pennsylvania	44.2
No. 1, 5 per cent unit Cushing	80.1	Pennsylvania	80.5
No. 2, 5 per cent unit Cushing	72.0	Pennsylvania	70.5
No. 3, 5 per cent unit Cushing	67.0	Pennsylvania	64.3
No. 4, 5 per cent unit Cushing	62.0	Pennsylvania	60.1
No. 5, 5 per cent unit Cushing	57.2	Pennsylvania	55.5
No. 6, 5 per cent unit Cushing	55.5	Pennsylvania	53.8
No. 7, 5 per cent unit Cushing	52.3	Pennsylvania	52.0
No. 8, 5 per cent unit Cushing	49.5	Pennsylvania	50.0
No. 9, 5 per cent unit Cushing	46.7	Pennsylvania	47.7
No. 10, 5 per cent unit Cushing	44.1	Pennsylvania	45.7
No. 11, 5 per cent unit Cushing	42.0	Pennsylvania	43.6
No. 12, 5 per cent unit Cushing	40.2	Pennsylvania	41.6
No. 13, 5 per cent unit Cushing	38.3	Pennsylvania	40.5
No. 14, 5 per cent unit Cushing	37.1	Pennsylvania	38.8
No. 15, 5 per cent unit Cushing	34.5	Pennsylvania	37.6
No. 16, 5 per cent unit Cushing	32.1	Pennsylvania	36.8
No. 17, 5 per cent unit Cushing	29.0	Pennsylvania	34.0
No. 18, 5 per cent unit Cushing	27.0	Pennsylvania	32.5
No. 19, 6¼ per cent unit Cushing	24.8	Pennsylvania (9⅜ per cent)	29.7

No. 20, 3⅛ per cent unit Cushing asphalt.

100 per cent unit Cushing, 93⅞ per cent Pennsylvania.

The first trace of color appears in Cushing unit No. 11 and Pennsylvania unit No. 12.

The color of the Cushing units darkens much more rapidly than the Pennsylvania units, Cushing crude No. 17 being about association No. 5, while Pennsylvania unit No. 17 is about association No. 2.

The first traces of paraffin at 70 temperature appear in the Cushing unit No. 17 and in the Pennsylvania unit No. 16.

The last three units from Cushing are exceedingly dark, while the darkest of any of the Pennsylvania units is about the color of commercial vaseline.

Three and one-half per cent asphalt in the Cushing crude was a hard, dry product.

The above report was given the writer with the understanding that neither the name of the refiner nor the laboratory making the test be used. The entire matter, however, is absolutely reliable, and originals are in my possession. Following the above comparative test this same refiner, under date of May 28, 1914, made a comparison of the market value of the products and by-products contained in the two crudes and writes as follows:

Yours of May 25.

As near as I could figure the value of the products from Pennsylvania and Cushing crude, based on the comparative run made by the figures, would be as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA OIL.

Gasoline	66.2 gravity,	25 gallons, at 12 cents	$3.00
Turp. subt	51.9 gravity,	15 gallons, at 8½ cents	1.28
Kerosene	45.7 gravity,	15 gallons, at 5 cents	.75
300 oil	40.3 gravity,	15 gallons, at 5 cents	.75
Non vis. neut	35.5 gravity,	12 gallons, at 4½ cents	.54
Vis. neut	31 gravity,	8 gallons, at 12 cents	.96
S. R. cyl. stock	25 gravity,	8 gallons, at 12 cents	.96
Refined parf. wax		2 gallons, at 25 cents	.50
		100	8.74
5 per cent gallonage loss in manufacture			.44
Total value of products			8.30

CUSHING OIL.

Gasoline	65.7 gravity,	30 gallons, at 12 cents	$3.60
Turp. subt	48.2 gravity,	20 gallons, at 8½ cents	1.70
Kerosene	40.1 gravity,	15 gallons, at 3 cents	.45
Gas oil	34.6 gravity,	15 gallons, at 2 cents	.30
Vis. neut	28 gravity,	10 gallons, at 10 cents	1.00
S. R. cyl. stock	24 gravity,	6 gallons, at 8 cents	.48
Refined parf. wax		¼ gallon, at 25 cents	.13
Asphalt		3½ gallons, at 6 cents	.21
		100	7.87
5 per cent gallonage less in manufacture			.39
Total value of products			7.48

You will note from the above figures that the products from 100 gallons of Pennsylvania oil only exceed in value the products of a like number of gallons of Cushing crude oil by 82 cents, or, in other words, of Pennsylvania oil from a refining standpoint, is worth only approximately 10 per cent more than the Cushing oil, although at the present time with Cushing oil selling at 75 cents and Pennsylvania oil at $1.90 at the wells, price of Pennsylvania oil is over two and a half times that of Cushing oil.

Yours, very truly,

The above comparative estimate of the value of the products contained in the crudes referred to is really in favor of Pennsylvania oil, the comparison being made by a Pennsylvania refiner, being thoroughly familiar with his own product and not so with the products of Oklahoma crude, which would naturally leave the comparison slightly in favor of the Pennsylvania products.

For instance, kerosene, you will observe, is figured at 40.1 gravity at 3 cents per gallon, against 45.7 gravity (Pennsylvania) at 5 cents per gallon. In this connection, I might add, the Consumers' Refining Co. at Cushing, oil running oils from the Wheeler & Layton sands, before the discovery of the Bartlesville sand in the Cushing field, have been making a 47-gravity, 150 degrees, water-white oil (kerosene of the highest grade) would raise the value of kerosene from Cushing crude from 1 to 1½ cents per gallon.

Furthermore, take the viscus neutrals from Cushing oil. From "viscus neutrals" is derived all the various engine and machine, gas-engine and automobile oils, etc. While the flash and fire test of Pennsylvania viscus neutrals are somewhat, though slightly, higher than those from the Oklahoma oils, the viscosity as well as the cold test of Oklahoma viscus neutrals, are noticeably better, and such oils are therefore of about the same value. Therefore, according to the above report, figuring market values from either Oklahoma or Pennsylvania shipping points, freight rates considered, the value of the products from both crudes are about on a par. In fact, when the above results of the comparative runs were sent me, a letter accompanying said test stated in part: "You will readily see that Pennsylvania crude is worth but very little, if any, more than Cushing."

Cushing crude, I firmly believe, represents about the average value of Oklahoma oils, while the crude from the Bartlesville sand is of slightly higher gravity (41.8) than most other oils produced in the older Oklahoma fields. There is found in various fields crude of from 39 to 42 gravity of much better color than Cushing, and while slightly lower in gasoline and kerosene contents, the base or heavier oils are of much greater value to the refiner.

The writer has observed these oils at the wells and from different sands in the entire field and within the boundaries of, say, Muskogee, Henryetta, Okmulgee, and Tulsa, and is of the firm opinion that oils produced within the said boundaries are of as great, and likely greater, refining value than is Cushing crude.

Should any interested party, refiner, or producer doubt the reliability of the above report, I would be pleased to furnish proof, but, as before stated, the names of said refiner and laboratory must be withheld from publication and with good and sufficient reasons.

Yours, very truly,

LEO KAUFMAN.

CONSTRUCTION OF REVENUE CUTTERS.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4177) to provide for the construction of four revenue cutters, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to amendment numbered 3 made by the House to the bill and agree to House amendment numbered 3; and that the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendments numbered 1 and 2 and agree to the same.

Strike out "four" and insert "two" in title of bill.

J. H. BANKHEAD,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. C. ADAMSON,
T. J. SIMS,
F. C. STEVENS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE RAILROAD CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4053) for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co., which was, on page 2, line 1, to strike out "a sufficient sum, not to exceed $400," and insert "the sum of $292.45."

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 34 and 53 to the bill and agreeing to the same; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67 and agreeing to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate insisting upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67; further insisting upon its disagreement to the residue of the amendments and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, disagree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PERKINS conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The SECRETARY. The pending question is on the amendment on page 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will suspend at that point.

On yesterday, when this bill was under consideration, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] said:

Mr. President, I am rather inclined to submit a point of order upon the part of the bill which the Secretary has just read.

The amendment involved being an item making an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees and other persons having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted allotment, or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Chair regards that, the item having been estimated for by the department as an absolutely necessary and legitimate expense, the qualifying language which follows is only such as is calculated to give intelligent direction to the manner in which the fund shall be expended, and under the precedents of the Senate it is not subject to a point of order. The point of order is, accordingly, overruled.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the amendment may be temporarily passed over. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The SECRETARY. The pending question on the bill is, on page 19, where the committee proposes to insert, after line 11, the following paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to provide school facilities for the children of the Papago Tribe of Indians in Arizona, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, this amount to be in addition to any other funds available for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what other funds have been made available for this purpose, and if any, how much?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to supply the Senator with the information. I read from page 331 of the House hearings the justification for this item, offered by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as follows:

The Papago school population is estimated to be 1,220. It is thought that, including all nonreservation members of the tribe, the number is considerably larger, and the Government has never provided any home schools for this tribe except one day school, with a capacity of 40. A mission school with a capacity of 150 has during recent years been maintained and operated by the Government. This makes a total Government home school capacity of 190 pupils. There are several mission schools on or near the reservation, and quite a number of children attend nonreservation schools. However, it is estimated that between 800 and 1,000 Papago children of school age are entirely without school facilities.

The Papagos live in villages; therefore it will be feasible and advisable to provide school facilities for them by building day schools. This will make it possible to provide school facilities for all of these children at very much less expense than where the conditions make boarding schools necessary. The maintenance expense will likewise be very small comparatively. There are probably 12 to 15 Papago villages where good day schools can be maintained.

There is no previous estimate.

Proceeding to read further from the justification:

These Indians are a very worthy class of people and ask no assistance from the Government except that school facilities be provided. This item of $50 000 should be included in the bill this year in order that the Papago children may not longer be permitted to grow up in ignorance.

Mr. SMOOT. What I asked the Senator was the amount of the appropriation. This is a direct appropriation of $50,000, and it says:

This amount to be in addition to any other funds available for that purpose.

What other funds are available for that purpose, and how much?

Mr. ASHURST. At this time I am not able to say that there are any funds available, except in the general language used at the beginning of the section, where, referring to Arizona and New Mexico, it says, "for support and civilization." The Senator will remember that those words have been defined to be apt words, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his judgment, distributes this sum for civilization and support in accordance with the needs, requirements, and necessities of each particular tribe.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the amount here referred to is some lump-sum appropriation, and I thought perhaps the Senator knew just exactly the amount that would go to these particular Indians.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Utah is correct. He will find at the bottom of page 7:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for and for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,500,000.

I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that this particular paragraph relating to the Papago Tribe was quite fully discussed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I believe the committee were absolutely unanimous in the view that this clause is a proper one.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to the appropriation for the purpose of educating the children of the Papago Tribe, but I was trying to get at whether this is an undue amount to appropriate, taking into consideration that they have a part of a fund appropriated already, namely, a million and a half dollars. If there are 150 children of that tribe, it would cost about $325 per child. In addition to that, I wanted to learn, if possible, how much they get out of the lump sum, so as to see about how much it would cost per year to educate each child of the tribe.

Mr. ASHURST. While it might appear that it would be an excessive sum for this particular tribe of Indians, that is only an apparent disclosure. It is not really an excessive amount. The committee were of the opinion, as to the appropriation referred to at the top of page 8 of the bill—$1,500,000—none of that money would be used in cases where there was a specific appropriation made like the one now under discussion. It was also the opinion of the committee that this is not an excessive sum. A good deal of discussion was had in relation to the item, and it was resolved by the committee that it is not an excessive sum.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If my colleague will permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to his colleague?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Papago Indians live on the Papago Reservation in Arizona, but they are scattered. Quite a number of them live on the reservation, and then quite a number are nomadic, wandering divisions of the tribe that will go off and seek for water and make a home for a season on some mountain or some place in the desert where they can find enough water near by to raise a small crop.

I apprehend that with this appropriation, in addition to the lump sum, they can get hardly enough by a proper division among all the Indians for the support of the Papagos. I imagine that some effort is being made to take care of these Indian villages that are scattered around, where they can easily have schools for a season and thus have some of the advantages that are given to the tribe.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I have not any objections to the amount from what already has been said. I will not object to the item.

Mr. ASHURST. I appreciate the force——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the further consideration of this bill the Chair will give notice that there will not be a strict observance of the rule which requires a Senator to ask permission before he interrupts. These colloquies are enlightening and they amount to an exchange of information, and it would take more time to obtain consent than to get the information when it seems to be asked in good faith and not for the purpose of delay. So if the Chair does not interpose on every occasion it will not be due to the fact that he does not understand that in proper cases it is the duty of the Chair to do so. Of course, it will be limited to one Senator speaking at a time; the reporters must take down what Senators say. With that explanation of his conduct, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I may not have been considerate in regard to my interruptions, and I wish to apologize to the Chair. I wish, however, before I take my seat to ask Senators to observe the language on page 8, lines 16, 17, and 18, of the bill, in which it is specifically stated that no part of the appropriation of $1,500,000 "shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] misunderstood the statement of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] as to the number of children of school age in this tribe. If the statement was made by the Senator from Arizona as understood by the Senator from Utah and communicated to me by him, I want to correct it. The Papago school population is estimated at 1,220 and not 150.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir; 1,220.

Mr. SMOOT. I may have misunderstood the Senator in what he said, but I understood him to say that 150 and 40 more would be 190. I say I would have no objection to the item even if there were 190 on the explanation that has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 4, after the word "expended," to strike out "reimbursable to the United States by the Indians having tribal rights on said reservation and to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds belonging to said Indians until paid," so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of a bridge across the Moencopi Wash on the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz., $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 19, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set aside and reserve as a school farm for the Fort Yuma Indian School the west half of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter of section 24, township 16 south, range 22 east, San Bernardino meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 21, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed the sum of $25,000, and in no event more than one-third of the sum that may be necessary for the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River at or near Topock, in the State of Arizona, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Arizona and the State of California satisfactory guaranties of the payment, by the said States, of at least two-thirds of the cost of said bridge; and that the proper authorities of the said States assume full responsibility for, and will at all times maintain and repair said bridge and the approaches thereto: And provided further, That the bridge shall be built in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Mr. ASHURST. I move an amendment to the amendment. In line 10, where the words "State of California" occur, before the word "State," I move to insert the words "county of San Bernardino, in the," so as to read:

That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended until the Secretary of the Interior shall have obtained from the proper authorities of the State of Arizona and the county of San Bernardino, in the State of California, satisfactory guaranties of the payment—

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 19, to strike out:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation of the conditions on the Fort Mohave Indian Reservation, in Arizona, with respect to the necessity of constructing a bridge across the Colorado River, near said reservation, and to cause surveys, plans, and reports to be made, together with an estimated limit of cost for the construction of a suitable bridge across said river, and also to ascertain from a council of the members of said tribe whether the Indians of said reservation are willing that the proportion of the cost of said bridge which the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be properly chargeable to them shall be reimbursable from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed to the credit of said tribe in the Treasury, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated for the purpose herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 12, to insert:

For enlarging the irrigation system for the irrigation of Indian lands, for protective works to prevent damage to irrigable lands by floods, and for development of domestic water supply on the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona, in accordance with the plans and specifications submitted by the chief engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with a provision contained in section 1 of the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, $50,000, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the total cost of this project shall not exceed $150,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I wish to make a mere statement of the facts in this case. I think this particular item should go out, and I believe I can convince the Senate that a mistake was made by the committee.

If this item is permitted to remain in the bill, it will take away the water supply of the city of Tucson, a city of over 20,000 people. We get our water from an underflow. We have developed it by going deep and raising the water, and we are using that water for city purposes and also for irrigation. We started that long before the Papago Indians ever thought of getting any water for any purpose.

I have telegrams here that I will not detain the Senate to read from the mayor and from the chamber of commerce stating that the proposed scheme takes away the water from the city of Tucson. I have looked at the plans that they propose to use, and while they go higher up above the Indian reservation, where the mountains crowd the valley they cut across and take the whole underflow of the valley. It would leave a perfect desert around the city, where there are now 10,000 acres in cultivation, and it would take away the water supply of the town.

I have defeated this item two or three times before the committee. It got in this time, as I understand, on statements made that it did not interfere with the flow, but I assure the Senate that it does interfere with it, for I know the plan, and I know the ground as well as I know this Senate Chamber.

I move to strike out the item from the bill—that is, I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In connection with this amendment I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. Has this work already been entered upon and has money already been expended under it?

Mr. ASHURST. No; the only money expended was the appropriation made to pay for the expense of ascertaining the feasibility and propriety of the project. The work has not been entered upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me when we irrigate these Indian lands the charge ought to be against the Indian fund, and not against the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to his colleague?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am acquainted with this matter, and I have just explained it to the Senate. I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment on the ground that the proposition would take all the water from the city of Tucson. It really amounts to taking the whole underground flow. I want the Senate to disagree to the amendment, and I would be very glad to have that done as early as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 10, after the word "Arizona," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$35,600," so as to make the clause read:

For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $35,600.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not like this amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the item, beginning at line 6, on page 23, down to and including line 10, go over until I confer with my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over temporarily unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 21, after the words "Navajo Reservation," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the development of a water supply for the Navajo Indians on the Navajo Reservation, $50,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, reimbursable out of any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available.

Mr. LANE. I reserve the right to offer an amendment to this amendment, if it can be reserved at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon will state his amendment, and we will determine what can be done when we find out what it is.

Mr. LANE. There is an item which ought to be stricken out, I guess, although I am not entirely informed concerning it. It has to do with lands other than agricultural, and, in a way, would affect a large amount of mineral lands. I should like to have it go over until I can take the matter up with the chairman of the committee and see if he will not agree to some change in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will indicate just what provision of the bill he desires to have passed over for the present, the Chair will submit his request to the Senate.

Mr. LANE. That is the last item which was read on page 23, lines 20 to 24, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks that the provision indicated by him may be passed over temporarily. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 24, to insert:

For the purchase of lands for the use and benefit of Indians under the jurisdiction of the superintendent of the Camp Verde Indian School, Ariz., $20,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. Provided, That the lands purchased for said Indians shall be held in trust and be subject to the provisions of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., 388), as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 9, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Colorado River and Yuma Reservations, the said sum to be expended in the purchase of seed, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924, and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury, and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hardly caught the full meaning of the amendment as read. I wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge to explain the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am aware that this is somewhat of a departure from previous methods employed in the department. This has been characterized as a revolving fund. It was the subject of much discussion, thought, and investigation by the committee. The method has been considered at some length by the Indian Bureau, and it has been deemed to be a wise one. When Indian tribes have land, our experience discloses to us that the mere possession of land is not sufficient to develop them into persons who become self-supporting. This is to create a fund out of which appropriations may be made for the purpose of leveling their lands, plowing them, tilling them, raising crops, building houses, purchasing machinery, and purchasing cattle; that the fund appropriated shall become a lien on the land; and that when the fund is repaid, as provision is made in the act for the repayment, the land being in the meantime held as security, that that same fund which is repaid into the Treasury of the United States shall again be used for a similar purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have noticed, of course, that this money is to be paid to the Indians for certain enumerated purposes "under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe." I suppose those regulations relate to the security which the Government will take for the money advanced?

Mr. ASHURST. That would be one of the regulations. Now, relating to this particular item, I wish to read a short excerpt from the recommendation submitted to the committee by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

> We are asking in this item for a reimbursable appropriation of $50,000 for the Indians of the Colorado River and Yuma Reservations in Arizona and California. The Government has constructed irrigation projects for these Indians, and they have now at their disposal valuable irrigable lands, but they are without means to begin cultivating those lands. It requires money to level the land, and these Indians also need agricultural equipment. Every dollar of this money will be reimbursed to the Government, and it is simply a loan to these Indians based on good security, because they have valuable surplus lands, and the appropriation is simply to enable them to become self-supporting. In support of this item, I would like to submit the following justification:

Statistics, Colorado River Reservation.

Indian population	486
Acreage of reservation area	240,640
Acreage of agricultural land	100,160
Acreage of grazing land	85,000
Acreage allotted lands	4,860
Acreage under ditch	4,860
Acreage cultivated by Indians	638
Acreage irrigated	450
Live stock:
Horses	210
Mares	225
Stallions, pony	31
Cows and heifers	143
Steers	106

So the fund will be used for the purpose, not of dealing them out rations but to cope in a large way with this Indian problem—I might use those words in the nomenclature of Indian affairs, for the "Indian problem" is the great problem that is before us, as to how we shall develop the Indians into becoming self-supporting. This has been deemed. I will not say the best way, for the committee can not arrogate to itself all knowledge and wisdom, but it is a good way, the money being secured by the lands themselves.

Mr. SMOOT. The only fear I have respecting this provision is that unless many of the Indians are of a different character from white men, if the money is available to the Indian and he has to put up his land as security, I am afraid that in the end perhaps he will be liable to lose his land. I want to say to the Senator having the bill in charge that I believe the Indians ought to be assisted; I think that if conditions are such as stated by the Senator, it would be well for Congress to make the appropriations direct, and then see if they could not, by direct regulation and by putting one or two competent men there who are familiar with the methods of irrigating and cultivating land, help the Indians in their experiments. The Indian who does not particularly care for work would not make application for the money, but he might feel that if he could get the money he would get it and use it, perhaps, not all in the cultivation of his land, but partly for that purpose, and then he would perhaps find himself mortgaged, and it would be impossible for him at the end of the 5 years or 10 years, or whatever length of time it is, to pay. All I was thinking about was the protection of the Indians.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. OWEN. I felt some doubt about whether this revolving fund would be repaid. In order to ascertain what reason we had for judging as to the future in regard to that I requested that a report be made upon such revolving funds as had heretofore been used, so as to see whether or not under their administration these funds were really in good faith paid back. I was much surprised and much gratified to find that the department had a most favorable experience with them; that the Indians had shown integrity in regard to these matters and industry, and had done very well indeed with regard to the repayment; so that from the history of the transactions in the department it appears that no reasonable doubt should be entertained that the money will actually be paid back in good faith and constitute a revolving fund that will serve other Indians in the same way, teaching them the lesson of self-support.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a splendid idea, Mr. President, if it can be successfully carried out.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not think the Senator appreciates the plan that is adopted. I notice he referred to repayment at the end of 10 years. This provision does not contemplate a loan for 10 years; it contemplates that for 10 years the money that is paid back may be loaned to other Indians. The plan has been simply to loan them money for one year. The money does not go to the Indian at all. The agent buys the horses and seed, or whatever is to be purchased, and takes the Indian's note for the amount, the Indian making the payment.

This plan works to the advantage of the Indian, and I am going to speak of it because we have adopted it to some extent in this bill. In the first place, it makes it possible for the department, where an Indian requires assistance of this kind, to lend him a helping hand; and, in the second place, it teaches the Indian what the white man had to learn many generations ago—the importance of keeping his obligations; that when he borrows a dollar he must repay that dollar.

Last year, on the passage of the Indian appropriation bill, as will be seen on page 2097 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I submitted a summary of the work of the department up to that time under this provision. In one case I think every dollar was repaid the first year, but in the other cases there had not been such a prompt payment.

If it is properly managed, this method is the solution of the individualizing and development of the Indian by lending him this helping hand under the direction of the agent. The money does not go to the Indian; he can not squander it. The only danger is that the agent might purchase things that possibly might not be necessary, but we have got to take some chance in everything. The agent is right there with the Indian in the fall, and when the harvest comes he sees to it that the Indian repays the money. The provision is designed to individualize the Indian, to help the Indian, and, above all, to teach the Indian the necessity of business methods.

I will say, frankly, we have provided considerable sums in this bill to be used along that line. We did it because of the excellent success that has attended the same experiment in preceding years. As I have said, a summary of what has been accomplished will be found on page 2097 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, part 3, volume 50, Sixty-third Congress, first session.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to say, for the further information of Senators, that there is another condition which has brought about this method of appropriating money, and that is this: All along in the history of the Indian in the past there has been appropriated by Congress, out of funds belonging to the Government and out of funds which were reimbursable from the Indian's property, hundreds of thousands of dollars for his support and civilization. We all know that the Indian has made a failure as a farmer. For some reason he has not advanced as the white man has in that line, and it has been a problem as to what to do for him. In investigating the matter the Indian Committee and the commission appointed to look into Indian affairs has found this condition to exist—and it exists at this time all over the United States—and that is that the Indian has been allotted in severalty lands to which in some cases water has been brought for irrigation purposes at his expense. In this way he has had turned over to him tracts amounting to from 40 to 160 acres, and in some cases the terms have been that if the Indian did not utilize the water and cultivate the land within a certain specified period of time, in one instance not to exceed two years, he forfeited his water right and any advantage he might receive from the land.

What else did we do for him? We did not give him a penny with which to buy a plow, or a harrow, or a grubbing hoe, or anything at all with which to work the land. We hired farmers to go out and teach him how to farm, but we furnished him nothing with which to farm. He was left with his bare hands. The white man could not make a success under such circumstances. When irrigable land is being broken to cultivation and water is put upon it, it has been found that the white man, with every facility at his command, is not able to bring that ground under subjection in 5 years, and a bill now pending before Congress gives him an additional grant of time, making it 20 years; but the Indian was only allowed 2 years, and was not even given a mattock. Consequently he failed to make good.

This provision was put in the bill so that the Government might buy some seed, which it did not do before, and furnish the Indians with plows and implements with which to cultivate the land. This is a reformation long overdue. The Indian has lost his land and his property through what seems to have been a policy, probably not adopted with the intention of ruining him, but which has actually resulted in his degradation and in his financial ruin. This fund is designed to buy the Indian plows and harrows and seed and to hire men to go and teach him how to put the seed in or to let him have an opportunity to plant it himself.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, referring to what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has said, that the repayments were not to be made in 10 years, but were to be made in 1 year, I believe if the Indian is capable of paying back the money in 10 annual installments he is doing well. I think that if he can possibly pay it in that length of time, he is doing even better than a great many white men have done in our reclamation projects, and I would not object if the time were extended to 10 years. Of course the amount returned would be small if each Indian availed himself of the 10 years in which to make payment, but the Indian must be a very industrious farmer and he must be a most prosperous one if he can, in less than 10 years, save out of his earnings upon the farm sufficient money to pay for the amount that is advanced to him by the Government for farm machinery, for seed, and for stock. If he can do that, Mr. President, he is doing mighty well.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. As showing the success of this method I will state that on the Tongue River Reservation there was not a single beneficiary of the fund who was delinquent under the terms of the agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. What was the agreement?

Mr. CLAPP. I think it was all to be paid the first year. These sums are not large. I think it is a mistake to advance too much.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, so do I.

Mr. CLAPP. One Indian wants seed, another Indian perhaps needs a cow, another a plow. On the Belknap Reservation, where it was $15,000, if I remember correctly, that was all paid.

It must be said that when you consider that you are dealing with people who never have been taught the necessity of paying debts, it has worked out wonderfully well. Of course there will be cases of delinquency; there is no doubt of that; but I really believe it is the most vital legislation we have ever enacted for the Indian, and especially if the individual agent is the right kind of a man to stay right next to the Indian and help him.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota the conditions surrounding those Indians. I apprehend they are very different from the conditions surrounding those on the Colorado River.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, of course they are different; and the consequence is that the department in dealing with those on the Colorado River will have to exercise more care, advance less money, and be more attentive to the Indians in seeing that it is paid back. The Indian problem must be largely a matter of personal equation between the agent and the individual Indian, and upon the agent must depend very largely the development of the Indian as we individualize him.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will pardon me further, the condition of the Indians on the Colorado River Reservation is that they have not enough water, as I understand. It seems to me it would be well if this provision looked toward the development of water instead of providing such a large amount for the purchase of tools, equipment, and seed where, in my judgment, they have not the opportunity to raise good crops, even if the equipment is given to them, without more water being supplied to them.

They have an immense reservation there, capable of being made the best in the United States, in my judgment, and yet nothing seems to be done toward the development of water to an extent that will justify a $50,000 appropriation for the purchase of things to put in land where there is no water with which to cultivate it. Of course, I am in favor of doing anything on earth that can be done for them.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, we have made, or at least suppose we have made, the necessary appropriations for water, if water can be developed there. That is an appropriation pure and simple. This is not an appropriation for the Indian. One of the prime objects of this particular feature is that while you are helping the Indian, at the same time you are teaching him the value of a dollar, and teaching him that every dollar he runs in debt for he must sooner or later pay back. It is a loan to him. Now, we do not make a loan to them for irrigation. We make an appropriation for that.

Of course, you have to depend somewhat on the Indian. It is not to be supposed that the department, as anxious as every one is first to do his duty, and secondly, to avoid the loss of prestige in bad management, is going to advance money to an Indian to buy seed if the Indian has no place where he could raise a crop with the seed. You must trust the administration of the fund to them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will bear with me further, I do not claim to know all about these Indians; but from what I have observed and what I have been told by those who live with them on the very reservation I have referred to, these Indians, even if you give them these things, are still members of a tribe, and there is where the personal equation of which the Senator speaks looms up more largely. Then we have to see that the appropriation is given only to the Indian who will raise a crop. If that is done, there will be something in it; but if you distribute it——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is not designed to be a distribution. We place so much money in the hands——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is a distribution, but the Senator does not comprehend me. You may find 1 in 50 of the tribe that would take charge of this appropriation and go right to work. The balance of them would not.

Mr. CLAPP. Then they would not get any of it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the very point, whether they will or not. If the distribution is to be made with that sort of a limitation, only to those who in good faith will apply it to the land, that limitation on it would relieve the fear I entertain of making mistakes in giving it to them.

Mr. CLAPP. That is the limitation. In the first place, this is not $50,000 to be distributed per capita among these Indians; but here is a particular Indian, and in that respect it makes no difference whether the tribal relation has ceased or not. He shows a little evidence of thrift. He wants some seed, or he wants a cow, or a horse, or a plow. This money is an open fund out of which the department, through its agent there, can buy this cow, or buy this plow, or buy this seed for him. No Indian gets a dollar of it unless the agent at least believes the Indian is actuated by a sense of thrift. It is elastic to that extent. It does seem to me, in the light of the experience we have had heretofore, that we have every warrant for enlarging the sphere of this particular form of activity and relationship to the Indian.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota what guaranty we have that the Indian will get what he wants? Does he determine what he will buy, or is that determined by the agent?

Mr. CLAPP. That, of course, must rest with the agent. Somewhere in all this work in our relation to the Indian we have the personal equation of the agent, who, of course, reflects in a measure the spirit of the department under which he serves. He would be false to his duty if he bought cattle or horses for an Indian who had no use for them or if he bought seed for an Indian who had no land. There is one point where he takes his chances on whether or not, in his estimate of that Indian's make-up, the Indian will in good faith earnestly go ahead and make the best use of the benefit that is bestowed upon him. There the agent necessarily, every time he takes a new man, projects himself into the zone of experiment; and, of course, there is that much experiment involved in it.

Mr. WHITE. Another question. Who determines the price that shall be paid for these articles?

Mr. CLAPP. The agent.

Mr. WHITE. From whom does the agent make the purchase?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Wherever he pleases.

Mr. CLAPP. Why, he makes it wherever it seems best to make it. We can not regulate that.

Here is an Indian, in the first place, who has a little land. He wants to buy a team of horses. The first question the agent would have to consider would be, Is it likely that the man will make good use of those horses? Then the next question would be where to get the horses and what price it would be wise and just and fair to the Indian to pay for the horses. That discretion is all vested in the agent necessarily. We can not prescribe it in the law, of course.

Mr. WHITE. Then the agent is necessarily the guardian of the Indian?

Mr. CLAPP. The agent to that extent becomes the guardian of the Indian, of course.

Mr. WHITE. Is any power of control over the agent exercised by anyone?

Mr. CLAPP. Of course he is subject to the control of the Indian Office, which in turn is subject to the control of the Secretary of the Interior; but you can not divest the matter of that feature. It would not do simply to distribute $50,000 equally among the Indians of this tribe. Some of them are not thrifty. Some of them would not work. Some of them would make very improper use of the money and would lose it.

Mr. WHITE. I am looking to the protection of the Indian rather than the protection of the Government.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. My questions are along that line.

Mr. CLAPP. The protection the Indian has—and it is the only protection we can give here—is in the character, the integrity, the fidelity of the agent.

Mr. WHITE. What has experience shown along that line in dealing with these matters?

Mr. CLAPP. As I said a while ago, in two cases here, one of $15,000, I think every dollar was repaid the first year. In the other case, the Tongue River case, there was not a single delinquent the first year.

Mr. WHITE. That is rather telling us what the Indian does. I want to know——

Mr. CLAPP. That result was reached because the agent was right there, and when the Indian harvests the agent is there to remind him of his debt. These Indians primarily knew nothing of the obligation of a debt. The agent has to be there, and of course a great deal depends upon the agent.

Mr WHITE. Has experience shown that the Indian is improving at all, that he is becoming so advanced that ultimately he will not need the help of this guardian?

Mr. CLAPP. Why, certainly. One of these cases showed that the second year, I think, two-thirds of the fund was put out again among other Indians, it having served its purpose the first year with the Indians to whom it was distributed or for whom it was used.

One thing is certain, however, this is the practical way to deal with the Indian. Here is the Indian. He knows little of toil. He knows nothing of the obligations of debt. A dollar is nothing to him, and he has no dollar with which to buy his seed or his plow. The agent buys the seed and the plow for him out of this fund. The agent is there to see that he makes as good use as he can be induced to make of the plow or the seed. Then the agent is there in the fall to remind the Indian that this note is due to the Government, and should be paid back.

Mr. WHITE. One other question. If the note is not paid, as I understand, the land is subject to sale for its payment?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no; it has nothing at all to do with the land. There is no lien on the land.

Mr. WHITE. How is the Government secured in the payment of the money that it advances?

Mr. CLAPP. The Government is secured in this way: If the Indian succeeds and gets a crop, the agent, being there cooperating with the Indian in a suggestive way, induces the Indian to recognize this obligation and pay the note.

Of course this whole plan is subject to the contingencies of some loss. Some of these Indians will not make good. In that case there is a loss to the Government.

Mr. WHITE. Then whether or not the Government will be repaid depends entirely on whether the Indian makes the money?

Mr. CLAPP. Exactly. It is the best trial in the world.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. PAGE. I think the suggestions made by the Senator from Alabama are exceedingly wise. I want to say to him that in making up this appropriation bill it has been easy for one who has been thoughtful in the direction in which he seems to be thoughtful to see in the legislation a disposition to place the assets of the Indian where they will become the easy prey of the bad white men who surround the Indian.

One bill now before the Committee on Indian Affairs seeks, as it seems to me, although I may be wrong about it, to consolidate the different funds of the different Indians and place those funds in local banks where the Indians reside, or near where they reside, and then give to the local Indian agents the power to say how much and when, and under what conditions, that money may be drawn out by the Indian.

It is pretty easy to see that the Indian agent is surrounded by men who are seeking to get hold of the Indian's money; and if they can become sufficiently potential with the agent, there is great danger that he would authorize the Indian to draw his funds from the local bank where they were deposited, and spend or use them as he sees fit. That he would oftentimes be quickly separated from his money can hardly be doubted.

To that class of legislation I have been decidedly opposed. I think it is wrong, and I hope it may never be permitted. I think, however, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has said, that the use of a part of the Indian's money or perhaps the use of the Government's money to aid the Indian in the purchase of the materials with which to carry on his farming is probably the best way of solving this problem for the present. I believe, too, as he has said, that there is no one now who can as well oversee this matter as the Indian agent. I would suggest to the Senator from Alabama, however, that the temptation of the Indian agent is not anywhere near so great where he is paying out this money for a horse or a cow or a wagon as it would be were he to authorize the Indian to take the money from the bank where it was deposited to his credit and spend it as he pleased.

I make these remarks because I see the bent of the Senator's mind; and I hope that in the future, as these matters come up from time to time, he would give some consideration to what seems to me to be the purpose of a certain element, to get the money of the Indian into the hands of the local bank, where the Indian agent may control it, only to be drawn out and squandered in a very brief period.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. WHITE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield, and to whom?

Mr. PAGE. I yield first to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator whether this money comes out of the Indian fund or out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. CLAPP. No, no; I will explain why it does not in a moment.

Mr. PAGE. I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One further remark in that connection. I do not see very well how we could refuse the same accommodation to a white man, if it comes out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. CLAPP. I will explain that matter in a moment—or, at least, I will try to do so.

Mr. PAGE. If I have the floor, I yield now to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to continue my answer to the Senator from Mississippi when the Senator from Vermont is through.

Mr. WHITE. I was induced to ask these questions solely with a view of protecting the Indian. I felt very sure that the Government itself would be protected; or, if it lost some money in developing the Indian, it could well afford to lose it. But what I wanted to accomplish was protection to the Indian, and I was led to make these inquiries from what occurred in other sections, as I gather it from history.

The Indians in my country were allowed to enter valuable tracts of land, but the Indian never received the benefit of those lands. The white man usually selected the lands for him, and then immediately became the purchaser from the Indian. In that way, as I gather from history, as stated, rather than from experience, the Indian has not always been protected; and yet we have had Indian agents where these things occurred. I wanted to ascertain if the committee had really given this part of the subject thorough consideration.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, the committee did. The committee recognizes that we have to depend on some one.

Mr. PAGE rose.

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. In regard to what the Senator from Mississippi has said, that he can not quite see why there are any good reasons for extending this aid to the Indian when you do not extend it to the white man, I think he forgets that quite too often the Indian has no one to speak for him here in our National Congress. We find even in this bill more or less legislation which takes rights from the Indian when, in my judgment, we should safeguard those rights. We should submit proposed legislation to the Indian and allow him to say whether he wants this or that thing done. But we do not do it. It is wrong. I think we ought to regard ourselves—and I am sure the Senator from Mississippi does—as the guardian of the Indian. We owe him a duty, and we can not discharge that duty unless we stand here and legislate for him in such a way as to protect him in the best possible manner.

I wish to urge upon the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Alabama that they study this bill as we proceed with it and see if we have not in many cases legislated in such a way that the Indian is not fully protected. That constitutes mainly such objection as I have to the bill. The bill as a whole is good. It has been very carefully wrought out by the Committee on Indian Affairs. There were not as many members of the committee present during its consideration as I think ought to have been on so important a bill, but I think that those who were there tried to give their best thought to the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wish to address an answer to the Senator from Mississippi, but I call attention first to one suggestion of the Senator from Vermont. In this bill we have inserted a provision, certainly as to Minnesota, that no appropriation from an Indian fund in excess of $5,000 shall become effective until submitted to a council of the Indians. This, of course, is a matter of progress. It was not done formerly.

I will state the reason why we do not use the Indian's money under this proposed plan. We had a provision in the bill, which went out, I think, on a point of order, that where a tribe had a fund or an Indian had money to his credit—it would almost universally be a tribal fund—the department might estimate the amount that would probably come to each Indian, and within that estimate the department could advance to the Indian money to be used for these purposes.

This provision contemplates loaning money to an Indian who has no money; or if he has money, it is not his money that is loaned. We did not feel that we would be justified in taking money from an Indian fund and loaning it to an individual Indian, because it must be confessed that there is a possibility here of the loss of the loan, and we as a Government should take that risk upon ourselves. If we are going to loan this money to Indians, we should loan our money and not loan some other Indian's money to an Indian other than the one to whom it belongs.

Of course the last inquiry of the Senator is a most pertinent one, and yet there is a vast difference, it seems to me, between lending this helping hand to Indians and to white people. I am rather in sympathy with the general, broad view of the Senator from Mississippi against the idea of the Government being paternal. I am pretty nearly ready to subscribe to Mr. Tilden's great maxim, that that which the individual can do he should do, and that which the State can do it should do. But these Indians occupy a peculiar relation to us. Up to a short time ago but very few of them knew anything at all of civilization. We used to make treaties with them, where we would solemnly agree, in the old poetic language of the treaty, so long as grass grew and wind blew, that we never would invade that reservation for settlement by the white man; but, of course, the onrushing tide of the American people to the West resulted in the ignoring of those treaties. Time and again reservations were diminished; time and again the Indians were removed off to distant reservations, until there came a time when it seemed as though the wise thing to do was to divide the reservations and make an allotment to each Indian of 60 or 160 acres, or different quantities, according to the character of the land and the climate where the allotments were made.

As a result, that began to individualize the Indians. Now you have an Indian no longer in the possession of the old hunting ground, where he could hunt and trap and fish and take care of himself and family. You have thrown him suddenly into the environment of the individual or citizen without any training, without any assistance, and that we pleaded as a justification for holding out, through the Government, a helping hand to the Indian, when we would not, of course, recognize that principle generally in government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I, of course, recognize the fact that we have assumed toward the Indian the relationship of guardian and ward, and that has been going on since the beginning of the history of the United States. In fact, it started before that in some of the older States. But I am a little afraid that this is a precedent which may some day return to plague us. One never knows how small a thing may be pointed back to at some time in the future.

This money comes out of the United States Treasury. It is the money collected by taxing the people of the United States. Whether the Indian be a ward or not, a guardian in managing a ward's affairs pays out of the ward's fund; he does not pay out of somebody else's funds. If at some time in a time of distress white men should come up to the Congress of the United States and say, "We do not ask you to give us money, but we ask you to give us a mule, we ask you to give us a horse, we ask you to give us a plow, we ask you to give us a harrow, we ask you to give us what is necessary to cultivate land"——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What about the "40 acres and a mule" that we use to hear down in Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We reply to them, "We can not do that; we can not take the money of the people collected by taxation and give it to you for the purpose of enabling you to make a success with your farm. If we begin that once we will have to give saws and hammers and adzes and planes to the carpenter; we will have to give anvils and other things to the blacksmith; we will have to carry it all through our society." You go on and tell such a man how that is wrong, that it violates every principle. You tell him that there was a time lately after the war when that sort of cry about 40 acres and a mule, as has been suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, was in the air. You go back still further in the history of the world and tell him how the Roman people were absolutely pauperized and ceased to be the great people of Rome and became a mere howling populace by the free distribution of corn on the part of the government, and how it is the duty of the citizen to support the Government and not the duty of the Government to support the citizen. After you are all through with it, after you have made your argument in the best way that you can, impregnable as it is, based upon sound governmental as well as sound ethical principles and sound social principles, he turns around to you and says, "Yes, but I find that at a certain time you did do this identical thing for the Indian; you took the money out of the Treasury; and the Indian did not put any of it there even, and I have put some in." Now, what is the answer to be made to him?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is absolutely none.

Mr. CLAPP. I think there is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. Let me appeal to the Senator from Mississippi and call the Senator's attention to the fact that these poor, dependent Indian people are regarded as the wards of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just said that.

Mr. OWEN. That puts them in a different class from the others.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I explained also. When I am a man's guardian I take care of him out of the estate to which the ward has a right and a title.

Mr. OWEN. Suppose that the ward had no estate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The American people have robbed the Indians from the beginning of time, and they have committed torts against them that constitute a page of shame.

Mr. OWEN. Does not that justify some retributive justice?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would justify going to work and investigating and finding out and making an indemnity, not in the shape of a loan to the Indians, but an indemnity to the Indians themselves. For example, there are Indians in my own State who have been treated with a degree of injustice that cries to heaven. I have been crying to heaven for them upon this floor, and there is no justice thus far. But that does not come down to this point. Here is an individual Indian. It is not the Indians tribally; it is not our Government making restitution to the Indians generally, as I doubt not it might well do; but it is just saying to an individual Indian, "I will advance you this much."

Mr. LANE. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator that he should take into consideration the fact that the Government has expended a large sum of money, which has been made a charge upon Indian lands in some cases, and then has given the Indian a limited period in which to make use of that land and not a cent or a tool to do it with.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand. I heard the Senator a moment ago. That is absolutely an iniquity; there is no doubt about that. But to say to a man, "Here is so much land that you may have; I will give you two years to make the first payment in," when you know at the very time that the man is utterly powerless to exploit the land or to use it in any way, is holding out apples to his eyes and giving him ashes upon his tongue.

But all that is beside this question. I am not arguing this from the Indian standpoint; I am arguing it from the Government standpoint. It is a poisoned chalice that I am afraid will be returned to our own lips at some other time by somebody else. We are traveling along rapidly toward State socialism. Every indication of the time is in that direction. That is the universal trend.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, I appreciate the drift of the Senator's argument; every student of the times realizes the trend; but here, it seems to me, there is a plain line of demarcation. The ordinary citizen is not the ward of the Government; the Government is the ward of the citizen; but under the relation we sustain to the Indian the condition is reversed, and the Indian is the ward under any theory of Government that we might attempt to evolve.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I appreciate that.

Mr. CLAPP. That being true, there being that plain line of demarcation it seems to me, whenever the time comes to meet this incoming wave, anyone can plant himself upon that line of demarcation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In answer to that I will say I do not think the reply meets the objection. If I were a guardian of a lot of children I would not consider that it justified me in taking my own children's money to help them. I might take my own money as a mere matter of generosity. This money in the United States Treasury is not the money of the Indians; it is the money of the children of the Republic.

I want to do the very thing that the Senator wants to do, and I think maybe it can be done in some other way. I think, for example, if you were to make these Indians of the Colorado River and Yuma Reservations an appropriation of so many dollars to the tribe, to be used in this way, and put it upon the ground of a restitution from this Government to the Indians, not to a particular Indian, and then if you were to allow the individual Indians to draw this money out of what had then become a tribal fund, you avoid the precedent; you fix it so that a precedent can not be pleaded. You know very well we have owed those Indians more than that; we have taken more than that away from them.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHITE. Is not that a mere means of accomplishing the same end?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely, and avoiding the precedent.

Mr. WHITE. Have we not already the precedent? These Indians are esteemed and held as the wards of the Nation. They have always been held that way, and, like a great many other wards, they have been robbed.

Mr. WILLIAMS Yes; they have been.

Mr. WHITE. Now, then, if they are the wards of the Nation, should they not be treated as we treat the wards of the State and the Nation, and do we not treat the wards of the State and the Nation in just this way when we appropriate from the public treasuries money to educate the children of the State and Nation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no. In that case the man who pays the money receives the benefit. I shall not vote against the amendment. Mr. President, finally, but I merely wanted to warn Congress against precedents of this description.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it was my intention to make a somewhat short reply to the arguments which have been made. I felt that I ought to say something. But so much was said, and so well said, by other Senators on the subject, especially by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], that I see no occasion for me to make any further explanation. However, I do want to say that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and other Senators gave especial attention for months to this question of revolving appropriations.

Briefly, in reply to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE], who asked if the committee considered this item, I wish to say that not only had that policy been considered by the committee diligently for months but the great policy as to how to deal with the question had been considered for years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 9, to insert:

That so much of the Indian appropriation act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 85), as makes reimbursable out of the tribal funds of the Indians of the San Carlos and Fort Apache Indian Reservations an appropriation for the construction of two bridges on the San Carlos Indian Reservation in Arizona be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 16, to insert:

For investigation recommended by the Board of Engineer Officers of the United States Army, as set forth in paragraph 217 of their report to the Secretary of War on February 14, 1914, House Document No. 791, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and report as to the supply of the legally available water, acreage available for irrigation and titles thereto, the maximum and minimum estimated cost of the San Carlos irrigation project, including dam and necessary canals, ditches, and laterals, with recommendations and reasons therefor and the probable cost of adjudicating the water rights along the Gila River necessary thereto, and to take the steps necessary to prevent the vesting of any water rights in addition to those, if any, now existing until further action by Congress, $50,000.

Mr. LANE. I ask the chairman of the committee if there is any time fixed for this report to be made and how long he thinks it will take? It seems that work has been going on upon this project now for two years, and in the meantime the settlers and the Indians have become discouraged and are being forced to the wall. Should there not be fixed a definite date for the report to be brought in by this board?

Mr. ASHURST. I entirely agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon. I hope he will move an amendment to the amendment to that effect.

Mr. LANE. I will ask that the amendment may go over until I can consult with the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I, too, ask that the amendment may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over for the time being.

The next amendment was, under the head of "California," in section 3, page 26, line 9, after the word "employees," to strike out "$42,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 12, after the word "Indians," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of lands for the homeless Indians in California, including improvements thereon, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, $20,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said funds to be expended under such regulations and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 17, before the words "Indian pupils," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty"; in line 18, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$104,000" and insert "$109,400"; in line 19, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000"; and in line 20, after the words "in all," to strike out "$114,000" and insert "$129,400," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 650 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Cal., including pay of superintendent, $109,400; for general repairs and improvements, $20,000; in all, $129,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 1, after the word "hundred," to insert "and twenty-five," and in line 2, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$16,400; for repairs and improvements, $3,600; in all, $20,000" and insert "and for repairs and improvements, $25,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 125 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, Cal., including pay of superintendent, and for repairs and improvements, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 9, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Mrs. May Stanley, widow of Will H. Stanley, late superintendent of the Soboda Indian School in California, who lost his life in the discharge of his duty. Also to pay for medical and other necessary expenses, including funeral and administration expenses incurred in connection with the death of said Will H. Stanley and the shooting of Selso Serrano, Indian policeman, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona if a bill for this same item has not passed the Senate, and whether it was a House bill or a Senate bill?

Mr. CLAPP. I can answer the question. It was a Senate bill, not a House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what became of it in the House?

Mr. CLAPP. It went the way of many another bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Idaho," in section 5, page 28, after line 4, to insert:

For new buildings and their proper equipment at the sanatorium at Fort Lapwai, Idaho, including the purchase of improvements on land to be deeded to the Government by the school board of district No. 57, State of Idaho, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 11, after the word "system," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

For maintenance and operation of the Fort Hall irrigation system, $40,000, reimbursable to the United States out of any funds of the Indians occupying the Fort Hall Reservation now or hereafter available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 13, after the word "available," to insert:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to raise a point of order upon the amendment, beginning with the word "Provided."

Mr. LANE. Before the Senator raises a point of order I should like to make a statement to him about the amendment. It would be very disastrous if this provision should go out of the bill. It would mean utter ruin to a lot of poor, helpless people who are wards and over whom the Government has absolute control and has exercised it, which Government, through Congress and this Senate, is a party to the transaction. The transaction is as wicked a one as was ever practiced on a helpless individual, wherein Congress has circumscribed the rights of these Indians, taken their money to put water upon the land, or, rather, made their land responsible for the expenditures, and then has given them two or three years in which to put that land under cultivation, and has failed, as guardian in charge of their funds should have done, to pay out one cent for the purchase of a plow, or a harrow, or a team, or a wagon, or a pound of seed. It has left them barehanded upon the land. It would take a white man from 5 to 20 years to make the improvements on that kind of land with all the money he could borrow and every agricultural implement he could get. I ask the Senator not to raise the point of order.

Mr. BORAH. There is nothing of that kind going to happen, Mr. President. Is the Senator referring to the amendment on page 28?

Mr. LANE. I am referring to the condition that it is intended to cover in Montana. I do not know whether it applies to the Fort Hall Reservation, but it applies to so many of them that I assume this is one of the number.

Mr. BORAH. This is the provision:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States has no control over the water rights of the State of Idaho. Those water rights must be controlled by the State laws and are controlled by the State laws. If the Indians are entitled to this water upon these lands, they must comply with the State laws in order to get the water. This is an attempt to do, in the first place, what we ought not to do even if we had the power to do it; and, in the second place, it is attempting to do what we have not the power to do—that is, to control the manner of securing water rights and reserving water rights upon lands within the State. I do not know of the condition of affairs with reference to Fort Hall to which the Senator refers. I do not know of any Indian being wronged; but if so, this is not the way to protect him, for it will not protect him if his right is contested.

Mr. LANE. I think that it applies to Fort Hall as well as to other reservations. There is the difference between the case as it applies to the white man and to the Indian; they are not upon equal terms. The white citizen, the farmer, is a free agent, while the Indian is a ward. The white settler can procure means; he can borrow money or furnish his own capital, go to work upon his land and improve it within a certain fixed time, as set forth by the laws of the State of Idaho or of Montana or of any other State; but the Indian, I repeat, is a ward; he has no independent means, but only such money as is doled out to him by the Federal Government. The Indians have in some cases millions of dollars' worth of property and hundreds of thousands of dollars in the Treasury, but they are not allowed to draw one cent of it. The Government furnishes them no means whatever with which to improve his land and then holds them to a fixed time in which to make good their title to the water right, and they are inevitably bound to lose it. That is what this provision was intended to remedy.

Mr. BORAH. This provision would not protect the Indian.

Mr. LANE. But it is an attempt to do so.

Mr. BORAH. It is an attempt to mislead the Indian as to his rights and to persuade him to believe that he can rest upon his oars and still reserve his rights.

Mr. LANE. No.

Mr. BORAH. The Indian can not rest upon his oars nor Congress can not provide that he shall reserve this water, because the State of Idaho disposes of the water within its boundaries.

Mr. LANE. I wish, in answer to that, to say that it is not intended that the Indian should rest upon his oars; but this bill contains in addition to that a provision by which the Indian Bureau is allowed to advance the Indian money with which to put in his crop and to purchase the necessary tools and agricultural implements, which he repays from a revolving fund. In that way it is trying to help him in this condition where, under the law passed by Congress, he would be inevitably bound to lose his land unless we do something for his relief, and this is an attempt to do that.

Mr. BORAH. It is a perfectly futile attempt.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I do not believe I quite understand his position in reference to this water. Here is an appropriation made out of the Indian's money for the purpose of maintaining and operating an irrigation system. This appropriation could not, or ought not, to be made out of the Indian's money, unless it were for the benefit of the Indian. Now, it is supposable that there are some benefits which are accruing to the Indian from the use of his money which was expended on this project. The object of this amendment, as I understand it, is to make it possible for those Indians to take advantage of the water which their money had conserved and stored and provided for distribution. Unless we do have some provision in the bill whereby some time can be granted, of course the Indian would have no right and would derive no benefit from the expenditure of his own money.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, regarding the act of March 3, 1907, as was pointed out, I believe, by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], however honest the intention of the legislators, however much they might have tried to protect the Indians, it has become obvious at least to the Bureau of Indian Affairs and to the Committee on Indian Affairs that a flagrant and a grave injustice has been perpetrated upon certain Indians in the Northwest—I do not recall that it was upon these Indians—by the passage of that act; in other words, the application of that law works about as follows: The money belonging to the Indians derived from the sale of their lands was set apart for the purpose of constructing irrigation and reclamation projects. The Indian lands were liable to pay for the same, but the lands of the white settlers were not so liable. If the Indian lapsed, if he made failure or default in the payment, he lost his rights to the land and to the water, but the white settlers stood no chance to lose; in other words, it is a case of where the Indian stood to lose and the white settler did not. This amendment, I realize, is probably going to provoke much discussion, but the committee was unanimously of the opinion that it is sound, wise, just, and salutary legislation.

I enter with considerable trepidation into any argument with the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], because he is one of the soundest lawyers not only in the Senate but in the Nation. It is, however, the opinion of the committee, if I have permission to speak for them, that upon Indian reservations the timber, the water wholly thereon, excluding navigable streams of course, unless there has been some specific reservation made in the treaty or in the Executive proclamation or in the legislation reserving the waters to the Government, belong to the Indians who occupy and own the reservation. The committee were unanimously of the opinion that this legislation was wise and salutary in this, that where an Indian reservation was opened and the sale of land to the general public was conducted, the moneys—and I ask the especial attention of the Senator from Idaho to this point—derived from the sale of Indian lands were applied to the construction of an irrigation project, which incidentally or, for its main purpose, permitted settlers to locate thereon. It was nothing but common justice and well within legal right and power of the Government to provide by law that the waters upon what had previously been that reservation should belong to the Indian, and that by reason of a failure, default, or a neglect on his part, he should lose none of his rights, for the obvious reason that an Indian is incompetent to make a proper and legal appropriation of water——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Just one moment, until I finish this thought, which is that while the various States may do as they see fit with respect to the waters under their control—and all the waters are under their control except navigable streams and waters wholly within an Indian reservation—the waters wholly upon an Indian reservation are under the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND and Mr. MYERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield, and to whom?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] first rose, and I yield to him, and then, of course, I shall yield to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This water, as I understand, is running water.

Mr. ASHURST. It is running water at times; yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is in a stream which runs off the reservation to some other part of the State, does it not?

Mr. ASHURST. As to this particular reservation, I confess I am unable to say, but there are instances where it does and some where it does not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 86 the same sort of an amendment is made as to the appropriation in my own State as to the Uintah Reservation. I am familiar with the situation there, and I know the water there is running water, and that it runs off the reservation somewhere else. Does not the Senator from Arizona recognize the fact——

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment—that such waters are absolutely under the control of the State, that appropriation of the water must be made under the laws of the State for a beneficial use, and that they must be put to a beneficial use? That is the law of the Western States.

Mr. ASHURST. In answer to that question, I will say, given an Indian reservation, the moment it is created an Indian reservation, if it is properly and legally done, it is withdrawn from the domain of public lands.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It does not withdraw the running waters; that is an impossibility.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a difference of legal opinion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How can you withdraw a thing that by its very nature runs off the reservation?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course the waters that have left the reservation and have entered into or upon the public land in our Western States belong to and are under the exclusive control of the State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator this question, then: Suppose we pass this legislation, reserving the waters upon this reservation to the Indians, and that the white settlers outside of the reservation appropriate the water under the law of the State, does the Senator think that this legislation would give the Indians a right to that water as against the white settlers, the citizens of the State, who had appropriated the same water outside of the reservation?

Mr. ASHURST. The appropriation by the white settlers presupposes that the waters have not theretofore been by lawful authority appropriated for another purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But, I say, suppose that we pass this legislation, two years from now or five years from now—because under this provision the reservation of the water for the Indians is apparently for all time to come—the Indians still have not put the water to a beneficial use, and some citizen in Idaho outside of the reservation appropriates the water. The Senator is a lawyer and is familiar with the laws relating to the waters in the various arid-land States. What would the Senator say as to the kind of title the citizen would have who had appropriated water outside of the reservation under the laws of the State?

Mr. ASHURST. The citizen who made the appropriation would have the right to have the water which he thus appropriated, so long as he applied it to a useful and beneficial purpose, come down to him undiminished in quantity and unpolluted in quality.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He would have a better right under the laws of the State of Idaho than the Indians would have under this law of the United States, would he not?

Mr. ASHURST. How is that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The citizen appropriating the water in Idaho under the laws of Idaho would have a better right to it than the Indian, whose rights were attempted to be reserved by this law of the United States, would he not?

Mr. ASHURST. He would have a better right to it if he went out upon the public domain and located, appropriated, and turned to a beneficial use water that was theretofore previously unappropriated. The point in this legislation is this: It was the intention of the committee—and I might say this legislation was drafted and prepared by the Indian Bureau—to preserve and protect, for the benefit of the particular Indians, all the waters which are upon or rise in that particular reservation and have not been previously appropriated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to call his attention to——

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the Senator from Arizona in stating the proposition demonstrates the uselessness and the ineffectiveness of this provision, for this reason: Unless this water is subject to appropriation by the citizens of the State, unless some one could go in and establish a priority of use to this water, then this provision is not necessary. If it is on an Indian reservation and belongs to the land as an appurtenant to the land, and so forth, then this act is not needed. This provision contemplates that a citizen may go there and appropriate that water. If a citizen does go and appropriate the water under the State law, then this provision will be wholly ineffective to protect the Indians, if the water is subject to appropriation at all; in other words, the citizen may take it, and this provision can not prevent his doing so.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator state that a citizen or other person may go upon an Indian reservation now and make a lawful appropriation of water?

Mr. BORAH. If the water has not been appropriated, he may establish his priority to the use of the water, and simply because it is running across an Indian reservation does not prevent his doing so.

Mr. ASHURST. I lay it down that a person may not go upon an Indian reservation and appropriate water without the consent of the Interior Department.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Assuming that my premise is correct, that an individual may not appropriate water upon an Indian reservation, for the obvious reason that it has previously been appropriated for another purpose, it was the intention of the committee, however impotent our work may appear, to preserve that status, so that after the reservation was opened and the lands were sold and the general public acquired them, under no guise or disguise could anything thereafter happen whereby a lapse on the part of the Indian—who obviously can not take care of himself in many instances—could cause him to lose the water that he possessed while he was living upon the reservation in tribal relations with the other Indians.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to say that it went further than that, for the reason that the law under which the reclamation scheme was established gave the Indians a certain and definitely limited time in which to make use of the water, that time in some cases not being over two years. The Senator knows as well as I do, for we both come from sections of the country where land is irrigated, that that is not sufficient time for an Indian, a white man, or anyone else, and it was to cure that defect in the previous law which circumscribed the time in which he could apply it that this provision has been adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment, and then I will yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. President, I am not, in one sense, very anxious about this provision, for the reason that I regard it as wholly ineffective in so far as it relates to the waters of the State of Idaho, but I think it a bad precedent to undertake legislation of this character. I think it is unwise to attempt to do that which we have no power to do, because it is more calculated to mislead the Indian than it is to benefit him. The waters which flow in the State of Idaho, which rise in and pass over land in the State of Idaho, are subject to distribution by the laws of that State, and the laws of that State alone. The United States itself, if it wants to acquire water for the purpose of a Government reclamation project, must go upon the stream and comply with the statutes of the State of Idaho. The Government itself can not get a foot of water in that State except by complying with the laws of that State. It has been decided too often to make it necessary to recall it here, even if I had the time to do so, that the waters belong to the State and are subject to the laws of the State, to be disposed of only by the laws of the State.

The only interest in the world that the National Government has in water is in navigable streams, to keep the streams open for navigable and commercial purposes, and nothing else. For all other purposes it is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the State. If these Indians are to be protected, they can not be protected by an act of Congress in regard to this matter. We are doing a vain and delusive thing. They must get and hold their water rights under State laws, and I object to this effort to establish a precedent to the effect that Congress may dispose of or distribute the waters within the State.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator from Idaho believe that the Legislature of the State of Idaho has plenary power over the water on Indian reservations?

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt about it, Mr. President; and I can bring the authorities here to the Senator that the question of an Indian reservation cuts no figure in the proposition at all, unless it be an instance where there is a spring upon a piece of land, the water of which does not leave the land, but belongs to and is appurtenant to the land, as it were. But the flowing public streams are subject to State laws as to appropriation of the waters. Water flowing in a stream or water which belongs to a public stream of the State is subject to the control of the State, notwithstanding the fact that it may flow over or rise upon an Indian reservation.

Mr. ASHURST. Assuming that all the waters falling on an Indian reservation are conserved upon and stored upon an Indian reservation, does the Senator think that then Congress would have the power to deal with that water?

Mr. BORAH. Congress might be able to deal with that, because that would come under the rule which I have just stated, where waters are impounded and where they never leave the reservation or can not leave the reservation, where they are a part of the land and appurtenant to it, as it were, but this is a different proposition.

Mr. ASHURST. This legislation contemplates just the case I have last mentioned.

Mr. BORAH. Here is a reservoir which is fed by a public stream. You can not impound the waters of that public stream and hold them there. The white settlers of the State are entitled to have that water when no one else is using it. That is the law of the State of Idaho. It is provided in the State constitution, and again provided by the State statutes, that water can not be appropriated except it be applied to a beneficial use; and when it ceases to be applied to a beneficial use, it reverts again to the public and is subject again to appropriation. It is one of the wisest laws that was ever enacted, and it grew out of the necessity which the pioneer found when he entered the great arid regions of the West.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. I am not willing, without a word of protest at least, that it shall be assumed here that Congress can dispose of the waters of the State. It is a vital question to us in the West, and, while this is not a large matter—that is, not a matter of tremendous scope—yet how easy it would be in some instances for the Congress of the United States to tie up the streams of some of the Western States if they did get control over this water.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question just to aid me in determining how I shall vote in regard to this whole paragraph. It is true, I think, as has been said by the chairman of the committee, that the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs came before us and stated that we had been appropriating money for several years for these irrigation projects, and that the Indians were protected by a proviso that they should have a given time within which to make beneficial use of the water under the irrigation projects. The question arose as to whether we should continue these appropriations. You will observe that we increased the appropriation in this instance from $20,000 to $40,000. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho whether he thinks we ought to continue these appropriations if it is a fact that the Indian is to receive no benefit from them, simply because under a State statute, not having made beneficial use and not being able to make beneficial use of the water, his right lapses? Should we pass these appropriations unless we can protect the Indians?

This appropriation is qualified by the proviso to which the Senator has referred, and there are several similar appropriations for irrigation projects in this bill accompanied with a proviso that the Indian shall not lose his right after a certain time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont understands that the Indians already have appropriated a vast amount of water rights and are using them. This irrigation system must be kept up for those who have water rights and are availing themselves of them and who will avail themselves of their rights under the laws of the States. This appropriation is just as necessary, in my judgment, without the proviso as it is with it, because this is not a proposition where there are no rights yet acquired and where no water has been appropriated by the Indians, but it is an instance in which a vast amount of water has already been appropriated and where the Indians are irrigating their lands and farming. The irrigation system must be kept up for that purpose.

Mr. PAGE. But, as I understand, Mr. President, the Indian's money has been taken for these irrigation projects and if now by force of law he is soon to lose all the benefits because he has not made beneficial use, it seems to me a great hardship will be worked on him. As has been well said by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], the Indian has not been able to make that beneficial use; he has not been able to farm the different sections which he owns, although he might use this water if he had the means to buy implements and cattle and horses. That being the case, unless I see some further light in regard to this matter and unless I am satisfied that the Indian's rights there are not going to lapse I must refuse to vote for this appropriation entirely.

Mr. BORAH. Any rights the Indian has can not lapse. What you are trying to do is to preserve a right which he does not possess.

Mr. PAGE. It certainly can not do any harm to have this proviso, which has been suggested by the department, incorporated in the bill. Like provisos have been attached to probably half a dozen similar appropriations in this bill.

Mr. BRADY and Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has the floor.

Mr. LANE. I should like to say for the information of the Senator——

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I am very familiar with the Fort Hall Indian Reservation. I built most of the canals on that reservation about 15 years ago, and have kept in close touch with the situation relative to the water on the reservation during all those 15 years. While I heartily agree with my colleague [Mr. BORAH] relative to the proviso, I am fully convinced that no law we could pass would in any way affect the use of the water rights, yet I will say something that I know the chairman of the committee and the other members of the committee will be glad to hear, and that is that there is no danger of the Indians losing their water rights on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation if they continue the same line of work that they have been doing.

Three hundred feet of this water is taken from the Snake River by canals leading to the reservation. That is sufficient to irrigate about 20,000 acres of land. Some of the Indians have been using that water for 12 or 14 years, and others for only 8 or 9 years; but they have used all of that 300 feet of water. It has been put to a beneficial use, and has been awarded to the Indians by the courts, so that there is no question about their right to that water.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator to say that the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs distinctly stated before our committee that the Indians were losing their rights and that it was to protect the Indians' rights that this proviso was inserted? I believe I should say that I think the proviso is subject to a point of order, but when you speak of the rights of the Indians not lapsing——

Mr. BRADY. I have not finished, Mr. President.

Mr. PAGE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BRADY. I was simply speaking of the water that has been proved up on from the Snake River. There was not sufficient water derived from the Snake River to irrigate the remainder of the 40,000 or 45,000 acres of land in the reservation which the Indians still retain and hold. The Government created what is known as the Blackfoot Reservoir, about 24 miles above the Indian reservation, at the head of the Blackfoot River, in a splendid watershed, and they there impounded sufficient water to irrigate the remainder of the 45,000 acres.

That land was purchased by the Government, and there is a provision in this bill for some small amount of damages still unpaid. When the Government pays the damages provided for in this bill, then it will own that reservoir and all the water in it, and it will have the right to rent it out if it so wishes or to keep it in the reservoir if it is desired to do so. Although part of that water has been put to a benefical use, all of it has not been for the reason that a great number of canals have not been completed, and you will find that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended this increase to $40.000 for the purpose of building these canals. The main canals are built, but they want to build laterals leading to the farms, so that the Indians can put this water to a beneficial use. Therefore I think this particular reservation is in better shape than almost any of the reservations in the western country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator what portion of the water provided by this appropriation is going to the Indians and what proportion to the whites?

Mr. BRADY. About 45.000 acres will go to the Indians and about 10.000 acres have been sold to the whites. What the whites have does not come in under this head at all. That has been provided for and has been put to a beneficial use.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator mean to say that no part of this appropriation will be used for the benefit of the white settlers?

Mr. BRADY. My understanding is that it is all to be used on the Indian reservation. This is simply, as I understand, to carry out the recommendation of the commissioner to complete the canal and get it in shape so that it will deliver the water.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was not my understanding.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the Senator from Idaho will be able to give me an explanation of this matter before it comes up later. At present we are considering the committee amendments, and therefore I suppose an amendment to strike out the first four lines, beginning with line 10 on page 28, would not be in order at this time. Unless I am satisfied, however, that fair and reasonable protection is offered to the Indians, I shall move at the proper time to strike out the entire appropriation, because I believe the assistant commissioner is correct when he says that the lands of these Indians, or their rights to the irrigation project, are lapsing from time to time because they are unable to make beneficial use of them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator's remark reminds me of what is constantly happening here with reference to the western country. Senators come here from these States who live in close touch with the situation. They know all about it. They are supposed to know the interests of their States and their people, and yet they are constantly overridden in their judgment and in their views by some clerk in the department.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs can not possibly know as much about this matter as the people who come here and represent this part of the country. There is no one upon the floor who will undertake to support the proposition that you can, by act of Congress, take away the right of a State to control its affairs with reference to its water.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I should like, in order to throw a little light on this subject, to read what was brought out at the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs when this matter was under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator reads, let the Chair inform himself as to what is actually pending and in what parliamentary form. What action does the senior Senator from Idaho desire the Senate to take in connection with this proviso?

Mr. BORAH. When I began to discuss it I said that I should raise the point of order to the effect that it was general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator present that point at this time?

Mr. BORAH. Yes

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order will be sustained.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I asked the Senator not to do that until there was a thorough understanding of this matter, for the reason that this goes far and reaches into the heart of the bill. I should like to have Senators thoroughly understand the matter before the Senator from Idaho raises the point of order, for it is going to have a very disastrous effect, if not upon those Indians particularly, upon other Indians who are similarly situated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter has been disposed of. The Chair can not consent to have it debated any further.

Mr. LANE. Then, Mr. President, I should like to address the Chair upon the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When we reach an amendment which is subject to debate the Senator will be recognized. Debate is not in order on a point of order under our rules. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill. We will reach another amendment in a moment, and then the Senator can address himself to it.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from Oregon is not recognized, I should like to be recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels under an obligation to recognize the Senator from Oregon as soon as we reach an amendment that is debatable.

Mr. MYERS. I rise to a question of personal privilege, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is disposed to be very liberal in regard to debate. The Senator from Oregon will be recognized. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from Oregon wishes to discuss anything, I do not want to take him from the floor, but I thought he was not ready.

Mr. LANE. I was entirely ready. Of course, if it is out of order for me to say anything about the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it is not. The Senator can say anything he wants to say, but there must be some proposition pending before the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Then I wish to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I wish to ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please suspend until the Secretary can state the next amendment.

Mr. LANE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Senator can proceed in the usual way.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 29, after line 4, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho, the said sum to be expended in the purchase of seed, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924 are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Mr. LANE obtained the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a minute?

Mr. LANE. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask, before the Senate launches into a general discussion of the bill, if I may make a personal statement of about a dozen words?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LANE. I yield; but I was not about to precipitate myself into a general discussion of the bill. However, I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, in regard to the amendment which has just been ruled out by the Chair on a point of order made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I wish to say that I have the honor of being a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I wish at this time to enter my dissent to the announcement made by the chairman of the committee upon the floor of the Senate a short time ago as to the unanimity of opinion of the committee upon the legal phase of the amendment stated by the chairman.

I was not able to be present at the meeting of the committee when that amendment or any like amendment was adopted by the committee. If I had been present, I would have dissented at that time. I now take occasion to dissent from the legal doctrine announced by the chairman of the committee from the floor a short time ago as the unanimous opinion of the committee. I do not hold that opinion. I adhere to the opinion announced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I am not a lawyer, and so I would not know whether the provision drawn by the committee was a legal one or not. I am a physician, however, and if it were brought up to me to prescribe for it I could fix it very quickly so that it would not be so deleterious to the patient.

Here is an item under consideration which calls for the promotion of the support and civilization of the Indians. You will find in the bill many items of the kind which appropriate a great deal of money for the support and civilization of the Indians throughout the country. I wish to say for your information that not one-tenth of the money, probably not one one-hundredth portion of it, is expended for any such purpose at all. It is expended for the payment of the salaries of employees. So far as concerns supporting or civilizing the Indian, he is advancing backward rapidly under that process, and he receives no benefit from it.

There was another item in this irrigation plan, where, at Fort Hall, Idaho, there had been $800,000 spent upon an irrigation or reclamation scheme, the most, if not all, of which, I think, was reimbursable out of the Indians' funds; and yet, under a law which Congress passed without thinking about it, without intending to do any harm, without having looked into it, I feel quite sure he was circumscribed in his time of improvement of the land so that he lost his rights in the water, and, through that, any value to the land. It is a pitiful condition, and this body ought to change it.

If this law is not properly drawn in a manner to protect the interests of the whites and do justice by them, all that the Indians are asking and all that the committee wishes is to do justice, and it was all they were attempting to do. Under this scheme in Idaho I notice that the whites are using fully as much land, if not more land, than the Indians. They are not losing any rights under the law; and yet the Indian, whose land is mortgaged for the improvement, who made the entire improvement and put it in there for the benefit of all, is tied up with certain conditions under which he must lose his land through the fact that the law circumscribes him as to time, and the department, which is his guardian, does not give him the implements with which to work the land. He is tied, bound, and helpless, and it is inevitable that he should lose the land.

I do not think the Senator from Idaho wishes to do that. I assure him that I do not wish to do any injustice to the homesteader in Idaho, and I will go as far as he dare go to protect his rights; but at the same time I expect him to walk alongside of me and help to protect the Indian's rights and not see him literally robbed of his property.

I would not so much mind going out, if it was necessary, and helping hold up a bank or a train or obtaining money for the whites in some high-toned way; but I draw the line on taking it from the helpless and the poor and the sick and the unfortunate. I do not stand for that. If a man is able to fight his own battles and comes up and fights them in a fair way, I do not mind fighting with him; but when it comes to robbing children, the helpless, and the pitiful folks who have not enough to eat, the Government ought to be in a bigger business than that, and the United States Senate, too; and I protest against it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will calm himself. There have been no Indians robbed on the Fort Hall Reservation.

Mr. LANE. They are cinched to a finish.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Oregon will not be able to point the Senator from Idaho to a single instance in which an Indian on that reservation has been robbed or injured.

Mr. LANE. Then they are an exception.

Mr. BORAH. In that respect they are like the Senator from Oregon—they are an exception. I think I know precisely the situation, and I am not joining any scheme of robbery or injustice to the Indians. When the Senator from Oregon makes the broad assertion he makes it without any foundation whatever in fact.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I am not reflecting upon the Senator from Idaho. I was reflecting upon the action in the past in regard to handling these Indian funds. I wish to assure the Senator from Idaho that I was not reflecting on him or on any other Senator. I want to make that clear.

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator from Oregon or anyone else talks about robbery as to matters which I am urging, I want him to be specific.

Mr. LANE. I will be specific, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. Then, if the Senator has anything to be specific about, let him make it so now.

Mr. LANE. The commissioner says the money of the Indians in Idaho has been expended principally for the benefit of the whites.

Mr. BORAH. That is, in my judgment, a mistake.

Mr. LANE. That is the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. BORAH. I can not believe the commissioner intended such inferences as the Senator draws. We are perfectly familiar with the facts there. The Indians have been fully, generously, and well protected. I have never heard a complaint, and some of them are quite intelligent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is no new subject, although it has never been undertaken to be reached by legislation before.

When Mr. Leupp was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, when the question arose as to the Indians' rights in regard to the water upon the Uintah Indian Reservation in my own State, I remember well that the commissioner then undertook to take the position that the Government, as the guardian of the Indians, was not compelled to file upon the water in the State; that the water arose in the Indian reservation, and as it arose in the Indian reservation it belonged to that reservation and belonged to the Indians after the reservation was made. That position was disputed, and the commissioner was told that the best thing for him to do was to look up the law and see whether there was any way for the Indians in any State to secure a right to water unless it was under the laws of the State. After that examination the commissioner decided that the only way an Indian could secure a water right in any State was by an appropriation and beneficial use. They appropriated the waters for the Indians on the Uintah Indian Reservation, and they have spent now some $750,000 in the way of building laterals and watercourses through all of the different sections of land held by Indians on that reservation.

Before that irrigation system was completed the time had elapsed for the beneficial use of water under the laws of the State of Utah. What did the Indian Commissioner do? He came to me, as one of the Senators from that State, and I believe to my colleague, also, and asked us to ask the governor of our State if he would not use his influence with the legislature of our State to secure an extension of the time for five years, in order that the Indians might make beneficial use of that water, as the irrigation system was not completed. Our legislature did not hesitate a minute. Among the very first acts of the legislature during that session was the passage of a law extending for five years the time for the Indians upon the Uintah Indian Reservation to make beneficial use of that water. That time, Mr. President, is not out yet.

I have not any doubt but that there never will be a legislature in the State of Utah that will not take care of the Indians and protect their rights as much as any man in Congress. No Indian in the State of Utah has suffered; no Indian has been robbed; no Indian will be, because the people will see that they are protected in their interests. They will go more than halfway, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LANE. I should like to call the Senator's attention to this statement. I asked the assistant commissioner:

How much have you spent on this Fort Hall irrigation scheme?

He said:

We have spent $800,000. We spent about $770,000 up to June 30, 1913.

Senator LANE. When was it started?

Mr. MERITT. About five or six years ago.

Senator LANE. How long have the Indians to run now before they lose their water rights?

Mr. MERITT. We have a provision in this item to protect their water rights, if we can get it adopted by the committee.

Senator LANE. I notice by the statistics there that the whites have under cultivation about twice as much as the Indians. Is that land leased to them by the Indians?

Mr. MERITT. That is a project that we were discussing the other day where the whites got their land irrigated for something like $6 an acre under a law passed by Congress. The Senator from that State was somewhat successful in getting very favorable legislation for his constituents.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that Mr. Meritt does not know what he is talking about when he says that under this provision the Indians secure any rights whatever to any running stream in any State of the Union. The only way that can be secured is by appropriation and by a beneficial use. That has been held so often by the courts of the land and the Supreme Court that I did not think there was a Senator who would question it for a moment.

Now, Mr. President, what is this provision here for?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The provision is not now before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. We are discussing the amendment that is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; that amendment has gone out on a point of order, and it will stay out until the ruling of the Chair is reversed by the action of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are not losing any time at all, because there are four or five other amendments with exactly the same object and in identically the same words. I suppose the Chair will rule, and rule properly, that every one of them shall go out. For that reason I shall not say anything more at this time.

Mr. JONES and Mr. BRADY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] was taken from the floor rather abruptly, and if it pleases the Senator from Washington to yield to his friend from Idaho the Chair will recognize the junior Senator from Idaho.

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I wish to say a word relative to the treatment of the Indians on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation. I do not think anyone can complain of the treatment they have received, either at the hands of the Government or at the hands of the people of the State. The 45,000 acres of land they have would not be worth over a dollar and a quarter an acre without water, whereas to-day it is worth from $75 to $100 an acre with the water on it; so it is very easy to figure what profit the Indians will make by properly cultivating the land.

I do not wish to be understood as in any way antagonizing the rights of the Indians on this reservation. On the other hand, I want to help them in every way I can. While I realize, as any man conversant with the irrigation laws and usages must realize, that this amendment would not have any effect if we agreed to it, I do not propose to direct my attention to that amendment. I do want to say, however, that the committee is taking the right course to enable the Indians to apply this water to beneficial use. The very things that you have done in your committee, if they are carried out, will enable every Indian on the reservation to prove up with his water, having put it to beneficial use.

There are 20,000 acres of that water as to which there is no question at this time in my mind that it is attached to the land. The only question is in regard to the water in the reservoir. If you go on and complete your canal and place it in shape so that the Indians can use the water, and then adopt the section that you have here, allowing $50,000 to be paid to buy tools and teams and facilities with which to farm, you will find that they will go on and improve their farms.

There are many intelligent Indians on this reservation. There must be 25 or 30 young men and young women there who are graduates of Carlisle University. They have a school on that reservation with over 400 pupils, I believe, in attendance. They are becoming civilized and trying to improve themselves. The people in the community want to help them and help them improve themselves. I want to say that I am very heartily in favor of this appropriation to enable them to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon suggested a moment ago that the Indians have been treated very badly by Congress. I have an idea that this occurred by reason of legislation being considered without anybody being present, as this legislation is largely being considered. I feel satisfied that if more Members of the Senate were present they would know more about conditions in the West and they would know more about the rights of the States to the water in the different streams, and then, instead of taking their views from the department upon these legislative matters, they would be able to get along better and get better legislation.

We have only 15 or 20 Members present here now. I think the amendment ought to be considered by a quorum, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	James	Page	Sterling
Borah	Jones	Perkins	Sutherland
Brady	Kenyon	Shafroth	Swanson
Bryan	Lane	Sheppard	Thompson
Catron	Myers	Shively	Thornton
Clapp	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Norris	Smoot	Townsend
Crawford	Owen	Stephenson	White

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. MYERS. I announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum of the Senate present. What is the pleasure of the Senators who are present?

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. I will state that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the absentees be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are just two motions which can be made. One is a motion to request the attendance of absent Senators and the other is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. JAMES. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will furnish the Sergeant at Arms with a list of absent Senators.

Mr. BURTON, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. BRISTOW, Mr. LEE of Maryland, Mr. GORE, and Mr. JOHNSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate adjourn. We have been trying to get a quorum for some time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for a division.

The motion was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 14, noes 12.

Mr. OWEN. I call for a vote by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is not in session. It stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The Senate thereupon (at 3 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 18, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 17, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. CULLOP as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Great God our Father, as time sweeps on in its ceaseless flow, draw us day by day, by grace divine, a little nearer to Thee; a little nearer to our better self; a little nearer to those we love; a little nearer to each other and the world of mankind; a little nearer to the toiling millions; a little nearer to the sorrowing, the unfortunate, the man down and out, that the Christ spirit may have its perfect work in our hearts, and faith, hope, and love be ever in the ascendancy; to the glory and honor of Thee, O God our Father. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Journal as read will stand approved.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I notice that all through the Journal it is stated that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moved to disagree to the various amendments and ask for a further conference with the Senate. As a matter of fact, that was not done, and that would not be proper under our procedure. After the various amendments had been disagreed to, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] at the end made a motion to ask for a further conference, and the Journal so states.

Where an amendment is disagreed to, it is not customary to ask for a further conference on each amendment. I think the Journal ought to be corrected to show that the motion was not made until after all the amendments had been disagreed to, where the motion really was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Journal will be corrected as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

JOHN K. LOWRY.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 279) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved May 2, 1914.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas by an error in printing the bill reported by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions upon H. R. 11269, approved May 2, 1914 (Private, No. 22), the designation of the military service of one John K. Lowry, late of Company F, Forty-sixth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was changed to read Company K of said regiment: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the paragraph in an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved May 2,

1914 (Private, No. 22, 63d Cong.), granting an increase of pension to one John K. Lowry, be corrected and amended so as to read as follows:
"The name of John K. Lowry, late of Company F, Forty-sixth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15762. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On June 4, 1914:

S. 2860. An act providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators.

On June 15, 1914:

S. 4167. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of other wars than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4168. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4260. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 4353. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. J. Res. 148. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend invitations to foreign Governments to participate, through their accredited diplomatic agents to the United States, in the National Star-Spangled Banner Centennial Celebration.

On June 16, 1914:

S. 4552. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 4657. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is not the gentleman willing to let that go over until to-morrow morning, and in the meantime have the bill printed with the Senate amendments numbered?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There is no particular hurry about it. I do not want the bill to go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I want it to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. That is all right.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SHERWOOD, for two weeks, on account of important business.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Calendar Wednesday, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, which is the unfinished business.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I should like to present a conference report, to be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Calendar Wednesday, and that can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12045) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war may be presented and printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REVISION OF THE LAWS—JUDICIARY TITLE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Calendar Wednesday, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, with Mr. RUSSELL in the chair.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, section 13 of the bill was passed over temporarily in order that certain information might be obtained. On the following Wednesday the information was produced and the section was then finally passed. The RECORD, however, I have been informed, fails to show that action, and I want to be certain that the RECORD shows that section 13 was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the RECORD will so state.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 79, line 14, strike out the section and insert in lieu the following new section:

"SEC. 137. Copies of the organization certificates of any national banking association or of any Federal reserve bank, duly certified by the Comptroller of the Currency and authenticated by his seal of office, shall be evidence in all courts and places within the jurisdiction of the United States of the incorporation of the association or of the Federal reserve bank, as the case may be, and every matter which could be proved by the production of the original certificates."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, section 273 was passed temporarily on account of an amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Maryland. I ask that before the amendment is submitted we return to section 270, because the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Maryland to section 273 is not germane to section 273. I ask that we return to section 270 to give the gentleman from Maryland an opportunity to withdraw his amendment to 273 and offer it to section 270.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to return to section 270 for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Maryland to offer an amendment that he heretofore offered to section 273. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw the amendment that I offered last Wednesday to section 273.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Now I will offer the amendment to section 270, to be known as section 270a.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

After section 270, on page 142, insert as a new section, 270a:

"In all cases of proceedings wherein the court of last resort of any State has by final judgment or decree adjudged any provision or provisions of a State constitution or statute or any municipal ordnance to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, or any statute or treaty thereof, such judgment or decree may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States under such rules as said court may prescribe."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that it is rather awkward in enacting a law to number a section 270A. It would have the same effect if he added it to section 270.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The suggestion was made that it would be clearer as section 270A.

Mr. MANN. We sometimes insert it in an old law, but the chances are that before we get through the sections will be renumbered consecutively, as required by the rules of Congress. As changing the number of sections might be awkward, I think it would be safer to make it a part of section 270.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Strike out the new section and make it a new paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Add it to the end of section 270.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, section 270 and several sections refer to the procedure on appeal. Section 270A which is offered, as a matter of fact, is a separate and distinct proposition. It does not relate to procedure at all.

Mr. MANN. It does not belong in the bill; but if it is to be put in, it ought to be put in in the right way.

Mr. WATKINS. I shall object to its being put in as a part of section 270, because that relates to the manner of appeal and not to the right of appeal. I prefer it should go in as an independent section. Otherwise it would have the appearance that the committee had agreed to a right of appeal in a section where there was only provision made for the remedy by way of procedure.

Mr. MANN. Under the practice of parliamentary bodies like this it is the duty of the clerk when enrolling the bill to number the sections consecutively, disregarding any numbers that we put in, and if that was done it would disorganize the entire bill.

Mr. WATKINS. Then he would give this the number of 271.

Mr. MANN. True, but what I mean is this: The gentleman's bill in one section refers specifically to another section.

Mr. WATKINS. That is true, but it does not happen to be so this time.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it happens to be so in the balance of the sections.

Mr. WATKINS. The second amendment I have is to correct a defect of that kind.

Mr. MANN. That would disorganize the whole thing. If this is to be inserted, it should be inserted as a part of this section. It belongs in another law entirely.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Inasmuch as the chairman of the committee objects and has another view I will let it stand as a new section.

Mr. MANN. It will be a great annoyance to the clerks whose duty it is to engross the bill with sections numbered consecutively. While we sometimes insert in a law by amendment section 270a, it is never done as an original proposition.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, some explanation ought to be made to the House of the significance of this amendment. Lawyers will understand that appeals now from the State courts to the Federal courts where the Federal Constitution or statutes have been appealed to are restricted to those cases where the State court has decided against the contention that the act of the legislature is invalid under the Federal Constitution. It was put there to protect, of course, the supremacy of the Federal law, and ample privilege is given a State and litigants to secure their rights under the Federal law by appeal to the Federal court.

In modern times, however, especially since the war, it has happened—and with great frequency and in a very serious way—that the courts have held their own State statutes invalid as violative of the Federal Constitution. In such cases no appeal is allowable to the Supreme Court, the appeal being restricted to the decisions which are made the other way. It so happens that some of the most important legislation of the States, especially in respect to the relations of employers and employees, has been struck down by the State courts on the argument that such legislation was violative of the Federal Constitution, and in such instances no appeals could be taken to save the State law. I have in mind three classes of cases, all of them of the gravest importance. One of them relates to statutes frequently passed by States with reference to weekly pay or semimonthly pay days. In my own State statutes of that kind have been held violative of the Federal Constitution, and yet recently, in a case that could go to the United States Supreme Court from the State of New York, that court has held that such statutes were not violative of the Federal Constitution. There are other instances involving the so-called company or pluck-me stores, and those State statutes have been struck down by State courts on Federal grounds, and no access has been possible to the Supreme Court of the United States to get its view about that line of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Now, Mr. Chairman, that very kind of legislation—it is not too much to say, legislation intended to break up the pluck-me, or company-store, system—sometimes goes to the question of peace and order in the mining industry, and my own hope and my own confidence is that if the Supreme Court of the United States could be appealed to in respect to that line of legislation, it would take a different view from what the State courts took of the subject 35 years ago. Adjudication in the States is now, however, predicated on the precedents of a bygone age upon that subject.

There is another question that goes to human nature itself. It is the compensation laws which are being passed by the respective States. One State court, at least, has held such compensation laws to be violative of the principles of the Federal Constitution, and no appeal can be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in such a case. I do not believe there are five men in the House to-day who believe that the Supreme Court, in our age, would hold such an act unconstitutional; and yet there is presented a situation where, if that precedent be followed in 40 or more States on that most important of all subjects, we might find ourselves unable to emulate the civilization of the rest of the world and effectuate the plainest dictates of justice and humanity. This amendment is designed to give appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States only in those instances where a State statute, a section of a State constitution, or a municipal ordinance predicated upon State sovereignty has been nullified by the State courts, in order that the highest court in the land may determine whether indeed and in truth such statute, constitutional amendment, or municipal ordinance does in fact contravene the Federal Constitution.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no opposition to this amendment in any direction. The American Bar Association has declared in favor of it. I am informed that ex-President Taft has recently visited the Capitol and appeared before the Judiciary Committee of this House in advocacy of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I heartily concur in all that has been said by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] as to the necessity and propriety of this amendment so far as its purposes are concerned. I had something to do with the drafting of it, in assisting the gentleman from Maryland as to the form——

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I wish to make admission that the gentleman from Iowa himself drafted this provision.

Mr. MADDEN. Surprising that you [Mr. GREEN of Iowa] should agree to the amendment after you had drawn it!

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is unnecessarily sarcastic. I was talking about the purposes of the amendment and not with reference to its form; but I wish to say something with reference to the language of the amendment. In drafting the amendment I endeavored as far as possible to follow the language which had heretofore been used in other provisions with reference to similar matters. The amendment as originally drawn used the words "in conflict with the Constitution of the United States." I took the words "in contravention of the Constitution of the United States" from a somewhat similar provision with reference to the courts of the District of Columbia, which seem to be the only courts from which appeal may lie with reference to decision upon State constitutions or State statutes, which have been held to be invalid as in contravention of the Constitution of the United States. The word "reexamine" as used in the provision that such judgment or decree may be "reexamined and reversed or affirmed by the Supreme Court" is found in the converse of this statute in the Judicial Code, the provisions of which the gentleman from Maryland has already stated. That provides that where it is decided that any statute is valid under the Constitution of the United States, an appeal may be taken from such a decision. The proposed amendment is simply the converse of that statute. A suggestion has been made with reference to an amendment to the amendment in order to make it conform to similar statutes—that after the words "United States," in the last line, the words be inserted, "upon writ of error," so that the amendment will then read:

Reversed or affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error.

This suggestion was made by my colleague, Judge TOWNER, and I am inclined to think that the suggestion is a good one. In drafting this amendment, I borrowed a portion of the language from page 153 of the bill in section 295, and I observe that the language there is:

Reexamined, reversed, or affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of error, under such rules and regulations as the court may prescribe.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Does the gentleman propose that addition?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it would be well to make that addition.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I am willing to accept it. I think it is completive of the sense of the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then when I close, I shall ask unanimous consent that it be inserted.

There is one explanation that is probably necessary with reference to the terms of this amendment. The House will observe that there is no provision as to what action shall be taken when the case is reversed or affirmed, but that is left to the Supreme Court to prescribe by rules and regulations. Nearly all of the cases which can be considered under this amendment will be criminal cases and, of course, if the Supreme Court should reverse the decision of the State court no action could be taken in the way of remanding the case to the lower court and ordering that decision or judgment to be set aside, because the judgment would be one which released the defendant and discharged him under the indictment or information, as the case might be. It is intended by this provision that the decision of the Supreme Court will, however, be a precedent for future decisions in the State court, which it is assumed will be governed by whatever the Supreme Court of the United States may decide in the matter. It was thought best for that reason, instead of making any provision as to what order or subsequent proceedings should be had after the case has been reversed or affirmed, to simply provide that the court itself, the Supreme Court of the United States, might make rules and regulations in reference thereto which would be applicable to any class of cases that came before it under the amendment, whether civil or criminal, and whether the result was an affirmation or a reversal of the lower court.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the amendment, the gentleman proposing the amendment having consented thereto, after the words "United States" in the last line, the words "upon writ of error," so that the last clause will read: "reversed or affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of error under such rules as said court may prescribe."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The existing law that permits review by the Supreme Court of the United States of decisions of the State courts relating to State constitutions or statutes, does that also include municipal ordinances?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would apply to municipal ordinances.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment in the manner suggested. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, further, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, I would say that the provision in the Judicial Code of the existing law would apply to a similar case where a municipal ordinance was involved and the State court decided that it was not in contravention with the Constitution of the United States. This is section 237 of the Judicial Code, which I have in my hand.

Mr. MANN. What is the provision as to this language? Does the language include municipal ordinances?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It does not specify municipal ordinances by using those words, but it says:

SEC. 237. A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States and the decision is against their validity, or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of or an authority exercised under any State on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution or any treaty or statute of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity especially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error, etc.

This would cover cases involving municipal ordinances.

Mr. MANN. Now, that having been the law for many years, and it being now suggested or proposed that the converse be taken as a case for appeal, why is not the same language used here instead of putting in entirely different language, which will require a lot of court construction?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The language which has been used in this amendment is not new, but is all found in some of the provisions of our Judicial Code and the bill which we have before the House. The reason that different language is used in this amendment is because the cases covered thereby can not be reviewed in the same manner or, I should say, with the same effect as the cases which are covered by section 237 of the Judicial Code. In the cases covered by that section proceedings will be had after the decision in the United States Supreme Court or in the same manner as in ordinary cases; but in the cases covered by this provision, as I said before, nine out of ten will be criminal cases, and the procedure can not be the same. This necessitated some changes. I will say also that section 237 seemed to me to be unnecessarily involved. I undertook to simplify.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The question is this: In our State we have a court of criminal appeals and the supreme court, the supreme court having jurisdiction of civil cases and the court of criminal appeals of criminal cases. Will this apply to criminal cases from the court of criminal appeals?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would in certain cases if it was the court of last resort.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the court of last resort for criminal cases and the supreme court is the court of last resort for civil cases. We have an intermediate court known as the court of civil appeals that is composed of three judges, and on constitutional questions and questions where one judge dissents appeal can go to the supreme court. Now, could one of these cases coming from the court of civil appeals go to the Supreme Court of the United States under the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The only case that could go to the Supreme Court of the United States would be where the party desiring to take the appeal has exhausted his remedy entirely in the State courts.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In that event he could go?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And if they had a case where they had not appealed where they are entitled to it, on a constitutional question or where one of the judges dissented, they would be without a remedy, and justly so, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] for a question.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Maryland said that in a great many instances injustice had arisen because we did not have such a provision as this in the code. Can the gentleman in plain English, not in legal language, give us an instance where such an injustice has been worked because of this lack of the right of appeal?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Perhaps the gentleman was not present——

Mr. MOORE. I was present. I mean some individual case where the wrong is done.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I can give two cases from my own State. Legislation there designed to break up the "pluck-me-store" system was declared invalid by our highest court, and also legislation in regard to a two-week pay law.

Mr. MOORE. Was there a desire in those cases, after the Maryland courts had determined them, to take them higher?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. There was. In one case I was counsel, and was only prevented from taking appeal because of the fact that it could not be taken.

Mr. MOORE. Does a lack of uniformity in State decisions arise from failure to have this provision?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. It would tend to arise. I think our Maryland courts were restrained on that subject by decisions rendered 20 or 30 years ago.

Mr. MOORE. Then a remedy might lie in the legislature.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. There is no remedy in the State legislature. The remedy is here in Congress, because unless appeal is given State sovereignty can be hopelessly stricken down by a State court.

Mr. MOORE. And from your point of view that is the end of it?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. That is the end of it.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, as far as the enactment of this provision of the law is concerned, it is my individual opinion, and not that of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, that it is important. The Committee on Revision of the Laws has not had an opportunity to pass formally upon it during the presentation and consideration of this bill, because of the fact that it appropriately belongs in the judicial code which was approved on March 3, 1911, which code gives the right of appeal and not in this bill. The provision under which we are operating at this time does not relate to the right of appeal, but to the mode of procedure in the court. And it is under this proposition that the amendment is offered, and it is not germane to that part of the law or those provisions of the law which we are incorporating into law at this time, and for that reason it was not put in the bill. That is, not put in under the title of procedure or anywhere else in the bill which we are now offering for passage. In view of the fact, however, that it is a law which should be passed; in view of the fact that we are now dealing with the question of appeal—and it relates to the right of appeal—and in further view of the fact that this provision which should have been incorporated in section 237 of the Judicial Code approved March 3, 1911, did not contain this provision, I will not interpose any objection to the passage of it at this time, although it is not in harmony or in line with the remainder of the chapter under which we are now operating.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman who introduced the amendment a question about this. Is not this already the law?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No.

Mr. CULLOP. I see that you state in this amendment—

Where the highest court of a State by its final judgment on appeal had adjudged any provision or provisions of a State constitution or statute, or any municipal ordinances, to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States or any statute or treaty thereof.

Would not a judgment of that kind be raising a Federal question?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No.

Mr. CULLOP. Why can you not take that, then, on to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Because the statute giving the right of appeal in those cases, and passed in 1789, restricts appeals to those instances where the decision has been in favor of the Federal contention and denies appeals where the State courts have decided adversely to the State contention, it being assumed that the State courts can be relied upon to protect the statutes of their own States. In 1789 the State courts had a bias as for the State statutes, but that feeling certainly does not exist at this date.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question, as to whether or not it is his opinion that the reason behind the present form of the statute is that it calls upon the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce the Federal law? In other words, to protect the right of the citizen under the Constitution of the United States, whereas to permit the adverse or other side to appeal it would be to call on the Supreme Court of the United States to enforce State law. Is not that the reason behind the distinction?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. It may be a debatable proposition, sir; but my view is as stated. If a State court comes to an erroneous conclusion about the Federal right of a man who has sued me, and has decided adversely to me, that State court has as much deprived me of my Federal rights when it errs as it would in cases otherwise determined. In other words, both parties have equal rights to a correct interpretation of the Federal contention.

Mr. SCOTT. But does not the Constitution of the United States guarantee enforcement of the State laws or rights under the State laws?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No; it impliedly guarantees that the Federal Constitution shall not be applied to nullify State legislation except in proper cases; but this appeal allowed by this amendment implies that where the State court has nullified a State statute under the pretense of Federal conflict, if the Supreme Court thinks that the State has not trespassed upon the Federal authority the Supreme Court shall have power to say so, and to protect me in my Federal right, because I have a Federal right to the protection of State laws which the State really has the power to pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] allow me to make a statement in reply to my colleague?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I call my colleague's attention to the fact that this provision does not in any way make the Supreme Court of the United States responsible for the enforcement of the State law. In fact, it does not provide for any enforcement of the State law on the part of the Federal Supreme Court. It provides only for the determination of the principles of the Constitution in that court and affirmance or reversal of the State court; but it leaves to rules and regulations, which will be established by the Federal court, the question of what further action, if any, may be taken. And in many of these cases, as I said before, no action can be taken beyond a simple reversal or affirmance.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like now to say to the gentleman from Maryland that I agree with him on his amendment, but I would like to have it go further and incorporate the subject matter embraced in my amendment. Whereever there is a suit brought to test the validity of a State statute I think the original jurisdiction ought to be confined to the State courts, and the Federal courts not have jurisdiction until the highest court of the State has had an opportunity to pass upon its validity and construe the provision. The State courts should have the first say, as we sometimes call it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not just understand the gentleman. That is just what this provides. It is only where the decision is made by the court of last resort that this section applies.

Mr. CULLOP. Ah, the gentleman is badly mistaken. The gentleman will observe this, that there can be brought under this statute an original suit in the Federal court to test validity of a State statute without first bringing suit in the State court, and having the highest court of the State construe its statutory provisions, and this procedure we assert is wrong.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Where does the gentleman get that out of this provision?

Mr. CULLOP. This only provides that appeals may be taken from the State court where the highest court of the State has passed upon the question and one or the other of the parties feel aggrieved, whereas heretofore it was only in certain contingencies appeals from courts of last resort of the States could be taken to the Federal courts. It is to cure this evil the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland applies; but the amendment I have offered goes much further, and provides that in all suits where the validity of any State statute is involved the question must first be passed upon by the State court of last resort before the Federal courts can take jurisdiction of such question. In other words, State courts must first pass upon the validity of State statutes before the Federal courts can do so. It further authorizes an appeal by the aggrieved party from decision of the question by State courts of last resort to the Supreme Court of the United States. As the law now is, a suit involving the validity of a State statute may be brought in the first instance in the Federal courts and determined before the highest courts of the State have an opportunity to construe it or pass upon it. I hope I have now made its purpose plain to the gentleman from Iowa.

Now, there is nothing in the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland that confines such a suit in its original jurisdiction to the State courts. For aught that appears in his amendment, a suit can be brought in the Federal court in the first instance to test the validity of the statute of a State. Now, then, my amendment applies to that subject.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You are correct about that.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, what I am asking is the enactment of some legislation for jurisdiction in the first instance of a suit to test the validity of a State statute, to be brought in the first instance in the State courts, and the Federal court shall not have original jurisdiction for that purpose, and then an appeal may be made from the decision of the supreme court of the State on that question to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, that is for this reason: It is the well-settled rule of statutory construction that the construction which the highest court of a State puts upon the statute of such State shall be controlling if it can possibly be reconciled under well-settled rules of construction by the Federal court reviewing the same. Now, we have known of a number of abuses in this country in the Federal courts for the want of some statute of the kind I have suggested. I think it is almost universally accepted that there ought to be legislation of some kind upon this question to avoid the recurrence of this abuse, and I will ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] if he would be willing that I should offer an amendment to the pending amendment providing that in all suits to test the validity of a State statute original jurisdiction shall be in State courts and an appeal shall then lie from the highest court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States. This would rectify the existing evil in this respect.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not the gentleman see some constitutional difficulty in the way of limiting the jurisdiction to the State courts in the first instance?

Mr. CULLOP. None.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I might say also that such a statute as that which the gentleman proposes would be in direct conflict with the statute that we have on the books now.

Mr. CULLOP. The purpose is simply to get rid of that statute and put a new one in its place. There is no constitutional objection to this, to what I propose; none whatever. This Congress has the right to confer jurisdiction in any of these cases on the State courts by a statute, and lodge the jurisdiction in any court as it may see fit. There is nothing to prevent it. Congress has the power if it sees fit to use it. Take the employers' liability act for an illustration. It provides that the Federal courts only have concurrent jurisdiction with the State courts in suits under that act. Congress had the power to pass such a law. It has the power to prescribe the jurisdiction in this matter, as provided by the amendment I have offered. The law as it exists now is injurious to the people of the country who are compelled to resort to litigation to determine such important questions in that a nonresident is procured for jurisdictional purposes, so that there will be a diversity of citizenship, and the suit is brought in the Federal court to test the validity of a State statute, when it ought to be brought in the State court and an opportunity given to the supreme court of that State to first pass upon it, before the Federal court is resorted to. This method would be the better and fairer one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask one minute in which to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asks unanimous consent for one minute more, in which to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], after the word "prescribed," by inserting the words "Provided, That in any suit brought to test the validity of the statute of any State, original jurisdiction shall be in the State courts, and an appeal permitted from the supreme court of such State to the Supreme Court of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. I will write it out, Mr. Chairman, and send it to the desk.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say, as courteously as possible, that I think this amendment is entirely incongruous with the amendment that I proposed. If I understand the gentleman's proposition, I think I may suggest that it is not worked out at all in the proviso that is offered, and it would require a great deal of time and painstaking care to work it out in conformity with the law. I therefore make a point of order to the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] makes a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, he can not make a point of order against it until it has been reported. It has not been reported yet.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been offered informally, and it will be put in writing in a moment.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, is the matter before the Chairman for consideration on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Strictly speaking, the Chair thinks not. The amendment is now being prepared by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]. The Clerk is not certain that he heard it correctly as stated by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much the desirability of agreeing to this amendment, for two reasons. First, I think that any change in the law which confers additional jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court ought to be very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee, so that we will be quite certain that the law means what it apparently says. My observation is that hastily drawn statutes—even those drawn by so distinguished gentlemen as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]—are often provocative of great discussion and many decisions. Second, the Supreme Court of the United States, I believe, is having a longer session this year than is customary. A few years ago we hoped that we might be able, by the creation of the courts of appeal, to permit the Supreme Court of the United States to keep practically up to date with its business. We have gone on since then and added to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court; and not only that, but we have given preference to a certain class of cases until an ordinary citizen having a case before the Supreme Court now has to wait for quite a number of years before he can have his case disposed of, and the delay in justice is often a denial of justice.

Now, here is a proposition to permit the Supreme Court of the United States to pass upon every city, village, county, hamlet, and township ordinance, practically.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. They do it now.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; they do not do it now.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. They do it for one side of the litigants' table.

Mr. MANN. Under the existing law the Supreme Court can pass upon the question where the State court has decided that the act of the legislature or the State constitution is not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. But here is a proposition now to take the other side, so that, whichever way the court decides, you can bring the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. There are a great number of municipal ordinances being constantly passed in the various municipalities of the United States where some lawyer contests the validity of the ordinance on the ground that it conflicts with the Constitution of the United States, and especially with the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MANN. In just a second. Now, whichever way the court decides, under this provision, it will decide that question—ordinarily it must decide it if it comes—and bring the case to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman by any logical course of reasoning support the contention that the right of appeal ought to exist when the court has decided the case only one way and should not exist when the court has decided it the other way?

Mr. MANN. Well, my friend from Iowa would seem to endeavor to impugn the common sense of the Congress which first put the provision in the law and that of every Congress since then which permits it to remain in the law. It seems to me it is quite logical to permit the Supreme Court of the United States to review the case in one instance, where it may be presumed that the State supreme court is biased in behalf of the provisions of the State, and not in the case where the supreme court of the State decides against the provisions of the State. The cases are quite different, just as much so as when you permit a citizen of a different State to sue in the Federal court, but it is stronger in that case than this.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask to have my amendment reported.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to be recognized in my own right later.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] will now be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by adding at the end the following:
"Provided, That in any suit to test the validity of any State statute original jurisdiction in all such suits in the courts of the State, and an appeal shall lie from the highest court of said State to the Supreme of the United States."

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. On that I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana on the point of order.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the gentleman from Maryland state the point of order on which he relies.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The point of order relied on is this: The section as proposed deals distinctly with rights of appeal from State courts of last resort to the Supreme Court of the United States, a distinct proposition of law and fact. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] deals with a wholly different set of circumstances, namely, those conditions which are to determine the right of original jurisdiction in courts of nisi prius character. We are dealing with legal propositions as distinct as it is possible to fancy.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the fact that the amendment offered to the amendment deals with the original jurisdiction of these cases only enlarges the scope of the gentleman's amendment, and it treats of appeals from the State courts to the Supreme Court of the United States, the controlling subject embraced in his amendment.

The fact that an amendment to an amendment enlarges only the scope, but is of the same subject matter, does not make it obnoxious to the original amendment. All this amendment does is to control the original jurisdiction in a certain class of cases. It treats of the subject of appeals, just as the original amendment treats, and the fact that it enlarges the subject, which is the gist of the original amendment, which is the crux of the whole subject treated of, does not make it obnoxious to the original amendment, but it is in line with and treats of the identical subject matter treated of by the gentleman in the original amendment, and I contend that it is germane and that it is not subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Maryland; and I think if the Chair will take the trouble to look up the rulings on the Clayton bill the Chair will find a precedent that sustains the position I am taking here upon this subject, except that the amendment in the case in which the precedent was made will be found to have been more foreign to the subject than the one now in question. That was almost identically the same point of order raised, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], held that it was in order.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I will state that we are now under the title of procedure and regulating the appeals to the upper courts from the lower courts under that heading. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], referring, as it does, to the original jurisdiction of the court, should have come under the judicial code, and the features which he asks to have incorporated in this amendment should have come under section 237, regulating the original jurisdiction of courts. It is clearly not germane to this section.

Mr. CULLOP. Is not the whole subject matter embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] a question of jurisdiction and nothing else? He has offered it to confer jurisdiction in a class of cases in which the court now has no jurisdiction. It is a jurisdictional question and nothing else, and his amendment treats only of jurisdictional matters and nothing else.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, if that is a question, I should like to have an opportunity to answer it.

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, when this proposition was first raised, on last Wednesday, I intimated then that if it remained in the form in which it then stood I would raise a point of order against it, and I deferred it until this Wednesday for the purpose of placing it in such shape that it might, by a strained construction, be placed under the head of procedure. The way this amendment is now worded it can be construed under the head of procedure, and has been allowed to go under the head of procedure, under which we are operating, because the language of it is such as to allow that kind of strained construction of it; but the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] clearly refers to the original jurisdiction of a court, which is dealt with under the Judicial Code, which has already been passed and is now operative under the laws of the country.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman from Louisiana permit a question there?

Mr. WATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. This is a new section, is it not?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Has not the Chair held that a new section can be offered at any place in the bill?

Mr. WATKINS. It can be offered at any place in the bill if it is germane to the bill; but this is not germane to the bill. It is not in this bill. This particular section is under the head of procedure, and is not under the head of jurisdiction at all.

Mr. CULLOP. But this is a new section, and we can insert it at any place.

Mr. WATKINS. It is not germane to any part of this chapter.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, that is immaterial, I will say to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order, I desire to call attention to the fact that evidently the main subject of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is to determine the jurisdiction of courts regarding certain matters. That is not involved in the question before us. That is not involved in the original section that we are now considering. That is not the subject that is under consideration in any form. As the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] says, the provision of the bill has reference to a question of procedure only.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TOWNER. In just a moment. And because the gentleman has linked with his proposition regarding the original jurisdiction of certain courts a question regarding the procedure on appeal, it would not make it germane. He could not bring in extraneous and foreign matters in that form and make it germane.

Mr. CULLOP. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Is not the whole purport and object of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of the United States in cases in which it now has no jurisdiction? Is not that the whole object?

Mr. TOWNER. If that was true—and it is not exactly true—your amendment would still not be germane, because your proposition involves the jurisdiction of the State courts, something very remote from the procedure of the courts of the United States or of the Supreme Court of the United States. Let me say further, if the gentleman is acting in good faith—and I have no doubt he is acting in good faith regarding his proposition—it must be more carefully worked out than he has done by the amendment suggested here. It could not by any possibility be operative in the form in which it is now offered. If the gentleman desires in good faith legislation of that kind, I suggest that it had better be offered in some independent form, so that it may be considered as such. I think there is no provision in this bill to which it can be considered as germane. It certainly could not be germane to the section that we now have under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the impression that this amendment is not clear and that the gentleman from Indiana wrote it hastily. It says:

Provided, That in any suit to test the validity of any State statute original jurisdiction in all such suits in the courts of the State.

Mr. CULLOP. I omitted the words "shall be," but I called the Clerk's attention to that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the concluding sentence of the amendment reads: "The highest court of said State to the Supreme of the United States."

Mr. CULLOP. An appeal may lie from the highest court of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States. The word "Court" should be inserted after the word "Supreme." I was obliged to write the amendment hurriedly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in some doubt as to whether the point of order should be sustained or not. It is true that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland is with reference to the appeal from the State court to the Supreme Court of the United States, and we are considering a chapter bearing upon that subject, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana does in fact modify the law as to jurisdiction. At the same time the amendment provides for an appeal from the decision of the State supreme court to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Chair is rather of the opinion that he can not rule this out on a point of order, although it might be more properly placed in some other part of the Federal statute. The Chair is disposed to overrule the point of order and submit the matter to the committee.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the merits of the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I have a good deal of sympathy with the suggestion in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. I am biased enough in favor of State jurisdiction to think the State courts should be the first to pass upon the constitutionality of their own statutes; but I wish to suggest to the lawyers in this House that if such a limit on Federal jurisdiction is desired, that this proviso is utterly inadequate to accomplish it. Instead of introducing a definition of jurisdiction on the line thought of, it would introduce confusion impossible to master, I am afraid.

Now, I make this suggestion to the lawyers of the House. It is very well for a man on the street to say and for the newspapers to say in regard to some lawsuit, "Oh, that lawsuit was brought to test the constitutionality of the statute." As lawyers we know that there has never been, as a technical fact, as a fact of the forum, a suit brought to test the constitutionality of a statute. The allegations are that the defendant has failed to discharge certain duties. The allegations on the part of the plaintiff are not that the act is unconstitutional, that its constitutionality is in controversy, with a prayer that the court determine whether the act is constitutional or not. The question of constitutionality is rarely raised by the plaintiff. It is rarely raised by the suit brought in any technical language for that purpose. It is raised by the defendant, after he is dragged into court by way of defense. The language of the proviso is as inadequate to change that institution as it would be to accomplish a change of some rule of this House.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that the amendment is absolutely meaningless and gets nowhere:

Provided, That in a suit to test the validity of any State statute original jurisdiction in all such suits shall be in the courts of the State and an appeal—

And so forth.

I know of no case where the court will entertain jurisdiction merely for the purpose of testing the validity or constitutionality of an act of the assembly. If we presented a petition or instituted a proceeding that was merely presented to the court in the line of determining whether or not an act was constitutional or not, we would be reminded by almost every State court and every Federal court not to bring mooted questions before them, but to bring before them some real and substantial question wherein that point was raised. Therefore we would never have the application of this amendment, and it would be merely adding words.

I again call attention to the amendment, "provided in any suit to test the validity of any State statute." Suits are not brought for that purpose. Suits are brought either for the enforcement of rights or for the prevention of wrongs, and incidentally the question of the constitutionality of an act comes in. So that even if we adopted such an amendment, it would be to a degree meaningless, because it would be strictly interpreted and strictly held, when we sought to apply it, that the original suit was not brought for the purpose of upholding or overthrowing the constitutionality of an act, and therefore nothing would be accomplished by it. As it is worded at the present time, you would never have your action brought for such purpose, and collaterally it might be contended that the question could not be raised because the act strictly restricted it.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana presents a very anomalous case. I take it that all will agree readily that Congress has no power or authority to confer or control the jurisdiction of State courts any more than a State legislature has over the jurisdiction of the Federal court, so that this amendment, if it means anything, merely curtails the jurisdiction of the lower Federal courts in cases mentioned. Inasmuch as the Supreme Court of the United States is a court of appeals only and has no original jurisdiction, and inasmuch as Congress can not control or confer original jurisdiction upon any State court, with this amendment agreed to, where would your original jurisdiction be so far as Federal law is concerned? There would be none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not understand what my colleague means by inquiring where the original jurisdiction would be. For the commencement of these actions?

Mr. SCOTT. If such a statute could be passed which would relieve the present inferior Federal courts of original jurisdiction in this class of cases, and as we know Congress has no power to confer it upon the State courts, where would there be any valid Federal law providing where to begin your case?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I beg my colleague's pardon. I misunderstood him.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, surely the gentleman from Iowa does not insist upon the contention that he has raised. Surely he does not insist that Congress has not the power to invest State courts with jurisdiction of any case. If that is true, if the position of the gentleman is correct, Congress has made a wonderful spectacle of itself in a great many instances for a great many years. Time after time it has done just what we are attempting now, and it has always stood the test.

Mr. Chairman, Congress has the power, as long as it does not infringe upon any provision of the Constitution, to confer the jurisdiction of any lawsuit where it pleases. It is supreme in that matter, and it has the power to say that the Federal courts shall or shall not have jurisdiction of any case, and designate the particular court, and, if it sees fit, deny jurisdiction to others. No gentleman on this floor will controvert that proposition. If he does, he does it in the face of the overwhelming weight of authority upon that proposition. Why can not Congress pass an act saying that in all suits involving the validity of a State statute the question of its validity shall be first passed upon by the State courts before the Supreme Court of the United States or any Federal court shall have jurisdiction of the subject matter?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think this amendment does that?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not only think it, but I am quite certain of it; but I am willing to have the language modified in that respect; if it does not, I want it certain, plain, and specific.

Mr. MANN. I am merely asking the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. CULLOP. I will say to the gentleman that I think the subject might be more clearly expressed in language than I have expressed it. I wrote it very hastily, because the time was running. I am going to suggest that it be modified, and that it state that in all suits wherein the validity of a State statute is involved the original jurisdiction shall be in the State courts, and an appeal will lie. That will meet the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who seems to be not only splitting a hair, but a whole armful of them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not contend, I take it, that Congress had the authority to give to a State court the power to determine the validity of a State statute?

Mr. CULLOP. I do not think I understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. We have power over the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, but the gentleman would not contend that Congress has power to give to a State court jurisdiction over the validity of a State statute?

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, I will say to the gentleman that the State court already has that jurisdiction. It is a power they already have.

Mr. MANN. That is it.

Mr. CULLOP. But this is only a provision defining the way in which the testing of a State statute can come into the Federal courts—the mode of procedure.

Mr. MANN. I was seeking to ascertain what the gentleman's point was, whether what he was after was to remove the present jurisdiction of the Federal courts in reference to State statutes. The gentleman's amendment apparently endeavors to affirmatively confer jurisdiction upon the State courts to determine the validity of State statutes. Of course, we have not that power. We have the power to refuse jurisdiction to the Federal courts.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman on that proposition that he has misapprehended the language of my amendment. It is only suspending the jurisdiction of the Federal courts on such questions until the State courts have passed on the question.

Mr. MANN. I have read it since the gentleman has.

Mr. CULLOP. It provides original jurisdiction shall only be in the State courts, in order to let the highest court of the State pass on the question first.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but that is not the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. There is where we differ. The proposition is this: I do not think that in the gentleman's amendment city ordinances ought to be included, but I do think that this amendment to the amendment which I have offered ought to be adopted here. It is a well-known rule of statutory construction that the construction of the highest court of the State as to whether a State statute is valid or not is controlling on the Federal courts; and there has been a disposition, and I think one subject to criticism, though some other gentlemen may not, on the part of certain litigants, in order to avoid the decision of the State court in the construction of a State statute, to run in the first instance into the Federal courts to get a construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. That has been done in every instance to avoid the construction of the highest court of the State upon that statute, and notably the kind of cases is warrant for the statement I am making. In nearly every 2-cent fare law passed by any State legislature, before the ink could dry upon the paper upon which the statute was printed and it was declared to be in effect, there has been a hurry to the Federal courts to bring suit to set aside the statute or to qualify it by those whom it would affect financially. That has been an abuse which demands this kind of remedy. The State courts are as safe as the Federal courts in the hearing of a lawsuit. In the Federal court the judge is responsible to nobody; appointed for life, he does not feel the responsibility that a judge holding office for a fixed term feels. I hope to see the day when there will not be a life tenure of office in this great Republic of ours. It is a remarkable fact that in a certain class of cases the decisions have been by the nisi prius court against the validity of the State statute by the Federal courts, and it is equally as remarkable that the cases have been almost uniformly reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States Doubtless the result would have been different in the nisi prius courts in this class of cases if the opinion of the highest court of the State on the question had been first taken.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman kindly yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I will.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman kindly tell the committee in what State the Federal court has taken jurisdiction of damages under the 2-cent law?

Mr. CULLOP. I did not speak of damage suits.

Mr. BOOHER. Well, to recover.

Mr. CULLOP. A suit was brought to set aside a statute of that kind in the gentleman's State, because, as they alleged, it was a confiscation of their property. The Federal court downed the statute and the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the decision.

Mr. BOOHER. I did not understand the gentleman; I thought he was referring to suits brought since the Federal courts upheld the validity of State laws.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, in some instances they had to go to the Supreme Court of the United States to get their statutes upheld. Such was the case in your State. This amendment lets them only go from the supreme court of the State, the highest court of the State, to the Supreme Court of the United States, and have no trial in the first instance in the Federal courts of the district.

Mr. LOGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. LOGUE. Just at that point, suppose a suit is instituted by A against B properly in the United States court, and in the course of the trial of the case the question of the validity of a State statute arose. Would that question be transferred to the Federal court until after the State supreme court had passed upon it and the parties ousted from court until such was done?

Mr. CULLOP. It would, and it ought to be, because if they brought that suit or filed an answer to it the attorneys well knew that question was involved.

Mr. LOGUE. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. CULLOP. If they did not, they were incompetent in the discharge of their duties, and every lawyer knows it. Certainly I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOGUE. Suppose that question was a contested one and did not develop until the trial was on and was upheld in the first instance, would the case then go to trial and have the party ousted at the end?

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, it does not apply to how the Federal court decided the question: it denies that right until it has been passed upon by the highest court of the State. Then the court would make an order finding that the jurisdiction belonged to the State court, if it was an original question, and the parties would go to the State court, as the law provided, because a judgment rendered in a court without jurisdiction under all the law is absolutely null and void, and there is no dispute, I take it, about the law upon that proposition. It is a nullity, and the courts and the elementary authorities so lay it down. Let every State statute receive its initial construction and its first construction by the highest court of the State wherein the statute was passed, and if either party is aggrieved, then they can appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is the purpose of this amendment; that is the object it has in view; and can any man say to his constituents but what that statute is absolutely right, fair, and just to all parties? It will break up the abuses that have existed for many years in this class of cases and inaugurate a uniform procedure on this important subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, the vice of the amendment, to my mind, becomes more apparent. A, a resident of Pennsylvania, brings his action in a United States court by reason of diverse citizenship, and during the determination of the question of fact, the constitutionality of a law of a distant State being questioned, he finds himself confronted by being told there has never been any decision in the courts of the State that enacted the law as to its validity, and its validity is now raised for the first time, and to carry out the contention of the gentleman from Indiana the plaintiff would then have his action dismissed, and he would be told to stop and wait until perhaps the State of Washington had determined that question, or he would be obligated to travel from Pennsylvania out into the State of Washington to have the question determined as to the constitutionality of an act which collaterally came into question and have it brought to the supreme court of that State.

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOGUE. I will.

Mr. HULINGS. In that regard, suppose the litigants are citizens of different States? How would the citizens of Pennsylvania go out to Washington and get the decision of the court there as to what the Washington statute is?

Mr. LOGUE. That is the condition the law would bring about.

Mr. HULINGS. And if he would have to go to the State court, how would the Pennsylvanian get process on the man in Washington?

Mr. LOGUE. The defendant might be a resident of the State of Washington, the plaintiff a resident of Pennsylvania, and required to go out to Washington to have determined a legal question, and therefore might be in the strange position that there would be no question that he could raise that he had no case before the court; that it does not decide abstract questions, and that it is only in a real case when they have a real proposition before them that——

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Suppose the question involved matters of different State jurisdiction and you go to Washington and begin your suit under the Federal law, then suppose the defendant would ask for a transfer to the Federal court because it involves matters outside the jurisdiction of the State of Washington and he should plead that under the statute he had the right to transfer his case to the Federal court because it was outside the jurisdiction of the State, where would he ever go for an adjudication?

Mr. LOGUE. That is another condition that would arise.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LOGUE. For a question.

Mr. CULLOP. In answer to the gentleman from Washington I would say that there is no State statute that authorizes the transfer of cases from the State to the Federal court—that is, a Federal statute—and, answering him, that would be a case in which the jurisdiction would be in the State court.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman knows the proceeding for a transfer from the State to the Federal court.

Mr. CULLOP. That is a Federal statute, and they have a right to appeal at any time.

Mr. BRYAN. But you are not appealing.

Mr. LOGUE. Let us illustrate it in another way. Take the case where process was served properly by the aggrieved party in the State of Pennsylvania and the constitutionality of the act of the State of Washington was raised. It would stop the suit and end it and compel the citizen of the State of Pennsylvania to travel all the way out to the State of Washington, and perhaps there be met by diverse citizenship being asserted after he got to the State of Washington and then trotted back to the Federal court again, and with the Federal court being denied the right to pass on the question under this amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. In the very instance you mention, the man would have to go to the State of Washington to get jurisdiction in the Federal court.

Mr. LOGUE. Oh, no. Suppose under the statute of the State of Pennsylvania, and under the rules of practice, that I can get service in the State of Pennsylvania upon a foreign corporation doing business there, and that foreign corporation then presents its petition to transfer it to the United States court by reason of diverse citizenship, it goes there——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, suppose the State of Washington should get into some sort of jealousies with the State of Indiana, and we should pass a statute out there prohibiting the importation of household goods into the State of Washington from the State of Indiana without paying tariff tax to the State. Of course, it would be unconstitutional. But suppose I should buy some household goods of the gentleman from Indiana and he should ship them to me, and he should sue me for the money for these household goods, and in the course of the suit I should dig up the old statute of the State of Washington and should show him that the law prohibited him from transporting those goods there and provided that the goods are to be confiscated, would the gentleman want to be denied the right to plead his rights under the Constitution? The Federal court might be the only place he could sue, but he would be prohibited from pleading unconstitutionality of that statute in the Federal court. The case would thereby be thrown out of court and no adjudication be permitted.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. The very case you are putting shows the reason why you have to go to the Federal court.

Mr. BRYAN. I recognize you have a right to go to the Federal court.

Mr. CULLOP. Wherever a Federal question is raised they have a right to go to the Federal court, but this only provides the manner in which they shall go there.

Mr. BRYAN. This statute of the State of Washington in that case would be violative of the Federal Constitution, and of all places where it ought to be taken up and considered it is in the Federal court.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a modification of the amendment as follows.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I feel constrained to object. There has been one modification, and I can see only danger from modifying it.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized on the gentleman's amendment. The verbiage of the amendment seems largely to have been lost sight of in the discussion we have had. The purpose the author of the amendment had in introducing the amendment was to take away from the United States courts original jurisdiction in certain cases and place that original jurisdiction in the State courts. It is a fact that in his efforts to have this amendment inserted in this particular place in the codification of the laws he has referred to the right of appeal in such cases, but that is not the real object. That is not the purpose of this amendment. If this amendment carries——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield right there for a suggestion?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is it not a fact that in most cases covered by this provision an appeal could not be taken because they are criminal cases?

Mr. WATKINS. There are many cases. The only purpose of passing this law which is incorporated in this amendment is to take away from the United States courts the jurisdiction and place the right in the State courts to try such cases. Laws can not be repealed by implication, by innuendo, by inference; but if this is passed, it would have the effect of repealing numbers of United States statutes, because the verbiage of it carries with it that effect. It is in direct contravention of not only the law which has been referred to here in this argument, where the citizen of one State has the right to go into the United States court in another State and bring suit, but many other statutes of the United States grant that same right, and we would repeal statute after statute of the United States giving the parties the right to go into the United States court and assert their right where the question was involved as to the validity of any statute of any State. And on that account, being in the wrong place in the statute, it not coming in line with procedure, and being out of harmony with other provisions here being enacted, I can not resist the temptation of making these few remarks in opposition to the amendment, not because I am opposed to the idea which the gentleman seeks to have incorporated into the law, and for which he made a very vigorous effort in another part of this revision, and which was voted down. The House voted down the proposition when it was offered in another place, and the House is now being called upon to vote on the same proposition, in effect, substantially the same thing, which was voted down a few days ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. The gentleman from Louisiana was referring to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], of course?

Mr. WATKINS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asked unanimous consent to modify his amendment, which the Chair believes was objected to.

Mr. CULLOP. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland if he will not kindly withdraw his objection. This is an important matter. The chairman of the committee says he is in sympathy with such legislation, as I understand it. Now, it will not hurt the section to which it is made a proviso.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], I appeal to him to take his turn at the bat at another place and time, and not perhaps destroy this amendment, which is of grave importance to the laboring people of this country, which will give them the right to go to the Supreme Court with their litigation when stricken down by the courts of the State. I appeal to him to withhold his amendment until he has worked it out in a rational manner, in order that Members may treat the subject as it deserves to be and on its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 21.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland. The gentleman from Maryland made a very true statement when he told the committee that this was not by any means a new subject. The amendment, in substance, has been approved by both State associations and the National Bar Association many times. So true is that, Mr. Chairman, that they have recommended that action should be taken in direct accordance and almost the language of the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Maryland. After all, Mr. Chairman, the question presented is a very simple proposition. It is merely this, that the right of appeal should exist in this case, as it does in all others, on behalf of the aggrieved party, whoever he may be. That when the decision has been rendered against the plaintiff in a case he shall have the same right of review on appeal that the defendant has and vice versa. That is certainly a rule of equity and of justice. The rule that limits the right of appeal, or the provision of the statute that limits the right of appeal to only one party in the controversy, is certainly anomalous and indefensible. If it has existed for so long, it is a reproach to us, and not a reason why we should not change it.

There have been enumerated instances given and stated in which wrongs have been committed, or in which, rather, the remedy of the wrong that has been committed has been lost, because of this provision of the statute. Let us change it now, Mr. Chairman, as everybody who has given the subject proper consideration admits we ought to do. Let us change it in accordance with common sense, in accordance with the views of jurists, in accordance with the views of the bar of the United States, in accordance with the views of everyone who has given the subject any consideration and believes in justice in the administration of our courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DILLON and Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington rose.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I already had an amendment pending at the desk, which I had deferred until this last amendment had been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 144, line 3, after the word "appeal," strike out "or such an abstract or statement thereof as is provided for in the next ensuing section."

Mr. WATKINS. This, Mr. Chairman, is simply for the purpose of correcting the language there, because there is no next ensuing section now in the bill dealing with abstract of testimony on appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman over there wanted to offer an amendment to that section.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning a section of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized when the Clerk reaches the close of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana desire to offer his amendment now?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes, sir. I thought the gentleman from Washington desired to address the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 179, line 22, after the word "court," strike out the words "of the Territory."

Mr. WATKINS. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is that?

Mr. WATKINS. The expression there, "Territory of Porto Rico," should be corrected. Everywhere "Porto Rico" is used without using the words "Territory of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, there is another committee amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 179, line 23, after the word "Hawaii," strike out the word "or," and insert after the words "Porto Rico" the following, "or the Canal Zone."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 180, line 18, after the word "Hawaii," strike out the words "or Porto Rico" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or the Canal Zone."

Mr. MANN. Do you strike out "Porto Rico"?

Mr. WATKINS. My attention was called off when the amendment was read. I ask that it be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 180, line 18, after the word "Hawaii," strike out the words "or Porto Rico" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or the Canal Zone."

Mr. MANN. You do not want to strike out "Porto Rico"?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes; because under the law those appeals must be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no court of appeals designated to which those appeals from Porto Rico would go. The law relating to Porto Rico provides expressly that these cases shall go direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MANN. As to Porto Rico?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is that true of the United States district court of Porto Rico? I thought that was part of the New York district.

Mr. WATKINS. All appeals in Porto Rico go direct to the United States Supreme Court regardless of what court they originate in. That is the information I have from the law clerk for the Bureau of Insular Affairs, under the War Department.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is sure, all right.

Mr. WATKINS. That is my information.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression that they took appeals from the United States district court of Porto Rico to the New York Court of Appeals.

Mr. WATKINS. The information I have received is from authoritative sources.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, while we are considering the revision of the Civil Code, I think it would be appropriate to call the attention of the House and of the country to the methods adopted by the Democratic Party in its legislation. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to talk out of order, so that I may express my views on the subject; or, if there is any objection to that, I will yield the floor and ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I would expect to do that, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. He asks for five minutes, and also to extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks permission to address the House for five minutes and to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and to talk regardless of the amendment before the House. Is there objection?

Mr. BRYAN. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman; but I want to urge that after this I am going to pursue the policy of calling for the regular order as much as I can, so as to permit the conclusion of this bill. Of course, I have no objection to the gentleman speaking.

Mr. MADDEN. I am going out of town.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would couple with that the request that some gentleman on this side may have five minutes in which to speak out of order, if he wishes.

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection to that at all; but would it be proper that I should ask it?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, I make the request in conjunction with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks to modify the request so as to include the request that some Member on that side of the House may also have a like amount of time to speak out of order.

Mr. BRYAN. I shall not object, with the understanding that if a request is made for more time than that I shall object. I want to get this bill through.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, "a government of the people, for the people, and by the people." No simpler definition was ever given of our Government than that from the lips of the immortal Lincoln, and none has been more quoted by Americans of all party affiliations and all respectable political opinions. You gentlemen on that side of the House are as fond of quoting this sentiment of the great emancipator as are we on this side, and I think you believe in it in the abstract as sincerely as we do. We also all believe in government by majorities, and we follow that law in this House, except when revolution charges the atmosphere and there is an opportunity to form alliances to defeat the majority.

Four years ago we had such a revolution in this House, and there followed a new policy, fathered by that new majority, of electing committees by the House instead of permitting the Speaker to perform that service for the House as its chief servant. We are now operating under that new policy, and our honored Speaker has become the moderator over our deliberations instead of the great majority leader, for which he is so well qualified, as was demonstrated by his tact and courage and generalship when he led the minority and by an alliance with the insurgents on this side took command in the most successful revolution we have ever had in the House. That revolution was in the name of greater individual liberty and responsibility for the Representatives, and the overthrow of bossism and Cæsarism in the organization of the House. There were then sounded many eulogies on the new system of government of the House, and there are still some—not many, but some—Members of the majority who still defend it as a great reform, but we have had manifestations here, even on the majority side, of dissatisfaction and complaint that the individual freedom and responsibility for the Representative has not come into full realization; that caucus rule has suppressed that individualism even more than did the power of the Speaker and the Committee on Rules in the older days of "Cannonism."

I propose to discuss one phase of this new control. I am not opposed to caucus rule on political questions, and I have no criticism of the plan of the majority party in settling its political policies in caucus. I would do the same. But the caucus is supposed to represent the majority of the party, and the majority of Democrats ought to be able to declare the party policy to be followed in legislation. It may be that it does, for I have no means of knowing how you vote in caucus, except from the complaints I hear from those who have not been able to control, and I have heard complaints from so many Democrats of caucus rule and presidential dictation that I have wondered where the caucus votes came from that controlled.

This is a great country, with nearly 100,000,000 people, and they have 435 Representatives on this floor to transact their business. You of the majority have 290 of these Representatives, while we of the opposition—Republicans, Progressive Republicans, and Progressives—have only one-half that number. The Democrats on this floor come from every part of the Union more generally than ever before. Only the States of Vermont, Idaho, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Utah, Oregon, and Washington, are without Democratic Representatives here. So the legislation of this House, by the Democratic majority, ought to fairly represent the whole country. Does it?

The Census Office, in its last abstract of the population, divides the country into three grand divisions—the North, the South, and the West. The North includes New England, the North Atlantic, the East North Central, and the West North Central divisions extending from Maine and New Jersey to the Rocky Mountains, taking in 21 States. The South includes the South Atlantic, East South Central, and West South Central divisions, with 16 States. The West includes the Mountain and Pacific divisions, with 11 States. The 21 States here given as North had, in 1910, 55,757,115 population, with 32,669,705 given as urban and 23,087,410 as rural (the rural population being that outside of cities of 2,500). The 16 States given as South, including all the old Southern States and Oklahoma, had 20,389,330 population, divided as 6,623,838 urban and 22,765,492 as rural. The 11 Western States had 6,825,821 population, divided into 3,329,840 urban and 3,495,981 rural. This grouping and these figures are those of the Census Office—not mine.

From them it will be seen that the North had nearly 10,000,000 more urban than rural population, the South more than three times as much rural population as urban, and the West 166,000 more rural than urban. In the South the rural population still dominates in the proportion it did in the whole country 50 years ago. The North and the West have changed in the character of population. I do not complain of the condition in either section of the country. The dominance of the rural may be a good thing in the South, and it might be better if it also dominated in the North, but it does not. We must deal with conditions as they are, not as we would have them. We are here to represent the people, whether they live in town or country, whether they are in the shops or on the farms. This obligation ought to rest on Democrats and Republicans alike. But does it? You have 290 Members here, and from these three grand divisions of the country I have named, there are 154 Democrats from the North, 125 from the South, and 11 from the West. You have adopted the policy and the rule of electing the committees of this House, and how have you done it?

The Democrats from the South are not in the majority, but they control and dominate the legislative machinery of the House. They have the chairmanships of all the great committees with the exception of those on Appropriations and Invalid Pensions. The able gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the old war veteran, Gen. SHERWOOD, is chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I might add that my friend and colleague, Dr. FOSTER, is chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining. The Committee on Appropriations prepares the appropriation bills to meet the necessary expenses of the Government, without which it must stop, and it has done its work well, but no man in the House has more often warned us of the extravagance of the majority of the House, in spending the people's money, than the gentleman from New York.

The other great committees which report appropriations, which might be called desirable rather than necessary, have southern men for chairmen. They have the chairmanships of the Committees on Agriculture, Foreign Affairs, Rivers and Harbors, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post Office and Post Roads, and Indian Affairs, which handle appropriation bills, and they have the chairmanships of the Committees on Ways and Means; Banking and Currency; Coinage, Weights, and Measures; District of Columbia; Census; Claims; Education; Immigration and Naturalization; Patents; Public Lands; Insular Affairs; Public Buildings and Grounds; Judiciary; Revision of the Laws; Territories; Interstate and Foreign Commerce; and Rules. Southern men are chairmen of 35 of the 58 committees of this House, and they are the most important committees in preparing the legislation and controlling the machinery of the House. How did they get them under this rule of electing committees and by the votes of the majority in the Democratic caucus?

The North has the Speaker, but he is not a czar, not even a member of the board of directors who control the business of the House. The South, with considerably less than a majority in the Democratic caucus, managed to pick most of the plums. They are able, experienced, and honorable gentlemen, but they do not represent the majority of the majority under this new order of selecting committees, and they represent less than one-third of the whole population. With the exception of the genial and able majority leader, they represent the rural population of the country. Mr. UNDERWOOD represents a great industrial city, but I had to get a gazetteer to locate the homes of the other great Democratic leaders from the South who sit at the head of the great committees of the House.

So you gentlemen of the South have come back into your father's house with more power than you ever had, not only to direct the House but to control the majority of the House with a minority membership of that majority. You also have control in the Senate, with southern men sitting at the head of all the great committees, except those on Military Affairs, Pensions, Public Lands, Indian Affairs, Interstate Commerce, and Territories. You also have a southern man for President, elected from New Jersey, it is true, but with all the ideals of the South and the lack of experience and interest, I sometimes feel, with the teeming urban population of the North. In his Cabinet are four southern men, in control of the Treasury Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Justice, and the Post Office Department. Then we may add Mr. Bryan as another member of the Cabinet who is distinctly rural in all his tastes and understandings.

Your party still looks to the old ideas of legislating for the people who live in the country, and yet you were perfectly willing to sacrifice the farmers of the North and West by striking down the tariff on all their products. You were willing to try to reduce the cost of living for our northern cities by taking it out of the northern farmers.

You have, however, shown great interest in the work and condition of the farmers of the South and Southwest. With the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the House from South Carolina and that in the Senate from Oklahoma, it is perhaps natural that there should be more attention given to the crying needs of the farmers of the southern section than to those of the North in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and that we should now be appropriating millions of dollars to destroy the boll weevil, the cigarette beetle, the prairie dog, and the snapping turtle—some one suggested in the Senate. We had a filibuster here because the bill for rural credit banking had not been put on the program. Here we have been for months talking about how we can help the farmers of the country, when the estimates of population by the Census Office indicate that 49 per cent of the American people live in cities of more than 2,500 and 40 per cent live in cities of more than 8,000.

My own city of Chicago has a larger population than that of any State in the South, except Texas. New York has more people than have a half dozen States in the South, and there are more people living in cities of more than 100,000 than can be found in all the States of this ruling section of the country. And yet the policy of the Democratic Party here has been to legislate for the rural population and against the people who live and work in cities and help to maintain this Government. You have gone on the theory that the man who has his home in the city is living off the farmers, that there is no legitimate trade except from the tail gate of a farmer's wagon, and that the man who seeks any other safety for his money than an old stocking is trying to corner the money of the people. You are anxious to improve the condition of the farmers, but you leave the men in the shops to take care of themselves and compete with all the world.

You are frightened by the word "subsidy" except when it gets into the Agricultural appropriation bill. You are fearful that the railroads may earn dividends, and you are willing to build railroads at Government expense in Alaska and wagon roads in every country district to facilitate the rural delivery of the mails, which is now costing many millions more than its revenues. Your sense of proportion is not fully developed to enable you to appreciate the full meaning of "a government of the people, for the people, and by the people." Your leaders live in the rural districts, and they see only the country and its products, forgetting that the manufactured product of this country is double in value that of the agricultural product. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture the other day asserted that the farmers of this country paid 70 per cent of the cost of the Federal Government, when any child knows that the people in the cities pay the great bulk of the customs tax—if it is paid by the consumers, as you say—and that they pay three-fourths of the internal revenue, the corporation tax, and the income tax. You are still living in the past, but the country has grown, and the city man now has a right to some consideration from Congress. He has been going along supporting his own municipal government and contributing the larger share of the cost of State and Federal Government, and he has not complained; but the time is here when he will send men to Congress who will have a broader view of a government of the people, and not simply legislation for the rural districts.

Only a year ago you gentlemen from the South were almost stampeded from the constitutional amendment for the election of Senators by the people when the Bristow amendment appeared to continue the control of Congress over the times and places for election. You complained that it would be the end of State rights and permit the Federal Government to send the Army into the States to control your elections with the bayonet; and your impetuous leader from Alabama, Capt. HOBSON, then declared that "the integrity, the prosperity, and the perpetuity of the United States depend more upon safeguarding the principle of local self-government in the individual States than upon any other principle of government."

But now comes the gallant captain with another constitutional amendment by which he proposes to have the Federal Government go into every State and city and town and regulate their domestic affairs. Capt. HOBSON goes a little further than some of you, but he represents the new centralizing theory of the Democratic Party, especially to employ Federal power in meddling with the business and industry and domestic life of the people. You forget all your old State rights doctrine when you are in control here. You boast that your President has set business free, and we admit that he has set millions of men free from daily labor and the wages that went with that labor. He has built a gallows higher than Haman's and has hanged prosperity. He has assumed the leadership of the Democratic Party, in legislative halls as well as in the Executive office, and has here set aside your own chosen leaders to command the caucus, with invisible government. He has made the Congress of the United States his stenographic corps to write into law what he dictates, and in this he has his eye only on his own old ideas, formulated in the privacy of his study, without taking a comprehensive view of the United States. You and your President have lost sight of the idea of a "government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

There are at the present time 289 Democrats in the House and one vacancy in a Democratic district—Judge Clayton—which will return a Democrat.

On the basis of 290 Democrats, the Democratic majority over all is 145.

A quorum of the Democratic caucus is 146, and a majority of that caucus—74—has the power to make a caucus decree. Several times in this and the last Congress a bare quorum transacted business in the caucus, and it is said that on several occasions business was transacted without a quorum. Anyhow, 74 members, a majority of a quorum, have the power and have exercised it of decreeing what shall be the legislative program and in what form bills shall come before the House. The action of this majority of a quorum in a Democratic caucus absolutely binds the other 216 Democratic members, except the few who, for constitutional reasons or because of promises made to their constituents, as in the cases of the Louisiana Members respecting sugar and Mr. SISSON, of Mississippi, on the currency bill, refused to be bound. The southern Democrats have 35 chairmanships, including Maryland, one of the South Atlantic States.

You were in favor of free silver to put up the farmer's prices and in favor of free trade to put them down. You destroyed the sugar industry of Louisiana and Texas by putting sugar on the free list, because you said it was an artificial and not a legitimate industry and should not be fostered by the Government; yet you appropriate $100,000 in the Agricultural bill to encourage cattle raising and cereal production in the sugar-growing sections of the South.

The Clayton antitrust bill just passed by the House does more to disturb the business activities of the country than any other legislation which has been considered by this or any other Congress during my recollection.

It will be noted that the industrial and financial interests of the North, where the greatest development along these lines has taken place, had no part in the preparation of the legislation which so vitally affects these interests; that no representative of either the Democratic or Republican Parties from north of Mason and Dixon's line was permitted to assist in the preparation of the Clayton antitrust bill. The section of the country represented in Congress by men having experience in business and understanding the country's business needs was ignored in the preparation of this bill, and the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which framed the bill consisted of three southern Democrats—Clayton, of Eufaula, Ala.; CARLIN, of Alexandria, Va.; and FLOYD, of Yellville, Ark. Whoever heard of any business being done at either of these places, and is it any wonder that the business of the country is paralyzed with the legislation to regulate it coming from such a source? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that the greatest man who ever made a track upon the earth, who brought more of happiness and of blessing to mankind than any other person who ever trod the earth, did not come from the busy marts of trade. He did not come from New York or Chicago, but He came from Nazareth. The great men in every period of the history of the world, who have wrought mightily for the interests of mankind, have come from the rural districts, the places where people get near to nature and to nature's God. These men have come from the Eufaulas and Alexandrias and Yellvilles of the earth, not from the Chicagos, where the Lorimers hold sway, where a nation has been made to blush with shame and the Senate of the United States has been compelled by the force of the facts to expel from its membership a Senator, coming not from Eufaula, not from Alexandria, not from Yellville, but from Chicago, where they do things, where business is transacted, where the people know how to transact business, and where they make a business of politics and a business of government, and where their patriotism is measured by the dollars and cents flowing into their pockets. Yes, this Democratic Congress has seen fit not to go to Chicago, not to go to the places where Lorimers are produced, but to go to the places where the great heart of the people finds sympathy among those who are reared there, where the people who come from these rural spots have an eye to the interests of the people of the country and not to the dollar changers, not to the money changers, whom Christ scourged from the temple, but out in the rural land where nature smiles, where the people are in constant touch with nature and with nature's God. The Democratic Party is proud of that record, Mr. Chairman. We are glad that we went to that region, and not to the soiled streets of Chicago to get these men. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will only lift up his eyes from the mud and mire of Chicago and look across the country toward the vine-clad hills of old Virginia, he will see that the rural surroundings at Monticello contributed to the wealth of the Nation the matchless mentality of Thomas Jefferson. If he will only read the history of his country, he will learn that when the Republic was in extremis the eyes of the people were turned toward Abraham Lincoln, the rail splitter of rural Illinois, and not toward some Lorimer of State Street or Michigan Avenue in the great city of Chicago. When the armies of the Union needed a real general, they selected Ulysses S. Grant, the product of a tanyard; and when the soldiers of the Southern Confederacy desired a chieftain of approved ability and great military genius, they selected Robert E. Lee, born, reared, and educated amid pastoral scenes familiar to every country boy in America.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, I would advise my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to read the history of his own country and learn that the great majority of the men who have builded and defended this Republic came from the rural districts. Yes; the Democratic Party is proud of the Eufaulas, the Alexandrias, and the Yellvilles which mark its pathway as it has journeyed in its mission to bless mankind. The Democratic Party has never become tainted with the slime of "big business" as it is conducted in the Chicagos of the land by the financial Lorimers who dominate the Republican Party. The Democratic Party is essentially rural; living, breathing, and having its existence near to nature and to nature's God, and drinking deep from the spring of pure and undefiled freedom.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. What became of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. There was an amendment pending.

Mr. WATKINS. There is an amendment pending. The last amendment offered has not been voted on.

Mr. MANN. On page 180, line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment striking out Porto Rico?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 364. It shall be lawful for the Secretary of State, under his hand and seal of office, to order the person so committed to be delivered to such person as shall be authorized, in the name and on behalf of such foreign Government, to be tried for the crime of which such person shall be so accused, and such person shall be delivered up accordingly; and it shall be lawful for the person so authorized to hold such person in custody, and to take him to the territory of such foreign Government, pursuant to such treaty. If the person so accused shall escape out of any custody to which he shall be committed, or to which he shall be delivered, it shall be lawful to retake such person in the same manner as any person accused of any crime against the laws in force in that part of the United States to which he shall so escape, may be retaken on an escape.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, there is a typographical error in line 15, page 187. The letter "c" is omitted from the word "crime." I ask unanimous consent to correct the error.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the correction indicated by the gentleman from Louisiana will be made in print.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 376. In all cases where the laws of the United States provide that fugitives from justice shall be delivered up, the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or, in case of the illness, absence, or other disability of the chief justice, or when any such application shall be certified to him by the chief justice, any associate justice of said court, shall cause to be apprehended and delivered up such fugitive from justice who shall be found within the District, in the same manner and under the same regulations as the executive authorities of the several States are required to do by the provisions of sections 371 and 372 of this chapter; and all the executive and judicial officers are required to obey the lawful precepts or other process issued for that purpose, and to aid and assist in such delivery.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to revert to section 373.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to section 373. Is there objection?

Mr. WATKINS. If it is anything of sufficient importance to justify it, I shall not object; but unless I know the reason for it, and I think it of sufficient importance to justify returning to the section, I shall have to object to it.

Mr. BRYAN. Then I ask the gentleman to yield to me five minutes.

Mr. WATKINS. I will reserve the right to object, and let the gentleman proceed for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this the same gentleman who was demanding the regular order a few minutes ago?

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman from Washington has decided not to make any point of order against himself.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to proceed for five minutes, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have only four pages to read before reaching the end of the bill, and the gentleman stated a few minutes ago that he was very desirous to reach the end of the bill. I do not think he ought to change his mind.

Mr. BRYAN. I am surprised that the gentleman from Wisconsin should object to the matter I am going to refer to.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is something important, I shall not object.

Mr. BRYAN. I am about to proceed now to give the Democratic Party an opportunity to obey its platform, a section of it written in the most direct and plain terms that could possibly be conceived by any gentleman, no matter how great a platform writer he might be.

Section 373 of this bill provides for the arrest of parties who desert from ships. The platform of the Democratic Party is as absolutely against laws permitting the arrest of individuals for desertion as any platform that has ever been written. That plank of the Democratic platform of 1912 reads as follows:

MERCHANT MARINE.

We believe in fostering, by constitutional regulation of commerce, the growth of a merchant marine which shall develop and strengthen the commercial ties which bind us to our sister Republics of the south, but without imposing additional burdens upon the people and without bounties or subsidies from the Public Treasury. We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea, and we favor the repeal of all laws and the abrogation of such of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with desertion or with violation of their contract of service.

The platform says that such arrests are in violation of the Constitution and ought not to be permitted, and pledges the Democratic Party to enact laws against arresting men merely because they do not want to serve the master of a particular ship any longer.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman from Washington knows that during the recent discussion of the Democratic platform it was said that it was adopted late at night, when the convention was demoralized.

Mr. BRYAN. This was not adopted late at night, when the convention was demoralized, because it was a proposition considered thoroughly and repeatedly in this House, and the Democratic Party has gone on record against providing means for arresting men who do not want any longer to serve on a particular ship and exercise their constitutional right of quitting that employment.

The seamen's bill that was introduced by a Member of this House, Mr. Wilson, now Secretary of Labor, was passed here, and later on that same bill was used by Senator LA FOLLETTE as a basis of the present pending seamen's bill, which passed the Senate about eight months ago, known as Senate bill 136. I understand that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I am a member, is going to report that bill in here for consideration some time, possibly before we adjourn. According to statements that have been made, it will be reported before adjournment, unless we adjourn in a big hurry.

I think this section ought to be stricken out, and if the gentleman wants to aid the Democratic Party in keeping its platform pledges, they will strike out this law which provides that a man who does not want to work for another man may be arrested and compelled to do that service. They come across the ocean under contracts and conditions that involve peonage and every kind of a contract that can be conceived of to destroy their self-respect and take away their constitutional rights, and Democrats, recognizing the views of the people of the country, have adopted a platform, and I hope that this committee will now consent to strike this section out, thereby redeeming solemn pledges made in good faith and relied upon by the public.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Is not the gentleman talking into the air, because this statute is based on treaties with foreign Governments?

Mr. BRYAN. The platform does not respect foreign treaties. It says that these treaties must be eliminated. We are not to have treaties with foreign countries that will permit citizens to be arrested because they do not want to work for Jones or on a particular ship, and that compels them to work on that particular ship. Such treaties the platform promises to abrogate. It says they are unconstitutional, therefore, of course, void. I say to you that this is an important proposition and one on which the whole country has been stirred up. When you reenact this section, you have a positive, binding reenactment of this old law relative to the desertion of seamen that is, as I have already said, a plain, palpable, unmistakable violation of your platform; and not only that, but a violation of the principles of human right and human liberty. Your own platform says this. The public conscience of the people and of the rank and file of the Democratic Party of this country compelled the Baltimore convention to put this into its platform.

You are about to reenact a legislative outrage that the people have denounced and you have solemnly promised to abrogate.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I recognize and appreciate the solicitude of the gentleman from Washington, a member of another political party, for the welfare of the Democratic Party. We have endeavored as far as possible to eliminate all politics from this bill and to eliminate politics from the discussion of the bill. Having passed over that section, and in view of the fact that the bill which the gentleman speaks of will be presented at this session of Congress, which will grant the relief, I object to returning to the section.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read section 380.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of saying a word with reference to this bill generally. I do not remember how many Calendar Wednesdays have been devoted to the consideration of this bill. I was not in favor myself of taking up the bill at the time that consideration was commenced, because of the length of time that it would take, but hoped that the bill might be disposed of in some other way. However, our friend, the gentleman from Louisiana, had his way about it at the time, and has kept the bill before the House on Calendar Wednesday. I think I voice the sentiment of the House and the Members of the House in congratulating the gentleman from Louisiana for the method in which he has handled the bill, and thank him for the able and courteous treatment that he has accorded to all the Members of the House, and the very intelligent consideration he has given to the bill in the House, as well as before it was brought into the House. [Applause.]

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity of thanking the gentleman from Illinois for his kind expressions. I wish to state that the various amendments offered by the membership on the other side of the House, which have been accepted and incorporated in the bill, have been greatly to the benefit of the measure. I particularly take this occasion to thank the gentleman from Illinois for various suggestions he has made, which have been extremely valuable. Naturally there were provisions overlooked in the preparation of a bill of this magnitude and the gentleman from Illinois, with his usual diligence and research, has been able to add valuable suggestions and render material assistance in the consideration of the bill. I am glad of the opportunity to express myself. I would have done the same thing if the gentleman had not taken occasion to say what he has. It was my intention to thank the gentleman from Illinois and the membership on that side of the House for the faithful efforts they have made to improve the bill as originally reported to the House. I believe as this measure now stands it is the most important and beneficial codification which has been made. I do not think there is a solitary amendment placed in the bill but that can be readily enacted into law. I do not think it will be necessary when the bill gets into the House to ask for a separate vote on a single amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This section is the repealing section, and one of the statutes that this section involves is the statute in reference to the arrest of seamen. I am going to speak for a minute on this feature here. I did not quite finish before. Here is the plank in the Democratic platform which I referred to and wanted to read a while ago. Now, while you are repealing the statute, I hope that the Democratic membership will conclude to keep it repealed. Here is the sacred text of Democracy. Will not you Democrats heed it?

We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea; and we favor the repeal of all laws and the abrogation of so much of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with desertion in violation of their contract of service. Such laws and treaties are un-American and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

"Such laws are un-American." How can the Democratic Party escape conviction on the charge of itself being un-American if it enacts this law for arresting seamen for deserting, which it has so plainly declared is an un-American law?

Mr. Chairman, I say that is not politics; that is the Constitution of the United States that the platform referred to, and it pledges the party to repeal those statutes. What good is it if you repeal it as you are doing in this pending section and reenact it in stronger terms? Of course, we all agree with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a moment ago. We have learned during our intimate relationship with the chairman of the committee, Judge WATKINS, to love him, because he is worthy of our love and confidence and respect for his ability and the way that he has done things during the consideration of this bill. That is all right. We join with the gentleman from Illinois in all that; but can not I ask the gentleman from Louisiana to reconsider his objection, to revert to that section and obey this plank in the platform of the Democratic Party, and not let the records show that he, the chairman of one of the great Democratic committees of this House, opposes the repeal of the law the party pledges itself to repeal? You did pledge yourself to repeal this law, and the seamen of this country and the friends of the seamen of this country and just men everywhere are demanding that the Democratic Party do it; but it is more than probable that this is going to be the only statute passed this year which will involve this subject, and yet you are enacting the "un-American," "unconstitutional" law all over again.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the Democratic platform promised a repeal of the act providing for the arrest of seamen.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I read from their platform.

Mr. MANN. Is not that being complied with by this repeal provision? Is there anything in the platform respecting the enactment of a new law?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes; that is another case of molasses to catch flies.

Mr. MANN. Is not that the way the rest of the platform is construed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman believe that we can repeal a treaty here to-day?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no. I merely ask that you repeal a law and enact a new one.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not this law founded on treaties upon this language:

SEC. 373. On application of a consul or vice consul of any foreign Government having a treaty with the United States stipulating for the restoration of seamen deserting, made in writing, stating that the person therein named has deserted from a vessel of any such Government, while in any port of the United States, and on proof by the exhibition of the register of the vessel, ship's roll, or other official document that the person named belonged, at the time of desertion, to the crew of such vessel, it shall be the duty of any court, judge, United States commissioner, justice, or other magistrate having competent power, to issue warrants to cause such person to be arrested for examination.

Is not this act based on treaties with foreign Governments, and would the gentleman violate those treaties, and can we now abrogate treaties of that kind?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, the platform especially took up that question of the treaty, and a lot of campaign orators out there on the Pacific coast, speaking for the Democratic nominees against their opponents, urged that the Democratic Party was not going to be bound by any such treaties as that, and they read the platform for proof. The platform says such laws are un-American and unconstitutional; therefore they are void. Of course we have the right to abrogate and ignore such treaties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 381. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after January 1, 1915.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to extend my thanks and the thanks of the Democratic side of this House to the leader of the Progressive Party of the Republican side of the House for the great interest that he takes in the welfare of the Democratic Party.

Mr. BRYAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but the leader is not present.

Mr. BOOHER. Without the gentleman's sympathy, and without the gentleman's aid, I am inclined to think the Democratic Party would go to ruin, and I am sure it would go to ruin if it followed his advice very much. The gentleman in his first statement of this plank in the platform led the House to believe that the platform applied to the deserters from the Army and the Navy of the United States, and that the Democratic Party in its platform had pledged itself to repeal all laws for the arrest of deserters. When he now reads it he finds that it does not apply to deserters at all, but that it applies only to seamen who are arrested and taken off vessels because they have violated a contract, and the party declared itself in favor of the repeal of such laws, and this law we have just passed repeals that.

Mr. BRYAN. I hope the gentleman will yield to me long enough to deny that I made that statement. I made no such statement with reference to deserters of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman said deserters, and he did not qualify it at all, and that word is broad enough to cover them all.

I want to say to the gentleman from Washington that he will have all that he can attend to if he attends to the wants and needs of the Progressive Party in this country. He need not come over to advise us. I would rather take the advice from the leaders on this side of the House. I think they are better qualified to give disinterested advice to Democrats.

Mr. BRYAN. But I read from the gentleman's own platform.

Mr. BOOHER. I shall not attempt to advise the gentleman or any members of the Progressive Party. They have their leaders, and should follow their advice. I shall not take or accept the construction put upon any plank of the Democratic platform by the gentleman from Washington, because I do not think he is broad enough in his exposition of these matters to give the planks of anybody's platform except the Progressive platform the true meaning that should be attached to them, and he could not give the true meaning of that platform, because it covers everything in the earth above and the sea below, and it means nothing after you have read or considered it. The gentleman ought to construe his own party platform and ought to look after the interests of his own party and let Democrats look after the interests of the Democratic Party.

The legislation that the gentleman favors has already passed this Democratic House, and we hope to see it become a law before the end of the Sixty-third Congress.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is correct in saying this bill violates the Democratic platform. The Democratic platform was framed with a view to indorsing the seamen's bill which was passed in the Sixty-first Congress and which is now, I believe, on the calendar, which seeks to abolish involuntary servitude at sea and abolishes the arrest of seamen on foreign vessels and their return to those vessels for compulsory service. That undoubtedly is intended to be repealed by the seamen's bill, and the treaties which require such legislation are expressly abrogated in that seamen's bill. And when we here reenact that legislation it is in the direct teeth of the Democratic platform, and I think the gentleman from Missouri, who made this motion to strike out the last word, is mistaken when he says it does not violate it. The plank of the Democratic platform for 1912 in reference to this subject reads as follows:

We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea; and we favor the repeal of all laws and the abrogation of so much of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with desertion or with violation of their contract of service. Such laws and treaties are un-American and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

That had reference to sections 15 and 16 of the seamen's bill then pending, and which failed because not approved by President Taft, which read as follows:

SEC. 15. That section 5280 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, repealed, and that section 4081 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following proviso: "Provided, That this section and the foregoing sections 4079 and 4080 shall in no case be held or construed to require or authorize the arrest, imprisonment, or delivering up of any deserter or deserting seaman to the vessel from which he has deserted, unless the application in writing required thereby shall allege, and on examination it be made to appear, that such deserter or deserting seaman has been guilty on board of such vessel of some act or omission which is a criminal offense under the laws of the foreign nation to which such vessel belongs, other than having withdrawn, or being about to withdraw, himself from the control and discipline of the master and officers of the vessel." That all treaties in conflict with this act be, and are hereby, abrogated, and the President of the United States is required at once to so notify every nation having any such treaty.

SEC. 16. That this act shall take effect, as to all vessels of the United States, 90 days after its passage, and as to foreign vessels 12 months after its passage, save and except that such parts hereof as provide for the abrogation of any stipulation by treaty or convention with any foreign nation shall only take effect after such notice and at the expiration of such time as may be required by the terms of such treaty, stipulation, or convention.

The section we are about to reenact is as follows:

SEC. 373. On application of a consul or vice consul of any foreign Government having a treaty with the United States stipulating for the restoration of seamen deserting, made in writing, stating that the person therein named has deserted from a vessel of any such Government, while in any port of the United States, and on proof by the exhibition of the register of the vessel, ship's roll, or other official document that the person named belonged, at the time of desertion, to the crew of such vessel, it shall be the duty of any court, judge, United States commissioner, justice, or other magistrate having competent power, to issue warrants to cause such person to be arrested for examination. If, on examination, the facts stated are found to be true, the person arrested, not being a citizen of the United States, shall be delivered up to the consul or vice consul, to be sent back to the dominions of any such Government; or, on the request and at the expense of the consul or vice consul, shall be detained until the consul or vice consul finds an opportunity to send him back to the dominion of any such Government. No person so arrested shall be detained more than two months after his arrest; but at the end of that time shall be set at liberty, and shall not be again molested for the same cause. If any such deserter shall be found to have committed any crime or offense his surrender may be delayed until the tribunal before which the case shall be depending or may be cognizable, shall have pronounced its sentence and such sentence shall have been carried into effect.

Now, this is clearly the proper time to carry out the platform pledge referred to, and if you fail to do so it will be up to you to explain.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I understand all the pro forma amendments have been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. They have been withdrawn.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. CULLOP having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RUSSELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15578, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill and all amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WATKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman withhold that for just a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I just want to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] may address the House for 25 minutes.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, let me make an inquiry first. I understand that the motion to reconsider and lay on the table was agreed to?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; it has been disposed of. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman permit a question? There is another bill to be taken up; so I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Ohio can get all the time he wants, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. That is a House Calendar bill and not a Union Calendar bill. I did not know the gentleman was in the Chamber, or I would not have suggested that there was no quorum present, which I withheld. I suggest to the gentleman this is a House Calendar bill, and the gentleman would not get time.

Mr. RUCKER. He can get time the same way he can get it now. I will say to the gentleman I am anxious to get on with this bill, but I am not objecting to it and I have not objected to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. The only point I want to make is this: The gentleman from Illinois will recognize that I want the floor this evening on another bill of importance.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's committee is on the call next, I think. I have no objection to the gentleman proceeding with his bill.

Mr. RUCKER. I have no objection, then.

Mr. MANN. In fact, I started to make a point of no quorum in order to get the gentleman here, not knowing he was here.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to keep the gentleman in a good humor, and I will yield to almost any suggestion he makes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, on June 8 the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] reiterated his oft-repeated charge that the rivers and harbors bill passed by the House at this session, as well as river and harbor bills passed by previous Congresses, were purely "pork-barrel" affairs, and that the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers were about to obtain more than a fair share of the proposed appropriations.

His tirade impugned the motives of the members of the Ohio Valley Improvement Association and the numerous voluntarily organized societies, composed of thousands and thousands of representative citizens throughout the length and breadth of our land, having for their purposes waterway improvement, and indicted the good faith of that large body of representative citizens from the Mississippi Valley who appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House at this session, headed by ex-Senator Percy, of Mississippi, and the Hon. Luke Wright, of Memphis, Tenn., and the Hon. T. C. Catchings, of Mississippi, formerly a Member of this House for 16 years and a former chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors. In other words, he held out to the country that the people of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys were the monumental grafters of the century—a most remarkable charge to be made by a Representative of this body who recently voted to take $35,000,000 of the people's money up to Alaska and blow it in on a wild-cat expedition in that land of ice and snow.

The gentleman seemed to be swift to vote $35,000,000 to assist the Alaskan coal miner in securing cheap transportation facilities for his product to the Pacific coast, but he is unalterably opposed to voting a dollar to assist Alaska's only formidable competitor, the great bituminous coal region tapped by the Ohio River and its numerous tributaries, to enable it to obtain cheap facilities for transporting its product to the Pacific coast.

He gives as a reason for refusing an appropriation for the further improvement of the Ohio River the fact that the yearly tonnage transported on this stream has decreased something like 4,000,000 in the last nine years. It seems to me that this ought to be a good reason why we should speedily complete canalizing the Ohio.

The gentleman forgets that at the time he voted $35,000,000 to improve the railway systems of Alaska he did so with the record of the hearings on that bill disclosing that the annual tonnage on nearly all of Alaska's railways had so decreased from the time of their installation that the revenues therefrom failed longer to pay their operating expenses, and in many instances was insufficient to pay the taxes thereon.

I believe that it is shown that one railway had escaped the hands of a receiver, but it was further shown that this railway was supported by the combined wealth of the Guggenheim family. If a decreasing railway traffic in Alaska is a sufficient reason for voting $35,000,000 as an initial relief for the railways of that Territory, why is not a decreasing river traffic a sufficient reason to vote a few millions for the improvement of the Ohio?

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. I will.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask if the gentleman can not defend the Ohio Valley without attempting to bring in Alaska and attempting to insult Alaska and her resources?

Mr. SWITZER. I yielded for a question. I did not understand that the gentleman wanted to interject remarks into my speech.

Mr. BRYAN. That is a question I asked—if you can not defend the Ohio River without insulting Alaska and her resources?

Mr. SWITZER. Ohio has been insulted by a Representative who voted for and supported the Alaskan bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will confine myself to my subject, and thereby probably get through sooner:

The volume of the future railway traffic of Alaska is purely a speculative proposition. Its total white population is about 36,000, scattered in mere handfuls over an area of 600,000 square miles. There must be an immense immigration to that region before any substantial increased railway traffic there can be hoped for.

Compare the Alaska situation with the Ohio Valley, if you please. Three million people reside upon and near the banks of the Ohio. A large part of eight great States, containing more than one-fourth of the population of the Nation, are drained by this stream and its tributaries. Upward of 200,000 coal diggers mine the bituminous coal of this region. Thousands and thousands are engaged in the immense lumber industries carried on within the confines of this district. The thousands and thousands of coke ovens and hundreds of manufacturing plants of every description and character give employment to hundreds of thousands of men. At the head of this stream lies the great Pittsburgh and Wheeling manufacturing district, which alone initiate a tonnage for transportation running up into the hundreds of millions of tons. There is no need of a further immigration to this region for the purpose of operating the immense industries to which I have just referred, especially during this era of business and industrial depression. The tonnage of this region is already created, an actual reality, and not an Alaskan dream, not a psychological apparition. It is well known as the greatest industrial region in the world. In order to increase the annual tonnage carried on the Ohio River it is only necessary to divert a few million tons from the railways to the water.

But when the increased prosperity arrives that we anticipate upon the opening of the Panama Canal there will be a still larger demand for an efficient water route from Pittsburgh to New Orleans to meet the increased demands for additional distribution facilities.

The Ohio River, and in its crippled condition, in the past, as borne out by statistics, has been a great factor in compelling the railways paralleling it to reduce their freight rates and keep the same at a reasonable figure. The benefits already accruing to the people of this region and the Nation can not be calculated.

I desire to state at this point that in using the Alaskan proposition as an illustration in this talk I do not want to be understood as impugning the motives of any Congressman who voted for the Alaskan bill or that I am censuring the people of Alaska for seeking financial assistance from the Government. On the other hand, I desire to congratulate the people of Alaska for exercising their good judgment in sending to Congress their present able and capable Delegate [Mr. WICKERSHAM], who has, single handed and alone and without assistance from any source other than a few words of encouragement uttered by the President from the throne, succeeded in landing for his constituency the largest donation his people will probably receive in scores of years to come.

But I feel that it ill becomes any Representative who has voted for the proposed stupendous internal improvement in Alaska to now object to further appropriations to complete a great internal waterway improvement, nearly half completed, in the very heart of the Nation. [Applause.]

Since the clearing up of the country and possible changes in climatic conditions, which in the past 25 years have rendered the navigable flow of the Ohio so uncertain as to destroy the trade once built up by the numerous steamers that at one time plied on the waters of this stream, and which has greatly jeopardized the lives of the employees of coal companies and their property while in transit on its waters, it is impossible for those engaged in river navigation to build up and hold a trade sufficient to defray the expenses of navigation and numerous losses.

Years ago the people of the Ohio Valley, believing that the canalization of this stream securing a depth of 9 feet the year around would enable steamboat lines to make regular trips from Pittsburgh to Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, and Cairo and maintain a definite schedule of time for arrivals, and that thereby a large passenger and freight trade could be built up and maintained by such lines and a water route 1,000 miles long, paralleling numerous railway routes, could be thus maintained for the certain transportation, especially of the heavy commodities—coal and iron—at the lowest cost anywhere in the world, petitioned Congress to embark in the present project for improving the Ohio.

Congress appointed a special board of Army engineers to investigate the proposition, and this board, after a preliminary survey of the stream and making a thorough investigation of the whole matter, and after their work had been inspected and supervised by the Board of Engineers of Rivers and Harbors, and extensive hearings held at all the important points along the Ohio River, reported in favor of the present project. The report contains the following comment:

> In making this recommendation the board realizes that it is suggesting a plan for river improvement on a scale not heretofore attempted in this country, but it believes that there will probably be in the near future a popular demand for the improvement of several streams on such scale. On account of the large commercial development of its shores and its connection with the lower Mississippi, now maintained in a navigable condition, the Ohio River is, in the opinion of the board, the one river of all others most likely to justify such work.

The scheme recommended and adopted by Congress purposes the construction of 64 locks and dams from Pittsburgh to Cairo at an estimated cost of $64,000,000. I believe that 7 of these locks and dams have been completed, 26 are now in the process of construction, and that there are 22 or 23 as yet untouched. The original scheme was to complete the project within 12 years, and, if carried out, the construction of the remainder of the proposed dams must be commenced within the next three or four years, as it will require some three or four years to erect the large dams in the lower part of the stream. One-third of the $64,000,000 has been appropriated and expended, and now, at a time when nearly one-half of the work has been completed, up rises the gentleman from Wisconsin, who says that we ought to stop and leave that vast amount of stone and concrete work which we have placed in the Ohio River as a monument to the stupidity and ignorance of the millions of people who inhabit the Ohio Valley, as well as to the Congresses which appropriated the money for such construction.

It will be impossible to at this time predict what increased tonnage will accrue by reason of the canalization of the stream. The work so far done, standing by itself, would be of little value—like a long chain, its strength is not much greater than its weakest link—all the locks and dams will have to be constructed and available for operation before we can begin to compute its possibilities.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman pardon me for a correction?

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. FREAR. I wish to make a correction in my own figures. They should be 41 instead of 29, according to the reports of the engineers for 1912.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman from Wisconsin boasts of the annual 41,000,000 tonnage of the Duluth Harbor, but he should bear in mind that the tonnage of his harbor would dwindle into insignificance were it not for the Soo Canal, which was constructed by the Government at millions of dollars of expense. The tonnage of the Soo Canal last year is estimated at 72,000,000 tons; the first few years after its opening it was only from four to ten million tons per year. By annual appropriations of millions of dollars on the part of the Government the gentleman from Wisconsin is able to have coal transported from the ports on Lake Erie to Duluth and Superior for 30 to 35 cents a ton, and by reason of these immense expenditures on the part of the Government the people of his State and of Michigan and Minnesota are enabled to market throughout Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia their millions and millions of tons of iron ore, some of which goes to make up his 41,000,000 tonnage for the Duluth Harbor. The gentleman from Wisconsin, of course, makes no complaint of the immense benefits his State receives and enjoys by reason of the expenditure of millions of dollars on the Great Lakes and their connecting links.

He and his constituents want the coal of the Ohio River Valley just as cheap as they can get it, and they must have an exceedingly cheap freight rate for the long haulage necessary to market their iron ore. But when it comes to providing cheap transportation facilities for the great Pittsburgh and Wheeling manufacturing district, which initiates annually hundreds of millions of tons of freight and which has been hampered during the past years of great Republican prosperity by a serious railway traffic congestion, he does not see his way clear to vote a few million dollars to provide a permanent water route from Pittsburgh down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to enable a great consuming region of Wisconsin's products to find a market for its products on the Pacific coast and in the Orient.

If this selfish spirit prevailed to any considerable extent among Members of Congress, improvement of our inland waterways would come to a standstill and the progress of our country be seriously retarded. But, happily for the Nation, the overwhelming majority of this body desire to make it possible to transport coal and iron and the innumerable products of iron 2,000 miles down the Ohio and Mississippi at an expense not exceeding 50 cents a ton.

The gentleman from Wisconsin seems to be charmed by the tone of certain articles recently appearing in newspapers and magazines approving his attack on the river and harbor bill. After three years of service as a Member of Congress, I have come to regard many of such performances as being of a self-serving character. The Congressman finding his name in print in a newspaper or magazine of large circulation feels himself highly complimented, and scarcely ever fails in turn to compliment the magazine or newspaper, and in this way they establish a sort of "mutual admiration society." The gentleman states that the Saturday Evening Post demands an investigation. In reply to this, I desire to say that the Ohio River project has been thoroughly investigated by a special Board of Army Engineers and by a Board of Engineers of Rivers and Harbors, and that extensive hearings were held by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of several Congresses before it was adopted.

The gentleman states that enough money has already been expended on the Mississippi River to build a railroad on both sides of the stream from Minneapolis to the river's mouth. I beg to state that if there had not been exercised some control over the waters of the Mississippi River in the past that it would have been impossible to have constructed hundreds and hundreds of miles of the railways now traversing the Mississippi Delta. And, in fact, there would have been no use to have built hundreds and hundreds of miles of the railways we find there to-day, as the region which now supports them would still be a dismal swamp. One of the strongest advocates for governmental control of the waters of the Mississippi who came before the Rivers and Harbors Committee at this session of Congress was the president of the Iron Mountain Railroad—Mr. Bush, of St. Louis, Mo.

How many miles of the 3,700 miles of railway in the delta would be there to-day if the Government had failed to make the expenditures referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and the people of the Mississippi delta had not contributed $67,000,000 of their own money in this effort to properly control the waters of the river? If these expenditures had not been made, it is doubtful whether there would have been exceeding 1,500,000 acres of land in cultivation, of the 3,500,000 acres being cultivated there to-day.

If the present project for controlling the waters of the Mississippi is carried out, it is estimated that 12,500,000 acres of land of the 16,000,000 of waste land of the delta to-day will be capable of cultivation and its fertility and productiveness will be unsurpassed any place in the world.

The gentleman from Wisconsin fails to see the yearly increase of hundreds of millions of dollars to the assets of the Nation, and which will finally run into the billions, accruing from the expenditures on the Mississippi River.

If he is sorely troubled as to the future tonnage transportation on the lower Mississippi, we of the Ohio Valley assure him that upon the proper canalization of the Ohio River there will be a continuous procession of coal fleets from that industrial region coursing their way down the Mississippi River, and that numerous water craft will be found continually going to and fro from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Mississippi. [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for a few minutes, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, who has just spoken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to speak. Is there objection?

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman has already made two long speeches upon this subject, and he refused to yield to an interruption on either one of those times. He was asked by three or four members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors if he would yield to an interruption, and he refused to do so.

Mr. FREAR. Pardon me; on what day did this occur?

Mr. BOOHER. I do not recall now on what days you made your speeches. I think that two-thirds of the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors asked you to yield to interruptions, and you refused to do so, even to answer a question that might be asked. However, so many of my friends think that I ought not to object, I will not do so now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. It is immaterial to me, Mr. Speaker, whether the gentleman from Missouri raises an objection or not. I think I shall be able to get into the RECORD without his aid.

I am here to-day against the doctor's orders. I understood an answer was to be offered to comments I have made on the Ohio River canalization scheme. I expect the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] could not say anything else than what he has just presented, and it will read well to his constituents if they do not know the other side of the case. When he goes before his constituents with the statement which he has made here, if he should ask them how many people in Ohio are receiving one cent's worth of benefit from this Ohio River canal, he will find he can count them on his fingers. I wish he would bring that record back here to the House.

Mr. Speaker, I have discussed the Ohio River at two different times, based upon the engineers' reports, not upon theory or upon generalizations which characterize statements just made by the gentleman from Ohio. Those engineers' reports can not be successfully denied. I can only speak of the Ohio River briefly now, but the engineers' report says that in the case of the Ohio River 34 per cent of the tonnage has been lost between 1905 and 1912, or in seven years, and this data I have quoted and given you the page on which it is contained in the record. The reports have shown further that the total traffic on the Ohio was 13,000,000 tons in 1905, 11,000,000 tons in 1906, 8,000,000 tons and a little over in 1912, and of that 8,000,000 only about 10 per cent went through the canal at Louisville.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to make the suggestion that the statistics for 1912 only covered nine months.

Mr. FREAR. Assuming that to be true—and I accept the statement of the gentleman—that is true practically every time, because there are three months of the year——

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield? Does not the gentleman know the river has not yet been canalized?

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I know that a number of locks have been constructed, and I have read the engineers' reports very thoroughly. I have satisfied myself as fully as has the gentleman. I am prepared to show that only about 1 per cent of high-grade freight to-day, as I have stated in my remarks, goes through the canal system of the Ohio River, and that freight costs the Government $45 per ton. We are confronted with this fact here, that $5,000,000 has been appropriated in the 1914 river and harbor bill for the canalization of the Ohio River. In this sundry civil bill before us to-day $4,176,000 is added, and that does not include the $350,900 which goes into open-river channel improvements. I have no fears if anyone will make an investigation of this subject but that he will come to one conclusion, except where he has some venture of his own which he is anxious to put through with this bill. I say this in all kindness to every Member of this House.

I have avoided personalities and I will continue to do so, because I realize the pressure brought to bear on individual Members. I have no criticism to make against any Member, and I care not who criticizes me. I believe I am doing my duty, no matter what inference the gentleman from Ohio may draw as to my motives. My motives are sincere, and I think my course will be approved before I have been long in this House. With the appropriation now asked for this canalization scheme, with the cost of maintenance and the cost of depreciation, the Government could build a railroad on both sides of the Ohio River and carry all the freight along its banks. That would be a good investment, but I believe $64,000,000 is being wasted on a worthless canal. I believe the railroad in Alaska, to which the gentleman refers, will be a success because of the freight it will carry, while the project for the canalization of the Ohio River will never be successful, according to engineers' reports which I have submitted.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SWITZER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman, before the request for unanimous consent is put, yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER]?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. SWITZER. All I want to do is to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] each asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, before yielding the floor, I again offer to answer any questions, as I did here the other day on two or three occasions, when every floor leader of the House of Representatives sat through my remarks. I shall be very glad to answer the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] and to discuss his $20,000,000 Missouri River project if the House will give me the opportunity.

Mr. BOOHER. It is the only time the gentleman has offered to reply to a question.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the fact that the RECORD disproves that entirely?

Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to premise my remarks with a restatement of appropriations made in recent years for rivers and harbors. Such statement was presented with my remarks appearing in the RECORD for March 24, on page 5410, and as it is brief I reinsert. Rivers and harbors are cared for in the regular pork-barrel bill and also in the sundry civil bill, which latter bill, now before us, carries $6,990,000 for 1914.

The following appropriations were made prior to 1914:

RAPID GROWTH OF EXPENDITURES.

Notwithstanding the great decrease in navigation on inland waters, apart from traffic on the Great Lakes, river and harbor appropriations have increased in inverse proportion, as appears from the following statement:

River and harbor appropriations, 1875–1913.

1876	6,643,517.50
1877	5,015,000.00
1878	None made.
1879	8,201,700.00
1880	7,846,600.00
1881	8,951,500.00
1882	11,441,300.00
1883	18,738,875.00
1884	None made.
1885	13,949,200.00
1886	None made.
1887	14,473,900.00
1888	None made.
1889	22,397,616.90
1890	None made.
1891	25,136,295.00
1892	2,951,200.00
1893	21,968,218.00
1894	14,166,153.00
1895	20,043,180.00
1896	11,462,115.00
1897	16,244,147.00
1898	20,832,412.91
1899	14,627,449.56
1900	25,110,038.94
1901	16,285,605.75
1902	7,046,623.00
1903	32,540,199.50
1904	20,233,150.00
1905	10,872,200.00
1906	28,726,007.41
1907	17,254,050.04
1908	43,500,813.00
1909	18,092,945.00
1910	29,190,264.00
1911	49,380,541.50
1912	40,559,620.50
1913	51,115,889.00

In arriving at the actual amount spent and obligations incurred by Congress in 1914, according to the river and harbor bill as it passed the House, the future obligations incurred by the House for which initial appropriations are made, the amounts added, as announced by Senator SIMMONS, of North Carolina, in the bill reported out of the Senate committee, and the amounts contained in the sundry civil bill, now before the House, we find the total to be as follows for 1914:

House, cash appropriations, river and harbor bill	$43,289,004
House, future obligations, river and harbor bill	32,897,871
House, sundry civil bill	6,990,000
Senate increases to the river and harbor bill	10,352,600
Total	93,529,475

This amount is subject to further increases before both bills are returned to the House.

The 1913 Report of the Chief of Engineers, page 30, states total river and harbor appropriations to that time for all purposes aggregated $789,288,614.45. It is difficult to ascertain the exact proportion of this amount that has been poured into the rivers of the country, but one river, the Mississippi, pleads guilty to having received $144,000,000, as nearly as can be determined. Neither should it be overlooked at the outset that the rivers of the country, according to Government statistics which I have heretofore quoted, have lost 80 per cent of their traffic within the past 25 years. This statement does not apply to Great Lakes traffic, nor is accurate data available as to the Ohio River. From the engineers' reports, to which I have referred heretofore, the Ohio lost 34 per cent of its traffic from 1905 to 1912. I present this side of the ledger in order to show what it has cost the Govenment during a half century of wasteful giving to lose 80 per cent of its river traffic. The engineers' tables from which these deductions are made were set forth in my remarks contained in the RECORD for April 10 last.

Before addressing myself to the influences behind the 1914 bill I desire to add that Report No. 300, part 1, Sixty-third Congress, second session, prepared by the House committee on the 1914 bill, further states that when that bill passed the House the Government was obligated to appropriate in the future $305,500,000 for adopted projects for which initial appropriations had been made (p. 5). Other future obligations are mentioned in that report, but the most significant statement made in connection with the bill came from Chairman SPARKMAN in his address on March 17, when he said:

PROJECTS COSTING BILLIONS OF DOLLARS.

But what of the cost? That is another pertinent question. Of course it is difficult, Mr. Chairman, for us to determine now or for anyone to say just what the future cost will be, and yet I believe that unless we are to embark upon some wild scheme of waterway improvement not connected—or, if connected at all, very remotely—with legitimate river and harbor work—I say unless we are to embark upon some such wild scheme I believe it is possible to approximate within reasonable bounds the cost of river and harbor improvement in this country within the next 25 years. Of course, if we enter upon other works having no direct or necessary relation to navigation, there is no telling where we will land. Why, there are propositions advanced, some of them now before Congress, advocated and supported by men of national repute, the adoption and the carrying out of which, it is said by competent engineers, would cost billions of dollars. But assuming we are to pursue a safe and sane policy such as we have been pursuing for the past several decades, then I believe it is easy, or at least it is not very difficult, to approximate within reasonable bounds as to what the Government will be called upon to expend in the near future, by which I mean in the next quarter of a century.

We have on the books to-day, including those taken on in this bill, about $300,000,000 of projects, $150,000,000, in round figures, or half of it, being for four rivers—the Mississippi, the Ohio, the Missouri, and the East River in New York, the last named, however, only requiring about $13,000,000 to complete. The work on these four streams, if the plans laid down by the engineers are followed, is to extend over a period ranging from 8 to 25 years; perhaps a little beyond that. The other $150,000,000 will likely be required during the next 8 years; that is, if the plans of the engineers are carried out. Of course there will be other projects; but we must remember that there are yet other projects still on hand and yet to be considered. There were before our committee about $50,000,000 of projects submitted within the past two years besides the $38,000,000 we have adopted in this bill. I do not know that all of those will meet with favorable consideration in the future; the chances are they will not; but if they should all be adopted, the amount, including those adopted or recommended in this bill, will reach $350,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, request was made and granted to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] for unanimous consent to answer statements I have made to the House on one of the large projects relating to the Ohio River. It is a matter of regret that time can not be accorded every Member to discuss these projects, and I welcome a full understanding of every project which has been criticized. If any misstatement of fact has occurred, it is unintentional and I am ready to accept any correction offered from official data. In the several discussions held I have endeavored to support every statement of fact with undisputable data taken from the engineers' reports.

In ascertaining the amount of river traffic such data is unreliable because of reasons given by the engineers of many duplications of the same identical freight. I have pointed out this weakness in several instances, but ordinarily, for purposes of computation, have accepted the engineers' reports, irrespective of tonnage, distance, character of freight, and probable duplications. The conclusions drawn from such data have appeared to me more than just to the bill's apologists, and in no case have I been governed by any conscious prejudice because of locality or other extraneous influence.

If many Members agreed with all my conclusions, we would have no river and harbor bill drawn along the lines of the 1914 bill; but I believe, from statements made to me by many Members, that the controlling desire is to preserve local projects demanded by constituents, even at the cost of supporting others that are unworthy.

It is a locality bill in every sense, and the appeal for its support is not based on the general good to be derived from the bill, but from personal interest possessed by the individual Member in the individual project.

Whatever may be said in excuse of the bill, either here or elsewhere, every well-informed Member understands this to be a fact.

Corrections in any misstatement will be welcomed at all times, because I have no interest to serve excepting that represented by every other Member of the House.

CONSTITUTIONALITY IN DOUBT.

The subject has many angles that are of decided interest, ranging from the questionable constitutionality of diverting public funds for local and oftentimes private use to the justification for its use on different projects. When water transportation companies are owned by or closely related to railway systems, the right of the Government to aid such companies where the transportation is so monopolized can not be justified. Where water-transportation companies exclusivly control and monopolize the waterway or service, Goverument aid to the monopoly is equally objectionable. Where the harbor facilities are monopolized by private interests, whether corporate or otherwise, the Government is serving no apparent public use in improving that harbor. Where the municipality owns the harbor rights, but leases all available wharves for the benefit of the city exchequer, the monopoly is no less exclusive. Contributions from localities in rare cases ought to be changed to contributions with rare exceptions.

To pull down and not present any constructive substitute would be unwise and of no avail. The defeat of the 1914 bill at this session is only to meet the same bill at the next session. Greedy constituents, hungry dredging companies, interested transportation companies, and numerous other powerful influences will always be at work as long as the present system prevails. Until that system is changed no lasting improvement will result. Under present conditions no amendment can be passed striking out objectionable items, no matter how vicious or inexcusable. The barrel must stand as built or it is liable to fall to pieces.

To propose any specific bill or law changing the system would be both presumptuous and futile on my part. Any definite plan should be carefully worked out before its passage could be safely urged. Whether the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other independent strong board should have the control of the river and harbor work is a matter for consideration. No scheme can be devised that is weaker than the merry-go-round now existing between the Congressman's survey, the engineer's report, the Congressman's project, the engineer's approval, and the Congressman's appropriation carried out by the engineering department.

A cursory examination of reports shows politics, political pull, and political plunder surrounding the bill, with the Engineer Department made the instrument which unlocks all the combinations. That department should be relegated back to engineering work. At the present time it is supposed to serve as a buffer to the pork-barrel grab; but every intelligent Member knows that when the engineers refuse to favor a scheme, however worthless, political pull generally overturns all scientific difficulties standing in the way. Engineers and engineering departments are dependent upon the favor and influence of those whose case they judge. Think of a judge trying to preserve an impartial state of mind when the litigant before him can make or unmake his future.

The engineers should do engineering work, and the board having jurisdiction of the rivers and harbors work should be removed as far as possible from political pressure.

No law can be passed bringing about this desired result until a thorough public investigation is had, opening wide the present corrupting system. When the searchlight is let in on the barrel and the influences behind the barrel are known, some change will be made in conditions; but to defeat the 1914 bill, or any other bill, and be content with results, is to lop off one tentacle of the octopus.

Neither will it avail anything to defeat the bill temporarily, and thereupon seek to pass a bill changing the system. To defeat the bill is necessary; but the only chance to permanently smash it is by an investigation such as I have demanded. It will come some day, because corrupt things have no place in a representative body, and soon the end must come. The domination of railway influences in this body was supreme a dozen years ago. The controlling influence of monopoly has not long been thrown off, but it has been thrown off, and for all time. The pork barrel is a relic of railway domination and of monopoly control, with this added dangerous element, it offers a pretext that appeals to the community that gets the "improvement."

VICIOUS 1914 PROJECTS.

Mr. Speaker, special interests have a directing hand in framing river and harbor bills, if we are to judge from the Government reports. Fertilizer factories, oil interests, and real-estate projects are all vitally interested in the 1914 bill. The engineers' reports (House Document No. 43, Sixty-third Congress) show that after spending $65,647 for Matawan Creek, N. J., this year we are putting into that same creek a $72,000 appropriation to benefit several factories. In support of this statement I quote from the RECORD of March 21 last:

Mr. FREAR. That is the kind of a harbor we are to appropriate $72,000 for, after spending $65,000 in order to serve, as the report apparently indicates, several manufacturers or people who have fertilizing establishments. I ask if that is correct?

Mr. SCULLY. That is correct.

Mr. FREAR. If that is so, then I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Page 10, strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6."

Amendment rejected.

Mr. SCULLY is a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee from New Jersey.

Shoal Harbor and Compton Creek, N. J., caught the spirit of 1914, and, after an expenditure of $48,491.27, this project gets in the 1914 bill $56,800. No public docks are located on the project, according to the engineers' report, but House Document No. 40, Sixty-third Congress, shows a private dock in existence which belongs to J. H. Smith & Co., manufacturers of fertilizer and fish oil, although its facilities are not open to the public. A new fertilizing plant has been built; and this $56,800 is to be spent, according to the engineers' report, for these fertilizing factories.

New Jersey has several luscious slices of "pork" in the 1914 "barrel," and is also demanding $20,000,000 from the Government for a canal from its mosquito district to the stream once crossed in a rowboat by the Father of our Country.

Returning to fertilizer factories in New Jersey and elsewhere, these industries disclose a spirit of activity that rivals the dredgers' organization, or Mr. Fox's best efforts, because all are of the same "state of mind," resulting from the psychology of the 1914 "pork barrel." When an item for $38,375 was reached for Northeast Cape Fear River, N. C., I referred to the 1913 engineers' report, and informed the House that we had already expended $32,050 on this North Carolina creek in order to secure a depth of 1 inch of water at the head of navigation and 5 inches 15 miles down the river. Then to show the absolute folly of this one of North Carolina's 25 projects, questionable and otherwise, in the 1914 bill, I gave to the House on March 23 the following additional particulars taken from the RECORD:

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman mean to say that the only people who will be benefited by this expenditure of $38,375 are private fertilizer companies?

Mr. FREAR. Three fertilizer companies, says the report of the engineer. Of course it is a mighty good thing to have someone here to get those things through Congress, if you want to vote them, but it does seem to me there ought to be a limit to the character of appropriations that are made by this Congress or any other Congress, and I call on the gentlemen on the other side, who have made professions of economy in their platform, to explain the necessity for this appropriation, and to show a better record than is being made on this appropriation bill.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman not think that possibly the fertilizer companies with whom we were dealing last Saturday dealt with the fertilizer companies of North Carolina and South Carolina, and that they will deal with the fertilizer companies all the way around the coast?

Mr. FREAR. Well, in some way or other fertilization has had a wonderful effect on the growth of the appropriations here. I move to strike out the paragraph.

Amendment overruled.

Mr. Speaker, I am endeavoring to point out the pressure exerted by private interests in filching Government money from the Treasury and can only offer a limited number of items, although the 1914 bill has many such. A few are skillfully concealed by the engineers' reports of public interests to be served but others, like the fertilizer factories, are not afraid of the limelight.

In the $123,700 Curtis Bay proposition for dredging to a 35-foot depth, covered by House Document No. 37, we are confronted with commercial items of 25,000 tons of fertilizer, at $20 per ton; 35,000 tons of fertilizer, at $25 per ton; 70,000 tons of fertilizer, at $17.50 a ton, and are solemnly told that this freight and other low-grade freight, including Standard Oil products, can not be carried out to sea satisfactorily by the 30-foot channel now existing in the bay. Curtis Bay has at present a great mystery occupying the columns of the daily papers because of a recent sensational death, but another mystery that might be easily unearthed through investigation is presented from the significant fact that the said bay is adjacent to Baltimore. The center of the dredging companies' activities is also at Baltimore, and although $255,000 has already been spent by the Government on Curtis Bay an additional $123,700 would be of some service not only to the fertilizing trade, but incidentally to local dredging concerns.

REAL-ESTATE PROJECTS INCLUDED.

The 1914 bill bristles with items that are inserted in the "barrel" for private or local interests, some of which I pointed out to the House in my discussions of March 24, found in the RECORD on pages 5410 to 5431. I am only able to discuss briefly one other class of private interests that are thinly cloaked in several items which have come to my attention.

A letter to the engineers is quoted in House Document No. 137, which shows up the $47,000 Kissimmee Creek fraud. This creek, it will be remembered, is shown by the engineers' reports to be dry for periods varying from five to eight months in a single year. The letter comes from an ex-Congressman:

KISSIMMEE, FLA., March 27, 1909.

DEAR SIR: The tract of land I mentioned to you is Fort Gardner lands, 25,339 acres, and is owned, by recent purchase, by E. W. Bowen & Co., Delphi, Ind. These lands lie between Lakes Cypress, Hatcheneha, and Kissimmee, and on the east side of the Kissimmee River, and about 35 miles south of this place—the nearest shipping point.

At the present time they have our county surveyor engaged in running lines and staking it off into 40-acre lots for sale to settlers from the North and West. At the same time they are having levels established for a system of irrigation and drainage. The great bulk of these lands is admirably adapted to truck farming and will no doubt be rapidly taken up by actual settlers as soon as transportation facilities become adequate and permanent. The work now being done and to be done is with the reasonable expectation that the waterways will be improved so as to give an all-the-year-round channel of 3 feet or more.

As you no doubt have learned by personal inspection, there are hundreds of thousands of acres of similar lands, comprising the Kissimmee Valley, lying ready for the plow when the time comes that its products can be sent to market with reasonable transportation facilities.

Very respectfully, yours,

G. F. KRIBBS,
Formerly Representative, Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania District, in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses.

Another project that is strictly for local interests and smacks strongly of a real-estate venture is the item of $733,000 for the Oklawaha River, Fla.

In the RECORD for March 21 appears this colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee:

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, what did the gentleman say the gentleman from Florida had?

Mr. FREAR. I said the gentleman from Florida had an instance of an appropriation of which he spoke yesterday, an appropriation of over $700,000, I believe, to bring products a distance of 100 miles—oranges, for instance, and things like that—down a small stream to the St. Johns River.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman refers to the Oklawaha River.

Mr. FREAR. I did not know before yesterday that it was in the gentleman's district.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The gentleman has about stated the facts.

Mr. FREAR. I desire to be correct. I am trying to state only facts.

A PARTICULARLY VICIOUS ITEM.

The foregoing colloquy relates to the demands of orange growers for a $733,000 appropriation for a crooked creek that does not boast of a regular boat service. It surely is not for the benefit of the general public, but is a project for a few parties living near the stream, because on March 23 appears the further discussion:

Mr. MURDOCK. Is there railroad transportation there to-day?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Oh, yes; there are two railroads traversing the section.

To further indicate real-estate and private interests to be served I quote further from the RECORD of March 23:

The only influence that ever put this project over after it was turned down by the engineers is that of a political character, disclosed by letters quoted in House Document 514.

From Florida's real-estate projects to Port Aransas, on the Texas coast, which absorbs $2,525,000, in the project including $800,000 in the 1914 bill, private real-estate interests crop out at every bend of the river and every page of the bill. Returning to New Jersey, it will be discovered that the State of a New Freedom and fertilizer factories is energetically to the front. It is hard to ascertain precisely where "improvements" are being made by the Government engineers, and, although I believe no part of the Newark Meadows project is included in the 1914 appropriation for the Passaic appearing in the sundry civil bill, it is well to know that the New Jersey Terminal Dock Co. owns 33,090 acres in that vicinity. It is also instructive to read the following letter relating to a New Jersey project found in House Document No. 1076, Sixty-second Congress:

LETTER OF RICHARD C. JENKINSON, OF R. C. JENKINSON & CO.

NEWARK, N. J., December 2, 1910.

Col. WILLIAM T. ROSSELL,
Corps of Engineers, New York.

MY DEAR COLONEL: You will remember me as a friend of Gen. J. W. Barlow, to whom I am glad to refer you as to my sanity.

I was delighted to hear you put to Mr. James M. Reilly, the secretary of the board of trade, the question about the meadow canal, and as this is a scheme to sell land—almost useless land—to the city of Newark at high prices I have opposed it to the limit of my power.

I wrote a paper on it, and also wrote a series of questions up to the promoters, which they have never been able to answer to the satisfaction of the taxpayers of Newark.

In spite of the fear that I may be thought presuming I am sending to you a copy of these, asking that at your leisure you do me the honor of reading them.

Yours, truly, RICHARD C. JENKINSON.

The significant part of this proposed project lies in the fact that the engineers' report shows it was vigorously urged by three Representatives in Congress.

It may have been a worthy project, but we can not fail to recall the code of waterways legislation found in the utterances of the gentleman who declares, on page 13 of the February, 1914, number of Waterways and Commerce:

New Jersey has too long been neglected in the distribution of the "pork barrel." It is time that the House of Representatives should learn of the inadequate care bestowed upon the rivers and harbors of New Jersey for the last 15 years.

To this should be added a postscript that the fertilizer factories and real-estate projects are not being wholly neglected.

A brief comparison between increasing lake and decreasing river traffic is significant:

Water traffic, 1912.

	Tons.
Ohio River (Eng. Rept., 1913, p. 981)	8,618,369
Upper Mississippi (Eng. Rept., 1913, p. 900)	1,830,264
Lower Mississippi (the lower Mississippi has decreased since 1906, but data is not available; Comm. Corp., 1906, p. 307)	1,719,893
Missouri (Eng. Rept., 1913, p. 941)	249,599
Total (for 3 greatest rivers)	12,418,125
Loss, 21 per cent in 6 years.
Duluth-Superior (average haul, 831 miles; Eng. Rept., 1913, p. 1062)	41,474,776
Milwaukee (Eng. Rept., 1913, p. 1103)	7,779,625
Chicago (Eng. Rept., 1913, p. 1117)	3,664,745
Total three ports' tonnage	52,919,146

Engineer's note to page 1117 states:

The harbor works, while having added about 5,000,000 tons to the river commerce, are now needed mainly to prevent a further loss of the remaining tonnage.

From the foregoing it appears that three lake harbors, two bordering on my own State, have over four times the combined commerce of the three greatest rivers in the country. The Duluth-Superior Harbor has over three times the river commerce. The Milwaukee Harbor equals the Mississippi and Missouri combined.

Appropriations are as follows for 1914:

Ohio River Canal (river and harbor and sundry civil bills)	$9,176,000
Ohio open river (river and harbor bill)	350,000
Mississippi River (river and harbor bill)	9,500,000
Missouri River (river and harbor bill)	2,000,000
Three river appropriations, year 1914	21,026,000

Duluth-Superior and Milwaukee Harbors receive nothing for 1914. Chicago receives $98,170, through river and harbor and sundry civil bills. The three river projects contemplate: Mississippi, $275,000,000; Missouri, $20,000,000; Ohio, $64,000,000; total, $359,000,000.

	Tons.
Ohio, 1905	13,163,656
Ohio, 1912	8,618,396
Total	4,545,260

Decrease, 34 per cent in six years.

Canal, 1906, 1,343,904 tons; amount, $11,427,784.

All but 132,189 tons low-class freight.

Of Missouri River tonnage from Kansas City to mouth (p. 2449), 1913:

	Tons.
Sand and gravel	185,110	= $158,000
Upper gravel tier	171,240	= 64,489
	13,870	222,489

Mr. Speaker, permit me to give a further brief illustration of the bill's character before I address myself to influences now potent throughout the country which are behind the bill and behind all other bills of like character. An examination of the 1914 measure, for illustration, will show that probably four-fifths of all the congressional districts in the country and four-fifths of all the States have projects which are provided for by the bill. Some of these are shown by the engineers' reports to be good, but many of them are shown by the same reports to be questionable, while others are vicious and ought to sink the barrel.

NORTH CAROLINA'S 26 PROJECTS.

Take North Carolina for illustration. It enjoys the top notch of appropriations. Twenty-five different projects for that State were embodied in the river and harbor bills which passed the House, carrying in aggregate about $1,500,000. One of these projects contemplates an eventual expenditure by the Government of $5,400,000 on a canal that lost over half its traffic between 1909 and 1912, according to the latest Government data. Notwithstanding the proverbial duplications and other inaccuracies found in the data furnished by the engineers, over half of that canal traffic consisted of logs, piling, and lumber that has been floated along the streams during the past century. For every ton of traffic, exclusive of logs and lumber, shipped on that canal in 1912, 1,000 tons were shipped from the Superior-Duluth Harbor, on the border of my home State. This canal gets $800,000 in the 1914 bill, and will eventually get $5,400,000 for a project which would never have been possible to project unaided by political influence.

Added to these 25 projects that go to North Carolina, we are now informed that $1,826,600 has just been added to the House bill and is going into a harbor of refuge at Cape Lookout. When no navigation can be found the compass of the barrel includes worthless canals that are taken over by the Government, and now a harbor of refuge, at an aggregate cost with the canal amounting to over $7,000,000, is found in the 1914 bill. Again North Carolina maintains its proud supremacy in the 1914 bill among the sisterhood of States by totaling 26 different projects.

If time permitted, I would address myself briefly to these two projects just mentioned; but I believe a statement of the facts will be sufficient to put every Member on inquiry. It is passing strange that now, when the coastwise trade is being carried on by large vessels largely owned by great railway systems, we are called upon to waste $1,826,600 on the bleak, deserted North Carolina coast, shunned alike by seamen and by people generally. I have explained my own knowledge of actual conditions along that coast from having lived there while in Government employ and, further, by reason of information received from men familiar with the facts.

Returning to the remaining 24 North Carolina projects, we meet with the old familiar North East River, that, after swallowing up $38,375, has secured a depth of 1 inch in the channel at the head of navigation. It may be remembered that the engineers' report further shows that this project is to help out two or three fertilizer factories farther down the river. A brief discussion was given this river during the debate, when I presented House Document 1356, Sixty-second Congress, and the Army engineers' report for 1913.

Then, there is the familiar Scuppernong, down in North Carolina, that gets $33,800 for snagging, and Deep Creek, which the engineer estimated carries an annual commerce reaching possibly 2,000 tons, according to House Document 1362, Sixty-second Congress. Then, too, there is Lumber Creek, another of the 26 petty projects which the Board of Engineers refused to recommend, but was finally fixed up by Gen. Bixby, who overruled the findings of the board, for suggestive reasons.

Bennett Creek, which, according to the reports of engineers, varied 2 feet with the wind, will be remembered because Newbegun Creek, another of the 26 North Carolina projects, varies 4 feet when the wind blows up that creek. All these projects were referred to in the discussion and conditions presented in my remarks of March 24, found on pages 5413–5415 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

OTHER INTERESTING PROJECTS.

If time permitted, I would be pleased to present the facts shown by the engineers' reports concerning Fishing Creek and Contentnia Creek and Smiths Creek and Swift Creek and Shallotte Creek, and other creeks found among the 26 North Carolina projects contained in the 1914—but time prevents.

Need I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it may be hard for anyone especially interested in 26 projects contained in the 1914 pork barrel, or even in a lesser number of projects, to completely disassociate himself from 26 hungry mouths of creeks and canals, all pleading for Government money. I do not criticize anyone for being so unconsciously influenced, but I do believe that 26 different projects—or, in fact, any large number of projects—belonging to any one State when found in the 1914 barrel would cast a glitter of golden sunshine upon the rest of the $93,000,000 contained in that same barrel, irrespective of its objectionable size and odor.

If time permits, I will be glad to refer to several of the items contained in the bill which have been added since it left the House; but I now desire to call your attention to another phase of the question which is, in my judgment, of far greater consequence to the country at large and of vastly more importance in its far-reaching influence.

Mr. Speaker, I am not now discussing the demerits of the lower Mississippi River "humbug and steal" which was considered in my remarks on June 3, but an effort has been made to show the character of organizations and to give reasons why Congress should inquire as to influences behind the bill. It would seem to me that I have furnished enough information to at least arouse Congress, here or at the other end of the Capitol, to demand an inquiry; but be that as it may, I am persuaded that the best way to secure results is to keep adding to the fund of information, which might be quickly enlarged if we should subpœna witnesses as proposed in my resolution.

In order to offer further inducements toward securing such an investigation, I desire to present to the House a report, with accompanying letter, which comes to me from an authoritative source and which illuminates to a remarkable degree some of the influences, secret in character, that are to be found pushing the pork barrel:

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ATLANTIC AND GULF COAST DREDGE OWNERS' ASSOCIATION, MARCH 13, 1901.

To the Atlantic and Gulf Coast Dredge Owners' Association.

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with the constitution, rules, and by-laws of this association, your board of directors, through your president, present for your consideration herewith their report for the year ending February 13, 1901, adding thereto such recommendations and suggestions as your board have considered during the past year.

The year just closing the eighteenth year of the association and the years since its organization have been marked by constant and faithful effort to promote, through the means of general work and enterprise, everything that will make for the good of every operator enrolled in its membership. Measures have been constantly brought to our attention and every effort made to uplift our business and protect it in all proper and legitimate channels.

These efforts have been more or less successful, but always along the line of an earnest endeavor to conserve the real interests of our business.

During the past year your board have especially taken up for consideration the question of its department for fixing prices on work and the allotment of work through the commissioners of that department, and have carefully studied the problems which present themselves in connection with that line of work.

The department in question was not originally contemplated by the founders of this association, nor was it intended as any part of the work for which the association was formed.

The organization had its origin in the recognized desire of many operators in the dredging business for effective cooperation in many important fields of work, where the general interests of their business had long been neglected. It was felt by the progressive men who had invested large amounts of capital in this business that an organization of operators could be effected by the Atlantic coast, whose duty and object would be the closer affiliation of operators, and the combination of the talent and energy in the business for the promotion by all lawful means for the advancement of their business, and to present a united front, supported by united resources, to meet and overcome any and all obstacles then existing or thereafter appearing.

IN UNION THERE IS STRENGTH.

It was the old and tried principle, to wit, "In union there is strength" and "A house divided against itself falls," and the keynote of all successful organizations must be that very same principle. Following this rule, the effort of this association should have been confined entirely to meeting and overcoming obstacles which come from without—fighting the common enemy, so to speak. This would mean the promotion of all measures for urging public bodies to undertake public improvements in submarine work, compelling the enactment of reasonable laws governing our work, and the repeal of obnoxious and vexatious laws; experiments in all branches of machinery and devices used in our business, and a general department for furnishing to each member information desired by him regarding any particular work, or concerning which other members may have knowledge, giving in every way to each member the fullest possible data regarding dredging operations on the coast and the history of each piece of work.

So many measures of general interest and value are included in the work that could be successfully performed by an association to the advantage of its members, and so much can be done in the way of promoting good fellowship amongst them by means of this organization, and also by entertaining prominent and influential men at its banquets and through special committees that enumeration here of all these different and important measures is unnecessary.

Any thoughtful man who is engaged in our business can readily see how important it is that an efficient organization of operators should be maintained to promote measures of general interest and value.

QUARRELING OVER SPOILS.

Some years after the organization was effected an element entered into its work which has almost crowded out all features of general work and has practically turned the association, which was originally formed for general benefits only, into a special organization for the distribution of work and apportionment of contracts. Starting, as it did, in the desire to combine against outsiders, it has ended in combining against itself; and instead of its members standing together to promote the business of dredging in all its general and important details, as above mentioned, we behold a spectacle of members quarreling one with another over the division of work, and each one complaining that the association is a failure because it does not give to each one all the work that he feels is his due, each member forgetting that the association simply undertook this duty because it was forced upon it, and because other agencies to do that work had failed, and because the operators on the Atlantic coast refused to enter into proper arrangements for dividing work amongst them and preferred to load this work upon the association, a work for which the latter was unfitted, for which it was never intended or formed, and the only excuse for foisting this measure upon it was apparently the dredging operators failed to appreciate that this kind of work was done in other lines of business by special pools organized for no other purpose and specially organized for that purpose alone.

It is time that all thoughtful men in this association pause and consider whether the association is to blame for failing to perform a task entirely beyond its powers or resources, and also whether it would be well for the association to reject this burden and relegate it to proper agencies and take up the duties for which it was organized.

We think it is time that this be done and this bone of contention removed from the midst of our association and the members once more united and working along the lines of common interest. Little of the real value of this association has been demonstrated or developed of recent years and much disagreement and bitterness has come between the members in that time, and all because the association has neglected its real duties and buried itself with false ones. The former would bind its members more firmly together, whereas the latter simply disintegrates our ranks.

It is certainly time that this "Jonah" be thrown overboard and left to the tender mercies of some sufficient "whale" or "pool" and the association be permitted to again bend to its task and resume its long interrupted voyage.

In presenting these views to the members, your board feel that they are simply pointing out the pitfall into which this association has become entangled, and which has retarded its growth and usefulness for some years and has brought upon it an immense amount of work foreign to its proper duties. Much of the dissatisfaction has been due to this very cause, and members have been alienated whose assistance was of the greatest value to us. We have seen the camel crowd into our tent and force out everything else, and it is time that this fruitless and thankless task, which was put upon the association, be now put off, and the department created for the allotment and apportionment of dredging work and contracts be abandoned and all rules pertaining thereto be repealed.

The association should, on the other hand, favor the creation of pools in each district formed upon the lines of other successful business arrangements of like character.

The association as a whole will then confine itself to legitimate business of acquiring work and promoting the resources of members for doing work, leaving to the separate pools the business of dividing up that work at good prices.

TO THROW ALL RESOURCES ON PROJECTS.

We count in this association the membership and influence of every man engaged in the business; each one has something of value to us in the way of ideas, talent, energy, or influence, and it is the work of the association and its proper object and function to use these various factors for the benefit of the whole membership, and to throw upon any desired point the full resources of the association. In this way and by turning its steps in the right direction and with the full confidence and cooperation which it would then have from all its members, there no longer being any grounds for contention or rivalry amongst one another, when once this department of allotment was abandoned, the association will once more resume its proper place and perform many duties of the highest use and importance to its members.

The cost of its work would be distributed, and no member would have any cause for regretting that he was enrolled in its ranks.

If these views meet with your approval, your board would earnestly urge that, at least for a time, the district commission and all rules pertaining thereto be abrogated and discontinued; that the board of directors be instructed to arrange and appoint a series of committees, chosen of their own ranks, as well as from the entire membership, giving to each committee certain specified duties, which will include all matters which it is to the interest of the association to have promoted and studied. These committees should report from time to time to the board of directors, and the latter, being a representative body from all parts of the coast, would be most efficient in taking up and promoting all suggestions and measures requiring action.

No expense should be incurred by the committees, except as specially authorized by the directors from time to time and in cases where the necessity for such expenditures is apparent.

The board should organize a bureau of information, which would furnish to each member at regular intervals a synopsis of what is going on in the way of dredging operations on the coast, improvements in machinery or methods of doing work, with descriptions of such improvements, locations, etc., and the general work being done by and through committees and in the board of directors; this and such other additional information as may suggest itself.

This bureau should be in charge of a competent man, whose business is to procure and intelligently transmit matters of interest.

The question of insurance has never been adequately considered, and some measure should be taken up and carefully considered, so that a general scheme of insurance could be devised to secure some reduction of the large premium now paid by members to the insurance companies. Very little, if any, work of this kind has been done in our business, and it is believed that a system of employment of representative agents for our insurance would be found profitable and a great saving.

DREDGERS NEGLECTED THE PORK BARREL.

The lack of association methods and the failure to use the means in our hands for the general good was forcibly illustrated recently in the river and harbor bill, where absolutely no effort was made by the association to procure any amendment to the bill or any provision inserted therein for its benefit.

It also appears in the case recently of certain collisions which occurred in the Savannah River, where the law at present provides that a dredge occupying a channel in navigable waters is doing so at its peril, and no damages resulting to the said dredge can be recovered. These and a great many instances could be cited to show the neglect that general interest of dredging men is receiving at this time and emphasizes the necessity for proper action by the association, to wit, such as this one was intended to be and should be.

Your board of directors desire to assure this association and its members that they have devoted their best efforts, during the year just ended, to a consideration of all matters affecting the interests and business of those for whom they have acted. They have appreciated that the duties which they assumed in accepting the offices of directors, required them to give the necessary time to consideration of the matters intrusted to them, and they looked over the entire field of cooperative work, and have determined that the association could be made of great value to the members if conducted on the lines heretofore specified

They are also of the opinion that the work which the association has been attempting to do, namely, the allotment of work among members, has been entirely contrary to the spirit of this organization, and has proven a stumbling block in all its efforts to promote the general interests of its members. We feel that by means of thorough reforms in our methods, such as has been outlined, that the organization will rapidly add to its membership, and soon include all the operators on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts; that there will no longer be any reason why anyone engaged in the business should not join with us in our efforts to promote the business and encourage the giving of work by those having it in their power to do so, as well as the many other features which have been touched upon in this our report.

The board have held meetings on the second Wednesday of every month except the months of July and August, during which latter months the constitution provides a recess shall be taken, and the meetings have been well attended.

BOARD IS TO WORK FOR PORK BARRELS.

Your board feels regret that the river and harbor bill has failed of passage, and considers it all the more important that the association should be organized for the purpose of adding its influence to urging work by municipal organizations and bodies, and doing all in their power to create offerings of work in the various ports of entry and harbors. It is only by persistent effort that the loss entailed upon us by the failure of the harbor bill can in any way be compensated for. Your board further wishes to emphasize their regret that the annual banquet of the association has been allowed to go by default for two or three years. These entertainments do not entail any serious expense upon the association, but they do create the greatest possible prestige for our business in the estimation of those whose favor it is to our advantage to gain. Influential public men and men of business affairs having to do with transportation companies and steamship lines are entertained by us on these occasions with the greatest possible benefit to our business. Municipal officers, heads of departments, Members of Congress and of legislatures, and their favor and interest is legitimately gained and has been found to be of the greatest value when circumstances required it. The expense of our entertainment is wisely expended, and brings an adequate return for every dollar so spent.

We might also add that the occasion also affords an opportunity for members to meet on holiday terms, and encourages in every way good fellowship and kindly feelings among them. It is therefore to be hoped that in another year this banquet will be again a feature of the association.

The work of the association has been so largely confined to the burdensome details of allotment and district commission work during the past year that very little of general interest has developed.

We have done the best we could with the allotment problem, and have done even better than an association of this kind could have been expected to do; but we hope that the whole matter will be relegated to other agencies, and the efforts of this association left untrammeled for the coming year to perform the duties for which it is properly fitted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Dated New York, March 13, 1901.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS,
By FRANK A. FURST, President.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
New York City, April 25, 1901.

DEAR SIR: The Atlantic and Gulf Coast Dredge Owners' Association cordially tender to you an invitation to join them in their work of promoting the interests of dredging men upon the Atlantic coast.

It has been the object of this association during the 18 years of existence to provide a means of acquaintance and intercourse amongst men engaged in the same kind of business, to promote good fellowship amongst them, and encourage all movements that will provide work and stimulate large undertakings in the improvement of waterways.

The association has been of great assistance to its members in these respects, and is the only organization existing among dredging operators having these objects in view. By assembling together operators from all points on the coast the combined talent, energy, resources, and influence of the various members, coupled with the long experience of the association, is placed at the disposal of the members for the ultimate benefit of each, and for the promotion of measures for their interest.

The association further aims at promoting social intercourse between operators and customers and influential men by its annual banquets, and with great success in the past. It does not hinder or control any operator in his business or in the prices he may obtain for his work, but leaves all individual matters of that character to the members themselves, without interference, seeking to advance the interests of each member through general features which build up and improve the general business in which all are engaged, and where these matters can be fully discussed and acted upon when necessary.

Your consideration is therefore cordially requested and your application for membership will be met with the fullest explanation of our work. The expense of membership is reasonable.

Hoping to hear from you, I am,
Very truly, yours,

JOHN F. CLARK,
Clerk of the Board.

By order of the board.

Mr. Speaker, if the report I have presented is authentic, and such an organization as this exists, having for its purpose the advancement of "pork barrels" through Congress for the mutual interest and benefit of its members, it is time that an investigation of such secret influences was had.

As bearing upon this proposition I offer for consideration a short clipping which purports to have been taken from the Atlantic Deep Waterways Bulletin of 1913:

THE PRESIDENT GETS A GOOD JOB.

Frank A. Furst, president of the Maryland Dredging Co., was one of the principal figures at the annual meeting of the Dredge Owners' Protective Association, of which he is president, held in New York last month.

Mr. Furst's company is digging the canal across Cape Cod, which is a link in the chain of waterways along the Atlantic coast. In addition the Maryland Dredging Co. is draining the Everglades of Florida. Mr. Furst spoke of both of these projects before the association, and told some very interesting stories in connection with the difficulties encountered in the Everglades project.

Will it be reasonably questioned that a committee might get at some interesting facts regarding influences behind "pork barrels" if possessed of authority to subpœna witnesses for that purpose? It must be admitted that sufficient information has been offered on which to base proceedings, and there is more that may be had when the committee reports out my resolution for investigation and provides the machinery for its conduct.

Consider the interest possessed by the dredgers in this bill. Take the Norfolk-to-Beaufort canal project, which calls for $5,400,000. Practically all of this money is to be spent for dredging, as nearly as can be ascertained from the engineers' report. It is a rich plum worth having, although no substantial navigation warranting anything like such expenditure is promised by a dismal canal running through the North Carolina swamps. Few people live there, and few people will live there for many years to come; but $5,400,000 spent on a dredging proposition close to Baltimore, where some of the contracts will certainly be secured, is a proposition which may account for the activities of gentlemen who work together for mutual advantage. Another project closer home is no doubt receiving much attention from the Baltimore dredging concern.

The Chesapeake & Delaware Canal proposition is included in the 1914 bill. In my humble judgment this is one of the most vicious measures in the bill, but its passage has been a foregone conclusion ever since the interests in Philadelphia and Baltimore began pulling for it. The House appropriated $1,300,000 with which to buy the canal, and at that time I protested, ineffectually of course, against the appropriation, claiming it did not contain the real amount involved in the purchase. At the time the bill was before the House it was admitted on the floor that the stock was worthless, the bonds worth only 50 cents on a dollar, and that the canal was a bad proposition from every point of view, so far as the public interest is concerned.

However, the Senate committee held its sessions, calling before it interested stockholders and interested shippers, with the Baltimore dredgers and contractors hovering in the background. Based on the report of that committee we are now informed by the press that the canal is to be purchased by the Government for $2,500,000, and thereafter a dredging proposition will be undertaken, which, according to the Angus report, will eventually amount to $20,000,000. That report sets forth 7,000 feet of bottomless quicksand which will be encountered by the dredgers, but the Federal Treasury ought to be able to last as long as the quicksand, providing the taxpayers of the country are willing to put up for this project.

In order that the New York dredgers may not be forgotten by this neighborhood affair at Baltimore and Philadelphia, a further program includes a canal to be built across New Jersey by the Government, which by coincidence will also cost $20,000,000. The builders of the 1914 "barrel" did not have the audacity to push the New Jersey project and the Baltimore project at the same time, but they are both on the program, which fact will be encouraging and interesting, although understood long ago by the dredging concerns of these two great cities.

I am not attributing to dredgers and contractors different motives from those which govern men generally. They desire fat contracts. The agreement shows an effort to obtain an equitable division. It further shows how united influence should be exerted back of the rivers and harbors proposition. The dredgers are not anxious to have the Government put through more than they can handle, and with the existing projects added to the $1,800,000 Cape Lookout project included in the 26 projects owned by North Carolina, they ought to be kept reasonably busy.

Mr. Speaker, during several days in March last, when the rivers and harbors bill for 1914 was before the House, I sought to amend the bill by striking out a few of its most pernicious items, aggregating many millions of dollars. The RECORD for March 24, pages 5410 to 5431, contains some data on which such amendments were offered. Therein I endeavored to set forth a few of the objectionable items and to expose to the House the viciousness of the whole system of rivers and harbors appropriations.

RAILROAD CONTRIBUTIONS.

Thereafter, on June 2, on pages 9689 to 9697 of the RECORD, appear my remarks before the House wherein I pointed out secret efforts to influence Congress on river and harbor bills, from subscriptions of money to the use of threats against business men. At that time I presented the following subscriptions, running for five years, taken from what purported to be a photographic copy of a typewritten statement made by John A. Fox, secretary and manager of the Mississippi Levee Association:

It has been estimated that a minimum fund of $30,000 per annum is necessary for this organization to do its work in a complete and thorough manner, and already a considerable portion of this sum has been pledged annually for five years (of $150,000 in all). The subscriptions are as follows:

Southern Railway Co	$1,000
Mobile & Ohio R. R	1,000
Frisco R. R	1,000
Missouri Pacific R. R	1,000
Chi., R. I. & Pac. R. R	1,000
St. Louis & So. West. R	1,000
Illinois Central	1,000
Y. & M. V	1,000
Chi. Mill. & Lumber Co	1,000
Caldwell & Smith, Memphis	1,000
International Harvester Co	1,000

Assurance has been given of other substantial amounts.

As I have before stated, on June 3 I called the attention of the House to contributions made by eight railways for the purpose of aiding in the passage of a river pork barrel. It will be remembered that contributions approximating $150,000 for the five-year period were given in the RECORD, and it was further shown that $40,000 of this amount was guaranteed by eight railroads for the purpose of influencing Congress to pass the bill. At that time I asked why an investigation was not had of this remarkable situation, and I further demanded in my resolution that all interests engaged in lobbying through such bills should be compelled to come out in the open.

On June 3 I also quoted from a prominent waterways journal in reference to the efforts of business men in the South to compel the business men of Pennsylvania and other Eastern States to line up for the Mississippi bill. The covert threat contained in such correspondence was disclosed by a leading waterways journal, which I also gave to the House in a further effort to secure the investigation into the secret influences behind the bill. Is it not a matter of some importance to the country that Congress is subject to such influences, secret and unknown, excepting as disclosed through accidental agencies, and yet we refuse to ascertain the methods pursued by such influences?

Is it not surprising that an appropriation of $9,500,000 is made to the Mississippi River in the 1914 bill, when the navigation has diminished 80 per cent during the last quarter of a century? Is it not surprising that, according to newspaper reports, another $1,000,000 is now to be added to the 1914 Mississippi River item, making $10,500,000 for that project contained in the 1914 pork barrel, or approximately $3 per ton for every ton of commerce carried on the river in 1912, including a large proportion of gravel and sand, which weighs heavily in traffic reports?

In my remarks of June 3 I made reference to a report of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, which had refused to join hands with the association now boosting the Mississippi River bill, because of the fact that the association was a log-rolling concern founded on "mutual bribery." I have been asked to give in full this report, which was made by the New York board after a careful investigation into the methods of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress. Believing that a report coming from one of the highest trade bodies of the world is of especial importance at this time, particularly as it relates to a proposal to filch $50,000,000 annually from the Federal Treasury, I herewith present the report containing its refusal to indorse what it denominates to be a mutual bribery organization:

THE NATIONAL RIVERS AND HARBORS CONGRESS.

NEW YORK, March 27, 1907.

To the New York Board of Trade and Transportation:

The undersigned special committee, appointed to consider the policy that this board should adopt toward the national rivers and harbors congress, reports as follows:

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress is an alliance of individuals, firms and corporations, waterway associations, and other organizations. It has a president, an executive committee, and a secretary-treasurer. The members of the association pay annual dues. Its object, as stated in its circulars, is "to arouse public interest to such an extent that a united demand, coming from all sections of the country for regular and adequate rivers and harbors appropriations, will induce Congress to provide an annual river and harbor bill of $50,000,000."

The New York Board of Trade and Transportation is invited and urged to become a member of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

The chairman of your committee personally conferred with a representative of the organization and has been fully informed of its purposes and methods. Its whole work, as stated in the objects quoted, is to be directed toward making an effective demand upon Congress for appropriations. Its policy is that no specific projects of public improvement shall be individually indorsed by the organization. A general indorsement is given to all projects heretofore approved by the United States engineers, and the completion of which would require from $320,000,000 to $350,000,000; but no effort is made to ascertain or verify the necessity of such projects and plans.

The organization, while advocating and demanding enormous and unprecedented appropriations from the Public Treasury, thus cleverly attempts to avoid all the responsibilities for its proper and honest expenditure. Another advantage to them of this policy is that they avoid all dissensions among themselves over the questions of merit as to the projects proposed. They welcome to the support of their cause everybody who wants an appropriation from the Treasury, and none is repulsed. The wonder is their numbers are not larger.

This fact should somewhat allay the fears of the taxpayers of the country as to the result, and as actually less than 5 per cent of the commercial organizations of the country have espoused the cause, or less than one-sixth as many organizations as demanded the passage of railroad-rate legislation, not including as many more agricultural societies, the movement has thus far failed to develop enough strength to make it dangerous.

It is manifest that such a plan should appeal strongly to many localities whose natural conditions are forbidding and unattractive to commerce and whose commerce is consequently small. It is quite within reasonable expectation that the people of such localities would be encouraged to hope or believe that by uniting to swell the demand for larger appropriations enough might be drawn from the Treasury to satisfy the demands of more necessitous projects and leave them a little by way of reward for their help and to encourage them to continue their "interest and cooperation." Every congressional district thus enlisted would deliver one additional vote in Congress for the blanket proposition.

Nearly every Congressman is charged with procuring an appropriation for some project in his district. The approval of his constituency and often his reelection depends upon his success in getting an appropriation. He can not question the merits of the project for which such demands are made upon him. He may know that the project has no just claim upon the room of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors until he has worried a promise from the chairman. Thus the chairman of the committee has his troubles. It is a most Herculean task to sift out the bad and decide upon the merits of the numerous propositions which are brought to his attention. It requires most patient, painstaking study on his part to inform himself and to make sure that he is not imposed upon, and he must have extraordinary discretion, tact, and courage to put off importunate Congressmen and reject projects which investigation has convinced him are unworthy. Necessary projects must be passed for the good of the country and votes must be had to pass them. Frequently the price of a needed vote or several votes is the recognition of a project which would not otherwise have any consideration, and to get the important projects through the sacrifice is made, and so the bill is loaded. When the bill comes into the House with such items on it there is no one to object, because few if any of the Members know about the individual items. Even when occasionally a particularly objectionable item has been singled out for criticism in the newspapers, there is none to protest against it on the floor, because each Member must have his particular appropriation and it is understood that if the bill is to pass it must stand pat or fail as a whole. When one part of its structure is withdrawn, the harmony of the situation is gone and disintegration sets in.

The policy of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress would make the task no easier for the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. There would be more money to go around, but if the Rivers and Harbors Congress should succeed in their plan "to arouse public interest—they should have said 'cupidity'—to such an extent that a united demand, coming from all sections of the country," would develop new schemes of improvement before unheard of, the demands upon him for unworthy projects would be increased far out of proportion to the worthy ones, and so the difficulties would be aggravated.

ORGANIZED FOR MUTUAL BRIBERY.

It would foster beyond all previous experience the most pernicious of all methods of procuring legislation, known as "logrolling," a species of mutual bribery among those actively interested already too much in evidence for the health of public morals and the interests of the taxpaying public.

The present system may not be ideal, but the responsibility and power imposed in the important office of chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors develops in the incumbent a conservatism and care for the public weal which establishes conditions and works out the problems in a way which it would be difficult to improve upon. The country has been in recent years especially fortunate in this respect. Mistakes may have been made. Some projects may have been for a time neglected which should have been more rapidly progressed, and some may have received more recognition than their importance would seem to warrant, but a proper appreciation of the difficulties of the office would foster a spirit of charity and compel commendation instead of criticism.

In conclusion, we desire to make our position clear. As an organization we have done much for the improvement of the water transportation. We may stand upon our record as to that and will not swerve from our faith in the future; but we are opposed to the plans of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, and urge the business interests of the country to consider carefully the evils of the system which would result from its success.

It is the duty and should be the care of the exponent organizations throughout the country to guard at all times the public interests of the city, State, and Nation with unswerving integrity of purpose, and to encourage by every means at their command the highest possible standard of action in all the affairs of our public life. They can not, without doing an injury to the body politic, shift from their own shoulders to others any responsibility which they themselves should assume. They can not, without giving conscientious and painstaking study and consideration, indorse important projects and measures or general and vaguely defined policies, and to leave to others the working of them out to a conclusion without danger of harm. The conditions inherent in our public life are such that the gravest dangers attend and menace the interests of the people at each step from the initiation and promotion to the consummation of all public measures and works under every branch of our Government. These conditions make easier the evasion of individual responsibility and discourage the expression of opposition to measures which appeal to the individual conscience as wrong. They foster cupidity and encourage duplicity and fraud, and where the objects in view depend for success upon access to the Public Treasury the moral resistance is relaxed.

We therefore view with apprehension this systematic propaganda by influential men and organizations, which our experience and judgment tells us, unless checked by the more conservative elements of the people, will ultimately lead to the wildest extravagance and waste of the public moneys which has ever marked our history.

REFUSES TO JOIN A LOGROLLING ORGANIZATION.

Your committee therefore recommends that the New York Board of Transportation and Trade decline the request to become a member of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

While expressing our disapproval of the methods of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress we have great pleasure in commending the action of President Roosevelt in appointing on the 14th of the present month the Inland Waterways Commission, whose duty will be to report a comprehensive plan for the improvement and control of the river systems of the United States. The President in his letter of appointment to the members of the commission, who have been manifestly selected for their eminent qualifications and fitness for the duty imposed, outlines at length his views, which are patriotic, broad, and comprehensive. The appointment of the Inland Waterways Commission is, to our minds, a first important step in the right direction, which gives promise of the development of a national plan, taking knowledge of all river improvements which should properly be nationalized, and eliminating the elements of danger to which we have hereinbefore referred.

Upon such a plan, which will indicate in advance what the improvements are contemplated, what they will accomplish for the welfare of the country, and what they will cost, all the organizations of the country should unite.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK S. GARDNER, Secretary.

Based on such data and other information there presented, I urged the passage of my resolution of investigation, which was presented to the House about six weeks ago, but which has had no hearings and will be smothered in the committee. Such resolutions were as follows:

House concurrent resolution 38.

Whereas many millions of dollars of public moneys are annually wasted on our rivers and an absence of businesslike methods is being pursued by the Government in carrying on river and harbor improvements, the following facts are submitted as a preamble in support of this resolution:

That on March 17, 1914, the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee stated to the House as follows: "Why, there are propositions advanced, some of them now before Congress, advocated and supported by men of national repute, the adoption and carrying out of which, it is said by competent engineers, would cost billions of dollars";

That river and harbor appropriations have increased approximately 500 per cent, whereas navigation on rivers has decreased 80 per cent, as shown by the following Government data: Appropriations for rivers and harbors: 1875 to 1894 (20 years), $187,099,000; 1894 to 1904 (10 years), $184,425,000; 1911 to 1914 (4 years), $184,345,000. The following river traffic is reported from the city of St. Louis: Missouri River, 1890, 31,385 tons; 1906, 6,050 tons; loss, 80 per cent. Lower Mississippi, 1890, 765,880 tons; 1906, 141,575 tons; loss, 81 per cent;

That commerce on practically all inland waterways, excepting the Great Lakes, has greatly decreased and often been driven from the rivers by railway competition;

That the Interstate Commerce Commission and railway commissions of the several States have general powers to reduce railway freight rates wherever conditions warrant and to prevent increase wherever reduction has once been made;

That the river and harbor bill for 1914 as passed by the House appropriates or authorizes an expenditure of $43,289,004, in addition to $32,895,871 in new projects begun and to be maintained by continuing appropriations from future Congresses, in all calling for a proposed expenditure of $76,184,875. To this vast amount, judging from past experience, will be added from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 before the bill is returned from the Senate;

That the adopted projects which we are obligated to complete, including those embraced in the 1914 bill, involve a future expenditure of $305,500,000;

That in addition thereto the Army engineers have recommended 93 new projects which will require a further expenditure of $92,500,000 whenever Congress can be prevailed upon to make such appropriations;

That 120 additional surveys are authorized by the 1914 bill as it passed the House, which will require an indefinite amount for such projects, possibly reaching $100,000,000, judging from the average last noted;

That to these extravagant expenditures will eventually be added billions of dollars, according to the opinion of the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, whenever men of national repute now advocating and supporting other projects can secure their adoption;

That the 1914 bill as it passed the House appropriated $9,500,000 for the Mississippi River, 84 per cent of which is to be expended on the lower river, notwithstanding its commerce decreased over 80 per cent during the past 20 years;

That the Mississippi River Commission on April 14, 1914, at St. Louis, recommended to Congress a further appropriation of $12,000,000 for the Mississippi River for next year;

That the 1914 bill as it passed the House appropriates $2,000,000 for the lower Missouri River, between Kansas City and the Mississippi, which appropriation is part of a $20,000,000 project for that portion of the river, notwithstanding traffic is negligible and actual commerce is alleged to have cost the Government approximately $100 per ton for 1912;

That the 1914 bill as it passed the House appropriates $5,000,000 for canalizing near the Ohio River, a $64,000,000 project, comprehending 63 locks, but no part of the open-river service. Canal freight for 1912 is alleged to have cost the Government over $35 per ton, after allowing full railway-freight rates for coal traffic;

That after spending many millions of dollars on the Coosa, Trinity, Brazos, and Red Rivers, these projects are now alleged to be of no practicable benefit to navigation;

That the intracoastal waterways project, present and postponed, as reported by Government engineers, involves a past, present, and proposed expenditure, with many connecting links not included, of $96,931,006;

That this system includes the construction of new canals of doubtful value, the purchase, through the 1914 bill, of a bankrupt canal proposition the stock of which is shown to be worthless; of projects that propose to especially benefit certain communities to the injury of others, and projects which it is alleged will drive legitimate private waterway ventures into bankruptcy;

That the 1914 bill as passed by the House contains appropriations for projects where the expenditure, according to engineers' reports, is exclusively for local private business interests and not for use by the general public;

That the 1914 bill as passed by the House contains appropriations for creeks which, according to the accompanying engineers' reports, are dry for eight months in the year;

That the 1914 bill as passed by the House contains appropriations for creeks involving in a single instance an appropriation of $750,000, wherein it is alleged the engineers' report was reversed after real estate speculators had brought political pressure to bear in such case;

That the 1914 bill does not carry appropriations for the full amount required to complete projects as asked for by engineers in many cases, thereby preventing the Government from entering into proper or profitable contracts until full appropriations are made;

That the 1914 bill is open to all the objections urged by President Taft against the 1910 bill for the last-mentioned reasons, and contains wasteful appropriations amounting to many millions of dollars: Therefore for the foregoing reasons it is—

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to immediately investigate and as soon as practicable report to Congress the following information:

First. The character and amount of proposed expenditures by the Government now being advocated and supported "by men of national repute," as stated on the floor of the House, the adoption and carrying out of which will cost billions of dollars.

Second. The character and value to the general public of projects to which the Government is now committed, aggregating $305,000,000.

Third. The character and value to the general public of 93 new projects recommended by Army engineers, but not yet adopted by Congress, which will require a further expenditure of $92,500,000.

Fourth. The character and value to the general public of 120 new surveys authorized by the 1914 bill as it passed the House, which will require an indefinite amount reaching to over $100,000,000, based on average last noted, providing such projects are recommended by the Army engineers.

Fifth. To report all river or harbor projects begun and afterwards abandoned by the Government within the past 40 years, together with all expenditures so wasted and reasons for such abandonment.

Sixth. To report as to the truth or falsity of the statement made upon the floor of the Senate that "the whole scheme of river improvement is a humbug and a steal," and to report further as to the truth or falsity of statements made during debate in the House that the river and harbor bill for 1914 as it passed the House is a fraud upon the people, a pork-barrel raid upon the Federal Treasury, approximating in its scope an expenditure of over $76,000,000, and more vicious in character than any of its predecessors.

Seventh. To investigate and report all active influences urging the adoption of the Mississippi River reclamation, the Ohio River canalization, the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal, and other projects contained in the 1914 bill as it passed the House, together with the names of all organizations, companies, individuals, or hired lobbyists now actively engaged in urging such projects.

Eighth. To report fully as to the Mississippi River reclamation project, its probable cost, local benefits to be conferred and value of any lands to be reclaimed; the ownership of such lands; the contributions equitably required from adjoining States, municipalities, or individual interests, if any; the injuries to Memphis, Vicksburg, and other communities alleged on the floor of the House to have been caused by ill-advised engineering projects; and, further, to report as to the permanence of the reclamation project and probable value compared with Government expenditures required.

Ninth. To investigate and report as to the desirability of having the Government take over the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal at double its actual value fixed by the House committee; to report whether the canal company stock is worthless and its bonds valued at only 50 cents on the dollar, as stated on the floor of the House; to report whether this canal project can be completed for $10,514,290, as estimated by Army engineers; to report whether such amount includes the Government contribution of $450,000, made about 90 years ago, and accumulated interest and dividends wrongfully withheld during that period; and to report further whether or not the project is to be taken over for the especial benefit of canal bondholders and shipping interests of Baltimore and Philadelphia. In making such investigation the commission is directed to not limit its hearings to stock and bond holders of the canal company, or to local political influences or interested shipping interests of Baltimore or Philadelphia.

Tenth. To report further what river and harbor projects now under consideration are for the benefit of strictly private business interests without corresponding benefits to the general public, and the influences that secured such projects for such interests.

Eleventh. To report what proportionate benefits should occasion contributions, and to what extent, from local communities, particularly where improvements are of strictly local value and of no material aid to navigation.

Twelfth. To report the financial policy or absence of policy pursued by the Government as to rivers and harbors during the past 40 years; benefits that have accrued to the public through improved river navigation and increased river traffic, if any, resulting from such improvements, together with all further available information on the subject that may be had, together with such recommendations based thereon as may be found proper to make in the premises, having particular reference to the following information:

Thirteenth. To report the practicability of taking away from the Chief of Army Engineers the exclusive right and power of determining the commercial necessity of river and harbor projects and leaving with the Army Engineers' Bureau the single question of technical engineering work.

Fourteenth. To report the practicability of turning over to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to the Department of Commerce all river and harbor improvements, with full power to exercise all the duties now imposed upon the Army Engineering Bureau, excepting such duties as strictly pertain to civil engineering.

Again, on June 8, I secured the floor for a half hour, and presented additional data, particularly on the Ohio canalization project, which receives $5,000,000 in the river and harbor bill as it passed the House and $4,176,000 in the sundry civil bill now before the House, or a total of $9,176,000 for Ohio canalization in 1914, apart from $350,900 for open-channel work. After discussing at some length the merits or demerits of the 1914 pork barrel, I quoted from the Baltimore platform these nuggets of political wisdom and promise:

WHAT DID THESE PROMISES MEAN?

We call the attention of the patriotic citizens of our country to the record of economy and constructive legislation of the Democratic House of Representatives.

* * * * * * *

We denounce the profligate waste of money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses.

* * * * * * *

We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which benefits a democratic government.

Mr. Speaker, when reading the honeyed words in the light of river and harbor performances, it was my privilege to have as auditors throughout that discussion the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the equally distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. FITZGERALD], and the House waited in vain for any refutation of the criticisms lodged against the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I realize the only way to defeat this bill is by giving publicity to its objectionable character. It does not require further analysis of vicious items to condemn the whole 1914 pork-barrel proposition, but in order to present a more complete history of the bill and its environment, for the benefit of those interested in the subject, I desire to address myself to a few additional influences apart from those mentioned in my remarks of June 3, influences which are to-day secretly urging along the passage of the bill.

I pause here for a few moments to invite attention to the powerful connections possessed by the supporters of the Humphreys-Ransdell $60,000,000 Mississippi River appropriation bill, which is being managed, according to his own modest admission, by Mr. John Fox, its secretary.

While it is hard to understand by what influences the supporters of the $60,000,000 Mississippi bill and the apologists for the 1914 pork barrel get space in the leading magazines of the country, I am in a position to prove the high stand taken by editorial writers as a class on these great publications. Recently one of the authors of the Ransdell-Humphreys bill wrote an apology for the 1914 rivers and harbors bill, which was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by his collaborator on the bill. In the next issue the Saturday Evening Post urged editorially that the investigation which I have asked the House to prosecute be had.

The editorial is short, and I venture to again quote the request which has been made to Congress by this magazine, which numbers over 2,000,000 weekly readers:

[From the Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia, Pa., June 6, 1914.]

THE PEOPLE WANT TO KNOW.

Congress appropriates thirty-five or forty million dollars a year for improvement of rivers and harbors. The bills are passed on the time-honored pork-barrel plan. That the expenditures involve huge waste of public funds, and that a considerable part of them is nothing better than graft in an especially obnoxious form, is commonly believed.

If it were generally accepted that such misuse of money derived from the general public obtained in any other field—say, in the railroad field—Congress would immediately order an investigation. Congressman FREAR proposes in a concurrent resolution that the House shall order a thorough investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of river and harbor expenditures. An investigation by a body independent of Congress would be better, but the Interstate Commerce Commission is acceptable.

We feel warranted in assuring Congress that the public would like to know approximately how much of the hundred and fifty millions or upward that has been spent on river and harbor improvements in the last five years has resulted in any tangible public benefit, approximately how much has been wasted, and about how much represents a form of political graft.

We say this without prejudice. A great part of the expenditure may have been quite justified by tangible public benefits resulting from it. The waste may be inconsiderable. But people generally believe that an important portion of the hundred and fifty millions or upward is just a tapping of the public till for the political benefit of individual Congressmen.

Surely that circumstance requires an authoritative investigation. Congress commands extensive resources for investigating. Let it employ them in this case at home.

The industrious manager of the Mississippi River Levee Association, Mr. John A. Fox, was not content with his Saturday Evening Post venture, which brought a righteous demand from the editorial rooms to offset his apology for the 1914 barrel. He decided on May 1 last to make another struggle with publicity. In order to earn the $150,000 contributed by railways and other great corporate agencies I have already quoted, Mr. Fox gives to the world the following information in a news item which he is reported to have sent broadcast throughout the country. I quote from the journal Modern Farming of May 1, as follows:

[From Modern Farming, New Orleans, La., May 1, 1914.]

RIVER PROTECTION.

The Mississippi River Levee Association has been doing effective work in its efforts to get the great Mississippi River problem understood by the people of the Nation, so that it can be treated as a definite and specific problem.

Mr. John A. Fox, the secretary-manager of the association, was recently in New York in conference with a number of the leading magazine publishers, and succeeded in awakening a great deal of interest among them in regard to this great national undertaking. Mr. Arthur Page, the editor of World's Work, was especially interested, and through his great magazine he is going to assist the people of the Delta in getting their project before the United States. He has delegated Mr. George Marvin, a forceful and efficient special writer, to make a trip throughout the entire Delta in order to visit all of the cities and gather such information as will be necessary to present the matter clearly and logically in a series of five or six articles. Mr. Marvin was in Washington with Mr. Fox the latter part of last month, and left on April 27 for an extended trip throughout the Delta. He expects to start at Cape Girardeau and come down the river gradually, so as to visit every city and community and obtain all the facts regarding the levees, the bank revetments, channel improvement, development of the back country dependent upon the levees, and in fact everything that will enable him to place the case squarely before the people.

Mr. Fox has given him letters of introduction to parties all along the thousand miles, and asks that the people of every city along the line do everything in their power to help Mr. Marvin in securing his data and information. These articles, appearing in such a magazine as World's Work, will be of the greatest benefit to the Delta country, and Mr. Marvin has had a great deal of experience as a war correspondent in the Far East, and knows how to handle this great subject from a human-interest point of view.

He comes to the valley with an open mind, entirely unprejudiced regarding one system or another, and it will not be his mission to say how the matter shall be solved. He will simply gather all the facts in the case and present them clearly and forcefully, leaving the matter of the solution to the technical boards of engineers. His articles will prove conclusively to the American people that this great Mississippi River problem is a national one and that the cause is too great for the work to be undertaken by the people directly affected alone. He will be able to show that the protection of 20,000,000 acres of land in the heart of the country will be the means of adding an enormous output to its cotton crop, and he will also be able to show that the amount lost each year in damages by the floods is far more than sufficient to complete the entire levee system and revet the banks, so as to prevent these disasters.

No better publicity opportunity has come to the people of the Delta than will be given through World's Work, and it behooves everyone from Cape Girardeau to the Gulf to cooperate in the fullest manner with Mr. Marvin when he makes his trip and to assist him in getting all of the data that he needs.

We have learned that the Saturday Evening Post speaks its opinions fearlessly to its 2,000,000 readers. Other great magazines have with equal courage denounced the 1914 "pork barrel," and I hasten to disprove any unwarranted inference contained in Mr. John A. Fox's published statement by inserting at this point an editorial from the June, 1914, number of the World's Work:

"PORK BARRELS" AND PUBLIC CONFIDENCE.

Representative JAMES A. FREAR, of the tenth district of Wisconsin, recently sent the following letter to the World's Work:

"I am sending to you, under separate cover, a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing my criticisms of the $43,000,000 river and harbor appropriation bill for 1914, which, in fact, is a $76,000,000 proposition.

"It is vicious in character, in my judgment is nine-tenths bad, and ought to be defeated. It has passed the House, may pass the Senate within the next two or three weeks, and I am writing you in hope that through publicity of its contents the President will veto it. I have no personal interest in the matter, but the bill ought to be defeated. Publicity based upon the facts presented will bring this result about. You speak to many thousands. As a matter of public responsibility, will you do your share?

"Very truly, yours,

"JAMES A. FREAR.

"P. S.—Your article on the 'pork barrel' three or four years ago attracted my attention to the subject."

This bill and all its immediate predecessors are "pork-barrel" bills, which means that the appropriations are urged by Members of Congress because they feel that the expenditure of money in their districts will be popular, and, despite the fact that in many instances, perhaps most instances, there is no possibility that the traffic on the rivers will justify the expense of "improving" them. The bills are passed because they give "pork" to enough districts to get a majority for the bill.

There are plenty of legitimate river and harbor expenditures, but they are not distributed in as many congressional districts as are the illegitimate ones, and with the present system of river and harbor legislation the illegitimate projects get much of the money which ought to be spent for useful improvements or not spent at all.

It is a good sign that there is an opposition to "pork-barrel" methods growing up in Congress, for if Congress could stop passing such measures (either with or without the hope of having the President veto them) it would not only save the Public Treasury a tremendous amount of money, but it would do a far more important service by removing one of the most corrupting influences in our national politics, and it would give the public an opportunity to place in Congress the confidence which of late years has been given to the Executive.

Mr. Speaker, I confidently hope and believe the $93,000,000 notorious pork barrel of 1914, the worst in the history of the country, is doomed to defeat; and if so, these two magazines from which I have quoted, the Saturday Evening Post and the World's Work, will be entitled to their full share of praise in bringing about the result. They reflect sentiments expressed in many publications which have come to my hands, and they speak the judgment of an outraged public.

MR. FOX, THE SECRETARY AND MANAGER.

Mr. Fox has indirectly performed a great public service to the American people. He has collected $150,000, and possibly much more; my resolution of investigation would disclose the facts. His contributions are from eight railroads, the International Harvester Co., and other influential corporations. He is able to boost the 1914 pork barrel by several columns of publicity on "What is not in the barrel." He proposes to secure the aid of an "unprejudiced writer," who is to boost the Mississippi River $60,000,000 project in five or six articles. He is the manager of the association which I showed in my remarks of June 3, based on the testimony of a prominent waterways publication, is engaged in sandbagging northern business men to support his vicious measure.

Mr. John A. Fox is a power, as I am prepared to show if an investigation can be had, and he is seeking by every possible means to force Congress to approve his $60,000,000 proposition; but, thank God, Mr. Fox does not control the editorial utterances of great public journals which denounce corrupt efforts to raid the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, what a spectacle is presented to the country when eight railroads, now pounding away at the doors of the Interstate Commerce Commission for higher freight rates, are disclosed to be secret contributors to a five-year secret corruption fund, raised to filch $60,000,000 out of the Government.

Another startling fact stands out in this connection. Whether Mr. Fox has any great power over legislative action will only be disclosed by a thorough investigation, but through some unexplained influence we are informed that $1,000,000 is to be added to the $9,500,000 which the 1914 pork barrel carried through the House for the Mississippi River, and $9,000,000 of this amount goes into the Mississippi south of St. Louis. The total Mississippi River traffic, according to Government engineers' reports, does not reach one-half that of the city of Milwaukee, in my own State. The entire commerce on the 3,000 miles of river from St. Paul to the Gulf does not amount to one-tenth of the 41,000,000 tons handled at the Superior-Duluth Harbor, at the north border of my State. After an expenditure of $144,000,000 the Mississippi River traffic has dwindled down to less than 20 per cent of what it was 25 years ago. That is the record according to Government reports.

"RECLAMATION" NOW THE CRY.

Mr. Speaker, under the new cry of "reclamation" the $60,000,000 Mississippi River scheme, ridiculed alike by rivermen and waterway experts the country over, is now seeking the limelight in five or six articles not yet prepared by an "unprejudiced" writer assigned to the job through the solicitation of Mr. Fox.

At their April meeting the Mississippi River Commission, composed of several $3,000 men, demanded that $12,000,000 be placed in its hands by Congress next year for distribution. The commission is running riot with the Treasury, it is ruining the water front of Vicksburg and Memphis and many other localities, as I showed in my remarks of June 3 and as I propose to show by the commission's own admission. With this remarkable record to its credit we are now asked by the 1914 bill as amended to raise their salaries.

THE MISSISSIPPI COMMISSION.

Two increases are to be added to the $9,500,000 Mississippi River item. One is an increase in the salaries of the commissioners who disburse the money and determine its use; the other is to raise the 1914 item to $10,500,000. I do not set my judgment against that of the commission, but I propose to show by its own admission that the commission is not only irresponsible in the making of such expenditures, but it is incompetent by its own confession to aid navigation or protect the people for whom it is said this money is to be used if we can divert the funds constitutionally. I have discussed the Mississippi River before and shown that with all its logs, sand, and gravel, which compose a large percentage of its remaining traffic, also including frequent duplications which by some hocus-pocus is countenanced by Government engineers, as I have shown, the reports only indicate about 3,500,000 tons of freight on the entire 4,000 miles of the river, or less than one-half that of the single port of Milwaukee, or less than one-tenth of the traffic at the Superior-Duluth Harbor, on the borders of my own State. For this comparatively negligible traffic in logs, sand, gravel, and other cheap freight we are to spend $10,500,000 in 1914. I have also shown to the House before by Government reports that the river traffic has decreased 80 per cent within the past 25 years and that nothing is to be shown for the $144,000,000 sunk in the Mississippi by the Government beyond wasted Government work and money to save 20 per cent of a once thriving commerce.

The following indictment of waste and incompetency is now lodged against the commission and Congress by House bill 13581, which was on the calendar this week. It presents the most surprising confession of idiotic mismanagement of Government funds intrusted to the commission's care that can be offered. The bill seeks to give landowners along the Mississippi whose lands have been overflowed through criminal incompetence of the commission the right to bring action against the Government for recovery of damages. The spectacle of a commission asking the Government to pay damages caused by its engineering blunders is an admission of stupidity either on the part of the commission or of Congress, or both, that call for the services of an alienist. It is hard to determine which is most at fault—an incompetent commission or a legislative body that does not know the difference and seeks to cover up its own ignorance of conditions by raising the salaries of this reckless, wasteful congressional agent.

An extract from the committee's report, submitted by a Mississippi member of the committee, relates the story at some length; but the facts should be placed in the RECORD to call attention to the incompetence and lack of judgment of a commission about to spend $10,500,000 in its own sweet way and time and to get a salary raise for the wonderful record it has made and is making. I commend to the careful reading of every Member of Congress a thoughtful consideration of this report. Bearing in mind that the total appropriations for the Mississippi now reach $144,000,000, that we are pouring ten millions into the river annually, and that the estimates show hundreds of millions will continue to go into this same thirsty river, also keeping in mind that the river traffic has not responded to this mighty subsidy, but has practically disappeared, as I have repeatedly shown from the reports, and with these matters forcibly presented to us by present conditions, does it not seem deplorable that Congress will continue to give several $3,000-a-year men the absolute control and wasteful disbursement of countless millions? What are we thinking about as to our own responsibility to our constituents and to the country? How can we excuse or explain this monstrous waste of Government funds?

The story is not half told, as will be discovered from the committee report. That report proves conclusively that the whole project is a farce and a fraud. It explains clearly why waterway experts are holding up the commission to derision and condemning Congress for inaction. It explains why hard-headed rivermen who know the Mississippi from St. Paul to the Gulf are denouncing the foolhardy proceeding that is being foisted on the people by this commission.

NAVIGATION HAS DISAPPEARED.

Navigation is lost beyond recovery while these experts have been experimenting in levee building. Now we discover that through their unscientific and unbusinesslike work they have ruined the water fronts of cities, flooded the homes of helpless people, wasted not only the Government money but millions of dollars worth of property of people living adjacent to the river, and for all this the members of the commission demand that Congress pay the damages caused by their own blundering, and, further, as a mark of especial appreciation, that we raise their salaries. Even the glitter of 26 projects for a single State, even the promise of unlimited "pork" for some particular State ought to no longer blind our eyes to our own responsibility. Read the full report, because, although it relates to an expenditure of millions of dollars on one hand to accomplish millions of dollars in ruin and desolation on the other, I can only quote a brief extract to show our own shortcomings and our public responsibility for these wicked, wasteful conditions:

[House Report No. 390, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

RELIEF OF CERTAIN LANDOWNERS ON THE EAST BANK OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 13581:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13581) for the relief of the landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and in the parish of West Feliciana, State of Louisiana, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill under consideration carries no appropriation, but as recommended by the river commission and officers of the War Department, refers the claims of the landowners in these counties to a court for adjudication.

The relief sought by this bill is the legislation prayed for by joint resolution No. 14, which passed the Legislature of the State of Mississippi and was approved by Gov. Noel on February 15, 1910 (see Laws of Mississippi, 1910, p. 109, ch. 363), and by another joint resolution which passed the legislature of that State by a unanimous vote last June. Both of these resolutions memorialled Congress, and especially the Representatives in Congress from Mississippi, to enact legislation similar to that set out in the bill under consideration.

In the first session of the Sixty-first Congress a similar bill (H. R. 6467) was referred to this committee, and by the committee referred to the War Department, and by that department to the Mississippi River Commission for report. That commission, on April 1, 1910, in returning said bill to the War Department, reported as follows:

*"There is no doubt that the lands and other property referred to in the bill have been more or less damaged by the construction of the levees along the lower Mississippi River which have been built in recent years under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission. * * * At the same time the United States has been benefited by the general improvement of the river for navigation"*—

(The foregoing statement is pitifully weak and the latter part absolutely disproved by the loss of 80 per cent of the Mississippi River traffic, as shown by Government reports.)

And after further stating the facts as to the damage to the east-bank lands in these counties, on the question of the relief provided in said bill for the landowners, said:

"It would be desirable to have some court or special commission do this, if possible, as a matter of justice to everybody; and if such court is to act at all, it seems just and equitable that it should consider the cases of all landowners affected, without reference to any time limitation."

Said House Document 1010 is a report made by the Mississippi River Commission in accordance with a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, which appropriated $30,000 for the purpose of investigating the claims of these landowners and to survey said lands.

* * * * * * *

Prior to the construction of the levee system along the Mississippi River, which commenced a few years after the Mississippi River Commission was created in 1879, the high waters of the river spread out in a thin sheet over a territory from Cairo to Vicksburg, 25 to 70 miles wide, the narrowest place being at Helena, Ark., where it was approximately 25 miles wide—that is, from the foothills in Arkansas on the west to the foothills in Mississippi on the east—but at Arkansas City the high waters spread over a territory 70 miles wide.

At Vicksburg the high waters spread in a thin sheet over the territory between the foothills south of Vicksburg, on the east, to the Ouachita River, on the west; that is, over a territory 70 miles in width. From Vicksburg south the territory over which the high waters flowed narrowed, and at Natchez had a width of approximately 30 miles; that is, from the foothills in Mississippi, on the east, to Harrisonburg on the Boeuf River, on the west. From Natchez to Baton Rouge the high waters flowed over a territory approximately 40 miles wide; that is, the foothills in Mississippi continued as the eastern boundary, and the high waters spread out in a thin sheet over all the land extending from said foothills west into Louisiana as far as Catahoula at the north and to Bayou Cocodrie and Bayou Teche, just east of Opelousas, and was approximately 40 miles wide. From Baton Rouge south to the Gulf of Mexico the high waters flowed over a territory approximately 40 miles wide, the bulk of said territory being south and west of the main channel of the river. From the above it will be seen that prior to the construction of the levee system by the Government the high waters of the river spread out in a thin sheet over territory from 25 to 70 miles wide, or over a territory having an average width of about 40 miles.

In addition to these obstructions to the free flow of the high waters of the river south of Vicksburg, the high waters are brought from Cairo, south, diverted from their natural course, and confined between two lines of levees, as before stated, to the mouth of the Yazoo River, over a territory only about one-twelfth as wide as that over which the high waters flowed before levee construction, and at Brunswick, just north of the mouth of the Yazoo River, these diverted and confined waters are turned loose in volume much greater and with a current more forceful and destructive than before levee construction on the land in these counties lying between the foothills east of the river and the line of levees west of the river, with the result that said lands on the east bank of the river between the foothills and the main channel of the river, from Vicksburg to Baton Rouge, have been destroyed and the landowners driven from their homes, their houses, cabins, and other improvements washed from their foundations and destroyed, and their land in some instances covered with sand and gravel to a depth of from 6 inches to 10 feet, and in other instances the waves and currents of the high waters have washed gullies in their lands to a depth of from 3 to 15 feet, thereby destroying said lands for all agricultural purposes.

* * * * * * *

The river commission for the fourth time, in its annual report for 1910, at pages 2937–2939, calls the attention of Congress to the destruction of the east-bank lands in these counties as a result of the construction of the levee system, and in very strong language states the facts and makes recommendations for the relief of the owners thereof. Practically all the river commission has said in its annual reports hereinbefore mentioned relative to the destruction of the east-bank lands in these counties, as a result of the construction of the levee system, is restated in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session, a report made by that commission, after investigating the claims of the east-bank landowners, the destruction of said lands as a result of the construction of the levee system, and a survey of said lands as required by a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, appropriating $30,000 for such investigation and survey of said lands.

The river commission's report for 1910 states that the east-bank lands in these counties are "permanently inundated" as a result of the construction of the levee system to improve the river for navigation, and this last report, set out in House Document No. 1010, on page 12, paragraph 84, states:

"The land embraced in these basins is in places covered with willow, a material that would be valuable for use in the work of river improvement, and in such cases it is desirable that the ownership should be in the United States. In fact, the earlier reports of the commission recommend that such lands be acquired for that purpose."

The annual reports of the Mississippi River Commission informed the Congress of the commission's plan of river improvement by the inauguration and construction of the levee system, and practically all of the acts of Congress making appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Head of Passes approved the river commission's plan of improvement, and provided that the appropriations for the improvement of the river for navigation from Cairo to the Head of Passes should be in accordance with the plans of the river commission which had been reported to Congress.

* * * * * * *

Another view of this matter and the change effected by the construction of the levee system can be obtained by referring to the fact that before the construction of the levee system the high waters of the river periodically flowed over 29,790 square miles and had a free flow from Cairo without continuous obstruction on either side of the river to the Gulf of Mexico. Since the construction of the levee system 26,569 square miles are protected by the levees composing said levee system. In other words, before the construction of the levee system the high waters flowed over 29,790 square miles of territory, and since the construction of said levee system the high waters are obstructed and compelled to flow over a territory of only 3,221 square miles, showing that the high waters are now compelled to flow over a territory approximately one-tenth as large as that over which it flowed before being obstructed and diverted by levee construction. Instead of flowing as formerly over this large territory in a thin sheet, the high waters are now compelled to flow over a smaller territory in a much thicker sheet, or to a greater depth, and the space being only one-tenth as large, the lands lying adjacent to the river, where no levees have been constructed, are flooded much more frequently than before levee construction, for the reason that it requires less water to flow them, and the construction of levees on both sides of the river, north of their lands, and on the west side of the river in front of their lands, brings more water down the main channel than flowed there formerly.

* * * * * * *

As stated by the Mississippi River Commission in its report for 1910, "the situation (of these east-bank citizens) is pathetic and distressing in the highest degree. That these people should be condemned to perpetual inundation without possibility of relief or redress for the sake of an improvement from which their fellow citizens are enjoying great benefits is intolerable to any man's sense of justice," and "the lives of the landowners are passing away and hope deferred is making their hearts sick."

* * * * * * *

The United States Court of Claims was created and given certain general jurisdiction for the relief of citizens and "to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and ever since it was created Congress has from time to time frequently given it additional jurisdiction in special cases to further relieve Congress or an executive department, and at the same time give relief to citizens who had grievances against the Government, and who under the first amendment to the Constitution are guaranteed the right to petition the Congress for the redress of their grievances.

Precedents for giving the Court of Claims additional jurisdiction in special cases are numerous, and some of them will be found in the Statutes at Large as follows: Eighteenth Statutes at Large, pages 506, 507; Twenty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 1010.

And this widespread calamity, brought about by the Mississippi River Commission experiments in aid of navigation, is a fit conclusion to the wasted millions expended in harnessing a river that is 70 miles wide and 70 feet deep at Vicksburg during flood periods. When will Congress and the country wake up to an understanding of a situation to be made worse when the $150,000 secret railway fund used for the passage of the $60,000,000 Ransdell-Humphreys bill performs its secret mission through Congress?

In this connection I quote the opinion of the St. Louis Republic on the necessity for local contributions in order to invite confidence in the Mississippi River project:

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Republic, June 11, 1914.]

TO ANSWER THE CRITICS.

When Representative FREAR, of Wisconsin, attacked the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers he stated truthfully that the sums spent on these rivers are enormously disproportionate to their use as navigable streams. If it were not for the flood protection which levee building affords, the claims of the Mississippi River country for river improvement would be woefully weak, and all the country could continue to ask why millions should be spent on improving rivers when nobody uses them, with no fear of a satisfactory reply. They know the river was used in other days; they know that other rivers less adapted to navigation than the Ohio or the Mississippi carry vast tonnages in competition with railroads, and in that situation they doubt if improvements would cause them to be used.

The best possible answer which the people along the Mississippi can give to that line of argument is to go about their own share of improvement so as to make what they already have usable. That share consists in the building of modern terminals with money-saving devices for handling freight so that all the economy of cheap river transportation shall not be eaten up in freight handling.

When that is done a visible demonstration can be made of the error of Representative FREAR when he declared that all the money spent on the rivers and all that is to be spent will never win back the traffic that the railroads took away from them. A demonstration can also be made to the country at large that money spent on the Mississippi and its tributaries will mean cheaper transportation, the relief of railroad congestion, and more prosperity.

RAILROADS CONTROL NAVIGATION.

Mr. Speaker, I have thus far endeavored to show that the railways were behind some of these projects, and are particularly in evidence with the Mississippi River $60,000,000 project. Just why they are interested in the $150,000 secret fund an investigation would disclose, but I believe this contribution is one of the smallest that has been disclosed. The mouse that was seen in the House recently occupied many columns of space in the daily newspapers, but gray rats never get a line when they slink into darkness down around the foundations of the Capitol Building. So, too, items amounting to a few hundred dollars occupy the time of the House and space in the press, when a salacious turn can be given to the news story, whereas a $93,000,000 "pork barrel" raid on the Treasury fails to get a line of criticism from many highly respectable journals of the day. With their combined help the "pork barrel" would be blown out of existence, because it will never stand the searchlight of publicity.

The gray rat of the railroad connection with the river and harbor "pork barrel" rests with self-interest, and interests of the country are more concerned with good, fat appropriations than the railroads of the country.

Mr. Speaker, the railroads own many of the steamship and barge lines of the country. They are so closely allied with some of the remaining steamship companies through traffic agreements and other contracts that the railroads have become a controlling factor in the subject of waterway transportation. I quote from the statistics which appear in the report of the Commissioner of Corporations on Transportation by Water in the United States (pt. 4, Dec. 23, 1912):

The extensive water traffic between New York City and the New England ports is almost completely controlled by a single railroad—the New York, New Haven & Hartford (New Haven system)—or by the Eastern Steamship Corporation, in which the New Haven system is at present a considerable stockholder, though claiming to have no voice in the management. The only line from New York to Portland, Me., is owned by the Eastern Steamship Corporation, and this is true of the only direct water line from New York to Boston. In the Long Island Sound traffic all the regular lines are controlled by the New Haven system, except five companies, with only a few small boats, and two of these are controlled by other railroads—one of the Central Vermont Transportation Co., a subsidiary of the Central Vermont Railway, and the other the Montauk Steamboat Co. (Ltd.), controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad. The New Haven system, moreover, owns a majority of the stock of the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co., itself a shipping merger, operating, among other services, lines between Boston and Philadelphia and between Boston and Newport News, Norfolk, and Baltimore. No other steamship line operates between Boston and the ports named.

Most of the steamship interests of the New Haven system are held by an intermediary holding company, the New England Navigation Co.

Between New York and Norfolk there is only one steamship line, the Old Dominion Steamboat Co., and a controlling interest in this is owned by five railroads—the Atlantic Coast Line, the Southern Railway, the Seaboard Air Line, the Chesapeake & Ohio, and the Norfolk & Western.

Between New York and Savannah there is only one steamship line, the Ocean Steamship Co. of Savannah. This is owned by the Central of Georgia Railway, control of which is held by the Illinois Central. About one-fifth of the latter's stock, in turn, is owned by the Union Pacific Railroad.

Between New York and New Orleans there is now only one steamship line, that of the Southern Pacific Co., which long ago bought up two formerly competing lines. A working control of the Southern Pacific Co. has for years been held by the Union Pacific Railroad, but this has recently been declared illegal by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Between New York and Galveston there are two water lines. One of these is a railroad-owned line (Southern Pacific), while the other, the Mallory Line, is owned by a shipping consolidation, the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines. This consolidation also owns the Texas City Steamship Co., operating between New York and Texas City, which on through traffic is virtually a part of the port of Galveston. The acquisition of this line was preceded by a severe rate war.

The principal local lines on Chesapeake Bay and its numerous tributaries are owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., through railroad subsidiaries, while the three through lines between Baltimore and Norfolk are also under railroad control.

Again, nearly all the important anthracite coal fleets engaged in the North Atlantic coastwise trade are owned by the few great anthracite railroads.

On the Great Lakes all the important through passenger and package-freight lines are owned by railroads. In the local package-freight traffic there are a large number of independent water carriers. In the transportation of bulk freight, other than grain, such as ore, coal, and lumber, the railroad boat lines have practically no part. Several of the principal Lake fleets handling these products, however, are under the control of important industrial concerns, the largest being that of the Pittsburgh Steamship Co., controlled by the United States Steel Corporation.

On the Mississippi River system steamboat lines have largely succumbed to railroad competition or to natural difficulties. Most of the few remaining packet lines are independent of railroads, but are usually feeble competitors. The principal item of traffic to-day on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers is bituminous coal, and the great bulk of through traffic in this commodity is handled by a single industrial consolidation, the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal & Coke Co., a controlling interest in which is, in turn, owned by the Pittsburgh Coal Co.

On the Pacific coast independent steamship lines are a much more important factor in domestic coastwise traffic. Several important water lines, however, including the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., chiefly engaged in foreign trade, and the San Francisco & Portland Steamship Co., are controlled by the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific Railroad system. The Southern Pacific Co. also controls a fleet of oil vessels belonging to the Associated Oil Co., in which it owns a majority stock interest. There are also other water lines under railroad control.

Considering only water lines directly operated or in which railroads own a majority of the stock, and excluding harbor craft, this report shows that 20 railroads control steam vessels engaged exclusively in domestic trade of approximately 610,000 gross tonnage and line barges with about 200,000 gross tons, or a grand total of 810,000 gross tons. The tonnage of the New Haven system is the largest, aggregating a little over 200,000 gross tons, of which 156,500 tons is in steam vessels and 43,600 tons in barges and miscellaneous craft. Next in importance is the Union Pacific-Southern Pacific, with a grand total, excluding tonnage engaged in foreign trade, of over 150,000 gross tons. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co.'s water lines have 68,500 gross tons in steamers and 8,500 tons in barges; the New York Central over 50,000 gross tons; the Central of Georgia Railway over 40,000 gross tons.

The total capitalization of water lines controlled by these railroads—this not covering holding companies and several very important unincorporated services—aggregates $53,339,375 in stock and $31,263,887 in bonded debt. Of the stock $40,223,800 and of the bonds $19,211,137 are owned by 18 railroads or their subsidiaries. In most instances railroads own practically all the stock of the separately incorporated water lines which they control. Important exceptions are the Pacific Mail, in which the Southern Pacific owns only a trifle over one-half the $20,000,000 stock, and the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co., in which the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad owns only a bare majority interest. Instances where railroads own stock in a water line, but less than a majority interest, are comparatively few.

Of the regular line traffic on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts not controlled by railroads, the great bulk, as stated, is controlled by two important consolidations—the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines and the Eastern Steamship Corporation. With few exceptions, the constituent companies of these consolidations had been subsidiaries of an earlier merger—the Consolidated Steamship Lines—which collapsed shortly after its formation in 1907.

The larger of these consolidations—the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines, a holding company—controls, chiefly through subsidiaries, 72 vessels (exclusive of harbor craft) with 226,736 gross tons. Nearly one-third of this tonnage, however—that of the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co. (Ward Line)—is engaged in foreign trade with the West Indies and Mexico. The domestic lines owned by this consolidation are the Clyde Steamship Co., with 54,700 gross tons; Mallory Steamship Co., 46,500 gross tons; New York & Porto Rico Steamship Co. (of Maine), 337,100 gross tons; Texas City Steamship Co., 13,300 gross tons; and the Southern Steamship Co., 6,200 gross tons. In addition there are a few subsidiary terminal or lighterage companies. The issued capital stock of the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines is $29,993,400; its bonded indebtedness is $12,623,000, and that of its subsidiary companies $17,432,000.

Except for railroad-owned lines and services to Porto Rico, there is hardly a competing line of importance operating between the domestic ports served by the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines.

PURPOSE OF CONTROL OF WATER LINES.

In acquiring their extensive control over domestic water carriers, railroads have had in general three purposes: First, to eliminate the competition of water carriers; second, to obtain an entrance into territory not open to their rail lines; and, third, to secure valuable feeders, mainly local lines.

In the case of the New Haven system all these purposes are apparent. For some time past the New Haven system has pursued a determined policy of suppressing any effective competition on Long Island Sound; several, at least, of its recent acquisitions must be regarded as due to this policy. On the other hand, some of its earlier acquisitions came about largely as an incident to the merger of different railroad properties into the present system. Control of the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co. is claimed by New Haven interests to have been sought in order to secure direct access to southern territory. However, elimination of competition was also an important factor.

Can any sensible man fail to recognize the interest possessed by the railways of the country, as well as by a few independent steamship lines, in securing liberal appropriations from the Government for various projects? These companies exercise an exclusive right to carry passengers on water as they do on land, and I desire to present another side light to show that the Government has an equal legal right, as a matter of practical results, to build a railway and present it to a private company for operation as it has for dredging out the average waterway or harbor.

In other words, all the talk against subsidizing shipping interests appears to be the merest "buncombe" when we realize that we have been subsidizing the railway and shipping interests from the day the first land grant was given and the first shovelful taken from the rivers and harbors of the country at Government expense, over a half century ago, down to the 1914 pork barrel of $93,000,000, which is the most notorious of all and represents a combined push by all the interested factors.

ANOTHER MONOPOLY.

One of the most interesting documents published by the Commissioner of Corporations is that relating to water terminals and found in part 3 of Transportation by Water in the United States, issued in 1910.

Not only do the railroads own the shipping, but they also own the terminals. Where they do not own the terminals, the piers are usually owned exclusively by private companies that exclude all other craft from the landing. In other words, when New York gets a liberal appropriation from the Government it is not the public that gets the benefit. Of course there are many piers and landings owned or controlled by the city of New York, but these are not public by any means. Father Knickerbocker is a thrifty old man who turns an honest penny whenever opportunity affords. If you would find just how far he is making money out of the water traffic, all that is necessary to do is to get a copy of the annual report of the city of New York on the department of docks and ferries.

On page 12 of the report for 1912 the commissioner of docks writes as follows:

RENTAL POLICY.

In my annual report for 1911 I made special note of the necessity for publicity in making of leases, and the granting of permits, and for a definite rental policy on the part of the city.

In the granting of leases and permits I believe it should become the fixed policy of this department that all applications, and their consideration and discussion, should be given full publicity; this publicity to be safeguarded by the privilege of public hearing in the department's board room for any applicant or protestant who is dissatisfied or who requests such hearing to bring out all facts relating to the privilege under consideration. The stenographic minutes of these hearings should be on the public files of the department and accessible to all those interested. Much discretionary powers in these matters must always be vested for business efficiency in the commissioner of docks, and such procedure will not only safeguard against an abuse of this power, but also in turn safeguard the commissioner and the administration from unjust criticism. During the past year the determination of the general policy governing the matter of rentals for leases and privileges has been the subject of further conferences between the deputy comptroller and myself. We were appointed a committee by the commissioners of the sinking fund to consider the matter. The fundamental principle to be decided is whether such a general policy should be based on the assumption that all leases should be sold at public auction to the highest bidder, such leases as may be arranged for by direct negotiation to be considered an exception to this rule, or whether the commissioner of docks should first assemble all the facts relative to the lease under consideration and then recommend to the commissioners of the sinking fund either the terms and conditions of the proposed lease and the appraised rental, or that the lease should be sold at public auction to the highest bidder; such recommendation of course, subject to the final determination of the sinking fund commission. The committee anticipates an issuance of its report with recommendations on these general principles and other considerations appertaining thereto early in 1913.

In order that the number of pennies received from dock rentals and other privileges may be appreciated I briefly quote from page 53 of the same New York City report:

Statement of the revenues and disbursements of the department of docks and ferries for the year ending Dec. 31, 1912.

REVENUE.

1. Amount of accrued rents uncollected Dec. 31, 1912, as per report for the year ending on that date	$16,929.20
Less claims sent to corporation counsel for collection	12.50
		$16,916.70
2. Rents accrued during the year 1912 from leased city wharf property and for land under water covered by wharf improvements erected by permission of the department	4,240,510.08
3. Wharfage collected within the year from unleased city wharf property	261,082.61
		4,501,592.69
4. Leases of ferry franchises and city wharf property used for ferry purposes		244,404.20
5. Receipts from operation of municipal ferry (Staten Island) traffic	759,365.70
6. Receipts from operation of municipal ferry (Staten Island) privileges	92,431.16
		851,796.86
7. Receipts from operation of municipal ferry (39th St., South Brooklyn) traffic	185,101.72
8. Receipts from operation of municipal ferry (39th St., South Brooklyn) privileges	5,294.23
		190,395.95
9. Miscellaneous receipts		18,598.24
10. Claims for unpaid rents placed in hands of corporation counsel prior to Dec. 31, 1911, collected during the year 1912		3.75
Total		5,823,708.39

PIERS ARE PROFITABLE.

Of the above amount, only $4,501,592.69 is credited strictly to leasing of wharves and wharfage, but on page 68 of the report it is learned that within about 40 years the city has gathered in $80,058,877.98, during all of which time the Government has been putting into the harbor countless millions of dollars. Government aid should be extended to secure navigation; but what relation does the navigation of New York Harbor bear to the general public when a thousand lessees are given the exclusive use of the public wharves and piers?

The Pennsylvania Railroad pays about $25,000 a year for land under water and many thousands of dollars more for other privileges and has the exclusive control of its own piers. The New Haven, New Jersey Central, Erie, West Shore, and other railways have exclusive rights to wharves. In fact, so far as I have been able to ascertain, the navigation business becomes a close corporation dependent upon the leases in force. Tramp steamers are trespassers and strange vessels interlopers unless they can arrange with some lessee for landing rights. Objectionable competition can not be carried on in the public interest.

In order to get the full significance of the city docks, which are leased, and railroad docks, which are exclusive, I quote briefly from page 72 of the report of the Commissioner of Corporations:

From West Seventieth Street down North River to the Battery and up East River to East Forty-second Street there are approximately 180 piers, not including ferry slips, of which number the city owns about 150 and partly owns from 5 to 10 others.

RAILROAD OWNERSHIP.

The New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co. owns and occupies the entire North River frontage between West Sixtieth and West Seventy-second Streets, except street ends. Between the Battery and Murray Street on North River there are 21 piers, and all but 6 of these are owned by private interests, mainly railroads. While private interests own the piers in this latter section, the city over a considerable portion of the distance owns the bulkhead. The Long Island Railroad Co. (Pennsylvania system) owns extensive water-front properties on Newtown Creek and on East River in that vicinity. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. owns considerable property at Sixty-fifth Street, Brooklyn, where freight terminals are under construction. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. also owns a freight station adjoining the Brooklyn eastern district terminal The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has extensive yards on the Harlem River and at Port Morris on the East River, and nearly all the railroads entering New York have freight terminals in this neighborhood. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has its terminals on the north shore of Staten Island. The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., through its control of the Harlem Transfer Co., has valuable terminals on the Harlem River. The railroad has also acquired the properties of the Brooklyn Dock & Terminal Co. and the Brooklyn Warehouse & Dry Dock Co., which comprises dry docks, slips, bridges, warehouses, etc.

DOCK AND TERMINAL COMPANIES.

Most of the Brooklyn water front south of the Brooklyn Bridge is owned by three dock concerns, namely, the New York Dock Co., the estate of William Beard (Erin Basin), and the Bush Terminal Co. The American Dock & Trust Co. owns property on Staten Island.

More significant than the foregoing is the following extract from the same report, found on page 6:

Although New York City thus owns a very large portion of the important frontage and of the wharves as well, it has greatly reduced its own practical control thereof by a system of long-term leases for such wharves. Unlike many other ports, New York has in general followed the policy of making its water front a substantial source of net revenue. The city revenue from leased wharves in 1908 was $3,440,949. Of approximately 200 leases in force in December, 1908, 158 of them were for 10 years or more. Of these 158, 62 were for from 10 and under 20 years, 47 were for 20 and under 30 years, and 49 were for 30 years or more, some of the most desirable property being leased for 50 years. As a result of this lease system, there are very few "open piers"; that is, piers not exclusively controlled by particular interests, and available for general traffic, tramp vessels, or transients. At present (1910) there is only one pier and one-half of another "open" on the North River between the Battery (the lower end of Manhattan Island) and Thirtieth Street. There are but six on the East River between the Battery and Corlears Hook (Grand Street). There are only two "open piers" in Brooklyn, with part of five others and six "open" bulkhead landings. At the present time there are but two piers reserved for canal boats. There is only one "open pier" on Staten Island. In this important matter of open piers New York is in marked contrast to San Francisco, described later.

The long leases of city piers are held mainly by steamship companies and railroads.

This policy of long leases for revenue as opposed to the policy of "open piers" for the development of water traffic is a broad question to be determined by each particular locality. The present commissioner of docks and ferries seems to have determined upon a change, or at least a modification of this policy. In July, 1910, the lease expired on Pier 1, near the Battery, and instead of again leasing this property it was thrown open to general wharfage for local sound and river steamers. If this action can be taken as the beginning of a policy to consider primarily the needs of water traffic rather than the securing of revenue, it is a significant and important step.

NEW YORK'S GIGANTIC MONOPOLY.

From the foregoing it will be observed that the greatest port in the world is controlled by a gigantic monopoly. The railroads and private interests own many miles that are for their exclusive use, and the city owns many miles more, but the municipal piers are leased to railways, private companies, or individuals, and so become as much a part of the monopoly as are the private piers. If my conclusion is wrong, I shall be glad to be corrected; but if these statements are correct, it becomes a matter of interest to the taxpayers of the country, from Maine to California, to know just where the public comes in by this operation. Why are Government moneys launched into the bays of New York and all other great harbors to accommodate monster liners, when New York City gets the rentals or the added conveniences are for the benefit of transportation companies that exclusively own their terminals and render no account to the General Government? In other words, why does not the Government pay for building the Pennsylvania Railway tunnel or contribute toward terminals for the New Haven Railroad, as long as it dredges out a harbor for the convenience of vessels operated by the New Haven Railway and possessing exclusive terminals along the southern New England shore that prevent competition?

Mr. Speaker, I believe if the present method of Government aid is to be extended to ports along the coast, New York is entitled to a liberal share of aid; but I do believe that if its landings have been monopolized by private interests and the city has capitalized and monopolized its own holdings by leases to private interests, then New York and every other city similarly situated should be made to contribute liberally to benefits created for that monopoly.

It is hard to understand just why Minnesota or Iowa should contribute to New York Harbor if the benefit is for strictly local corporations; and with equal truth it must be urged that New York ought not to contribute to a Mississippi River pork barrel that benefits nobody and is a notorious waste of money under the system now employed.

In the sundry civil bill before us an appropriation is made for $500,000 for harbor work at Providence. Just where the Government's interest comes in is not apparent.

Referring to page 66 of the commissioner's report, volume 3, 1910, we are informed that—

Practically all the wharves at Providence belong to private parties, including railroad and trading corporations. The city owns a small wharf just below the Point Street Bridge which it leases for a lumber wharf; and it also has a small wharf which is used by the various city departments. There are no open piers in Providence.

It is interesting to note from the 1913 engineers' report that the Government has spent on old projects $1,859,480, and new projects are adopted that will add $827,800 more. Hitched on to one of these projects, like a codicil to a will, is a provision that no improvements are to be made above "Fields Point" until the city provides adequate public terminals.

CONTROL OF WATER TERMINALS.

From what has been already noted under specific ports it is apparent that a large amount of water terminal frontage is everywhere controlled by railroads. While much of this control is undoubtedly necessary and commercially advantageous, nevertheless it is to be remembered that at present the rail and water systems are often in vigorous competition. The control by one system of the terminals upon which a rival system is dependent is therefore of serious importance. Furthermore, railroad frontage in central parts of a congested harbor fequently means that though traffic is crowding upon local traffic, and that the two prime harbor functions, "commercial" and "industrial," are unnecessarily in conflict, because of unsatisfactory harbor organization. For these reasons there is summarized below the general situation as regards such railroad control:

Railroads control a large amount of water terminals directly or through subsidiary concerns. The Boston & Maine Railroad controls much water frontage at Portland, Me., and at Boston. The control of the New York, New Haven & Hartford over water traffic on Long Island Sound is partly based on its control of a large amount of terminal frontage. Its control of water terminals is especially prominent at Portland (Me.), Boston, Fall River, Providence, New London, the Connecticut River, New Haven, Bridgeport (Conn.), New York, Philadelphia, and Norfolk (Va.). The Pennsylvania Railroad owns or controls much water terminal property at New York, Jersey City, Baltimore, Chesapeake Bay points, Buffalo, Erie (Pa.), and at and near Cleveland; the New York Central system at New York City, Jersey City, the Hudson River, Chicago, Cleveland, and Buffalo; the Southern Pacific system at New Orleans, Galveston, Oakland, Portland (Oreg.), Astoria (Oreg.), Hoboken, and New York; the Northern Pacific at Seattle and Tacoma; the Atlantic Coast Line at Tampa, Norfolk, and various Virginia ports; the Southern Railway at Norfolk, Mobile, Charleston, and Jacksonville; the Baltimore & Ohio at Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington; the Seaboard Air Line at Portsmouth (Va.); the Louisville & Nashville at Mobile and Pensacola, as well as at various points on the Ohio River; and the Illinois Central at Savannah, New Orleans, and Chicago. Also the so-called coal roads have important holdings in the harbors of New York, Jersey City, Philadelphia, Norfolk, and along the coast of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, as well as on the Hudson River.

Along the Mississippi River system the railroad ownership is important, not so much in active use of water terminals as in a general ownership of river frontage, which results in a passive obstruction to its proper use for water traffic. This is especially noticeable at Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, Cairo, St. Louis, Memphis, and Vicksburg. In a number of the smaller river ports all river traffic must cross rail lines in order to reach the town. By far the greater part of the navigable portions of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers is paralleled on one and often on both banks by various railroad systems. Their tracks and trestles often present serious obstacles to the proper use of the banks for water traffic.

The report, volume 3, is filled with startling facts concerning the absence of public piers or wharves at hundreds of places that have been liberally supplied with Government money. Of New London, Conn., it says:

Of the 4 or 5 miles of frontage on the Thames River at New London the city owns practically nothing.

Hartford owns a park along the water, but the balance of the water frontage is owned by the New Haven Railroad and other companies. The same is true of Long Island Sound. Page 70:

At Portland, Me., the water front is all private, about one-half of it owned by railroads. At Bangor the frontage is nine-tenths private and much of it railroad holdings.

Most of the important New Haven frontage is railroad owned, and this is even more true of Bridgeport, Conn. On the Hudson River, the Albany frontage is chiefly private, much of it railroad. At Troy, N. Y., the city owns only narrow street ends. The Hudson River frontage in general at the chief cities is mainly private, being largely held by steamship lines, railroads, and industrials. The frontage of Burlington, on Lake Champlain, is nearly all railroad. At Trenton, N. J., the city owns none of the frontage on tidewater. Philadelphia owns less than 8 per cent of the developed Delaware River frontage, and its holdings are mainly narrow and practically unavailable street ends. The city has 10 general piers on the Delaware, but only 1,400 feet, or about the length of two or three large vessels, is all the wharfage not leased or privately owned out of nearly

7 miles of the developed Delaware River frontage. An interesting statement is that—

All but one of the trans-Atlantic steamship lines use the railway terminals.

Continuing, the commissioner says, page 10:

The Philadelphia situation has long been one of almost complete absence of public control of the water terminals and of dominance of water terminals by railroads, affecting unfavorably general water traffic as distinguished from exclusive water lines affiliated with railroads.

The commissioner avers that the city is trying to get away from the general private and railroad control of its water terminals.

An appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Delaware River and an additional $1,000,000 for additional contracts, or $2,000,000, is in the 1914 bill. The amount expended on the lower Delaware River prior to the adoption of the existing project reached $10,176,002, and the existing project, which provides for deepening the channel to 35 feet, and other improvements, amount to $10,920,000 more, or $21,096,000 for the Delaware River below the city. (Pp. 306 and 307, engineers' report, 1913.)

The foregoing does not cover any part of the $8,000,000 Delaware & Chesapeake Canal project, for which $2,250,000 is carried by the 1914 river and harbor bill.

POWERFUL INFLUENCES AT WORK.

Mr. Speaker, I have briefly noted some of the interests affected and influences operating in the passage of the 1914 bill. No man can discount their power, for they are all powerful, and while it may seem a hopeless task to present any argument that will affect the passage of the 1914 river and harbor bill or of any future bill, I do not feel that the effort is completely wasted.

In reviewing a few of the business interests that are concerned in the bill's passage we can not overlook the many waterways associations throughout the country nor the influential membership possessed by these associations, both elsewhere and upon the floors of Congress. As suggested by different press articles, if any railway interests were represented upon this floor as in former years, a speedy investigation would be had of measures seeking to benefit such special interests. The waterways associations are composed of high-minded, able men, as a class, who are interested in different projects because of their belief in some benefit to accrue.

It would be useless to set my judgment against that of such able men, and yet when a waterways association raises $150,000 secretly through contributions largely from railways to push along some particular project, when it seeks to sandbag business men into forcing northern Congressmen into line, as shown by other waterways journals quoted in my remarks of June 2, pages 9689–9697 of the RECORD, surely we have a right to inquire whether or not the aims and methods of such associations are selfish or for the public good. When a national waterways congress proposes to squander $50,000,000 annually without regard to merit, as claimed by the New York Board of Trade, when it becomes a "logrolling" or "mutual-bribery" association in the judgment of this great commercial body, surely we may pause to inquire its purposes. When another great association resolves and demands that Congress appropriate money for certain projects reaching into millions of dollars and we learn that the officials and members include members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and influential Representatives upon the floor, it may seem hopeless to express disagreement as to the methods and policies employed, and I say this with the highest respect for such Members individually and collectively. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that all this power behind the $93,000,000 pork barrel of 1914 will be able to push the barrel into law, provided the weapon of publicity can be turned onto these projects, which aggregate more than ever before in the history of the country. What a spectacle is presented when we seek to buy a bankrupt canal, whose stock is valueless, its bonds worth 50 cents on the dollar, all in order to contribute to the benefit of transportation companies that own practically all the terminal facilities in two large cities and for the self-interest of dredging contractors that have their headquarters within a short distance of the project and of the National Capital.

I am not discussing the merits of the proposition which is destined, according to early estimates, to reach $20,000,000 for a 35-foot canal, or almost as much as has been placed in the Delaware. Who can doubt that with the present powerful influences back of the project the next step will be to extend its size and depth for the convenience of the transportation companies that have terminals on the railway wharves of Philadelphia and Baltimore, according to the commissioner's report?

Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore, in the RECORD of March 24, taken up many of the projects contained in the 1914 bill and have given what I believed to be a correct analysis of projects as shown by the engineers' reports. In the RECORD of June 2 I have tried to give the best judgment of different authorities as to the Mississippi River project which now gets $10,500,000 in the bill before the Senate. Therein I showed that after an expenditure of $144,000,000 in that river we had lost 80 per cent of our former river traffic.

The Missouri $20,000,000 project for 13,000 tons of annual freight, aside from sand and gravel, has also been discussed, and in the RECORD for June 8 I gave additional arguments against the passage of the bill, including the $64,000,000 Ohio River canalization scheme. I have here tried to briefly outline some of the additional influences behind the bill and to show generally that private interests ranging from fertilizer factories to real-estate projects and dredging concerns are back of all such bills.

Mr. Speaker, from the facts that I have endeavored to place before the House, and through the House to the country, it must be clear to every unprejudiced mind—

First. That the railways own or control, through their business affiliations, the greater part of the waterways transportation of the country and exercise a virtual monopoly.

Second. The foreign steamship lines not controlled by the railways have contractual and shipping relations closely identifying their interests with those of the railways.

Third. The individual competitive waterway lines are few, and invite close inspection as to their affiliation and control.

Fourth. Practically all the waterway terminals in many of the large cities of the country are owned or controlled by the railways or waterway lines that are independent and part of the monopoly.

Fifth. The municipal wharves and piers of the country are small in number, usually leased to private interests or individuals, and are negligible in proportion to other terminals.

Sixth. The railroads are contributing to the support of certain waterway projects and directly toward the activities of certain associations.

Seventh. Representatives are hoodwinked into believing they are getting some especial favors from the Government Treasury by small local grafts, usually instigated by the dredging companies or local interests, and embodied into the bill to secure aid in pushing the "barrel."

Eighth. River and harbor improvements are primarily for the benefit of the railway monopoly or of a great shipping monopoly, and are not for the benefit of the public at large.

Seventh. Not one taxpayer in a thousand is benefited one penny by Government contributions, either by reduced freight rates, a lowered cost of living, or even indirectly by any added comforts or conveniences.

Ninth. The active agents of the monopolies are the dredging associations, the waterway associations, and the localities and their Representatives who imagine that in some indefinite way the "pork" is being distributed to such localities.

Tenth. Congress is the "jumping jack" that opens the Treasury doors to these selfish monopolies whenever the division of spoils occurs between the constituent parts of the railway and shipping monopoly.

Eleventh. The waterways associations, dredging associations, and other interests, open or secret, are strands to the string that pulls the "jumping jack" and secures a continuous golden stream from the United States Treasury.

Twelfth. That the whole scheme of river and harbor improvements by the Government is a fraud and a graft, grown infinitely more vicious than in the old days when it was denounced on the floor of the Senate as a humbug and a steal. It is a national disgrace, stultifying Members who are compelled to bow to the "pork barrel's" mandate, and it tends to undermine legislative honesty in dealing with other questions of national importance.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that these are serious statements. I do not claim to subscribe to nor observe any higher code of morals than other Members, but I am confident I can prove every statement made, and in that confidence I introduced resolutions of investigation which have been smothered in the committee.

A sane, intelligent system of waterways improvements should be thoroughly investigated and agreed upon by an impartial board, unaffected by political or business influences. No community, large or small, should be recognized unless a local contribution is required. This largely removes the present incentive of trying to get something for nothing. No community, large or small, should be given Government aid until a sufficient number of open piers exist to accommodate all independent lines of shipping that may care to use public terminals, nor should one dollar be expended by the Government except where actual navigation exists. Flimsy veiled efforts to secure moneys from the Government under the guise of reducing freight rates would no longer be possible, and shippers and localities would present their claims before the proper forum—the railway commissions—as I pointed out in my remarks of March 26.

In the administration of a comprehensive law a strong commission possessing the confidence of the people should be established. Its recommendations should be attached with accompanying conditions to every appropriation of money from the Government Treasury. Army engineers should be relegated to the position they ought properly to occupy, that of technical experts on engineering, not on commercial problems. To-day they are supreme, but subject to all the political influences that bristle throughout the engineers' reports. They ought to be in fact subordinates, not superiors, in the determination of Government contributions.

Mr. Speaker, I have not attempted to cover the field presented by this great question, which, in my judgment, is not alone one of national economy but a problem that encompasses the whole field of legislative honesty, of infinitely more importance than the matter of dollars and cents.

The greatest and most vicious "pork-barrel" disgrace ever fastened on any political administration is now pending in the Senate. We are all responsible for its existence, and it is not for any political party to cast the first stone.

The whole system of graft should be uprooted and an honest, clean legislative program adopted. It is not a hopeless task. I am only seeking to point the way and realize that I am an unimportant factor in whatever eventually may be accomplished. I have not sought to lay out a definite program. I have not tried to array one class of States against another or one set of interests against another. The problem is too big for such petty methods and calls for broad-minded men who in the past have thrown off the yoke of railway servitude which once dominated legislative halls and which to-day is the secret moving cause in the formation and passage of the 1914 infamous $93,000,000 "pork barrel."

Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to make a statement as to the proposed increase in the river and harbor bill recommended by the Senate committee. The amount stated aggregates $10,352,600, in addition to the items approved by the House for rivers and harbors for 1914, the House appropriations being $43,289,004 cash, $32,897,871 for new projects begun, and also $6,990,000 contained in the sundry civil bill, amounting to $83,176,875, and to this amount the Senate committee proposes to add $10,352,600, as stated, making a grand total of $93,529,475.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not discuss the action taken by a committee from a coordinate body, because I understand it is a time-honored parliamentary custom to refrain from so doing; neither will I presume upon the indulgence of the House to the extent invited by the field for discussion. However, no prohibition in principle nor ethics exists against an analysis of a few items mentioned in the press reports, and I believe the importance of laying before the House in advance the particulars concerning several proposals that must eventually go to conference counterbalances any pretended delicacy over parliamentary ethics. For that reason I shall briefly point out a few facts that to me seem worthy of consideration and which ought to be refused concurrence if placed in the bill. I do not attempt to discuss other items that to me appear questionable, but give a few facts evidenced by the engineers' reports concerning several vicious items, in my judgment, that should be stricken from the bill.

IMPROVING HARBOR, BRIDGEPORT, CONN., $178,800.

On what theory of public use such an appropriation can be justified passes comprehension when the following statement as to harbor conditions at Bridgeport are considered. Between oil companies and the New Haven, the city appears to be between Satan and the deep sea, with no chance to get to the sea without paying tolls. I quote from page 70 of the report of the Commissioner of Corporations, 1910, part 3:

A few years ago—about 1905—the Pure Oil Co., which ships by water wherever possible, contemplated the acquisition of a wharf or wharf site at Bridgeport, Conn., but gave up the project because of the control of practically the entire water front by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad and its subsidiary boat lines. A site was afterwards bought at East Providence.

A small independent steamboat company complains of a "very uncertain privilege at Bridgeport." An officer of this company explains the situation as follows:

"The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad owns the whole river front on the city side of the river, and we lease a landing from them and pay more for it than we can afford to, and we never know where we are going to make a landing—sometimes at the upper end of the city, sometimes at the lower part of the city, and another time halfway between, and our passengers never know where to look for us; it is also very annoying to shippers of freight and handicaps our business."

CHESAPEAKE & DELAWARE CANAL, $2,250,000.

I devoted some little space to the first item of $1,300,000 for this project when up for consideration in the House on March 24, as appears from pages 5419 to 5421 of the RECORD. The increase of $950,000 is more objectionable than in the original form, although this is but a bagatelle of the burden to be eventually saddled upon the Government by the purchase of this bankrupt canal. Practically every bankrupt waterway is now seeking to unload onto the Government, and this concern seems sure to succeed. Notwithstanding the eventual cost of the canal has been estimated at $20,000,000 and its annual maintenance will be a heavy burden, we are confronted with a project to help out Philadelphia railroads and shipping companies in the second city of the country that has 1,400 feet of open piers out of a 7-mile frontage. Baltimore is slightly better, because the dredging companies center there, but the proposal is to give to these two cities gratis a $20,621,323 proposition when it gets its full depth. (Angus report, p. 8.) Baltimore, with 558,485 population, and Philadelphia, with 1,549,008 population, ask for this canal, without adequate public wharves and without contribution. The canal stock is worthless, its bonds worth 50 to 60 cents on the dollar before a prospect of a real sale hove in sight. Stockholders and interested steamboat men and willing engineers all urge its purchase.

The railway and shipping interests of Philadelphia that have strangled the city's water front want this purchase made, but 9,999 citizens out of every 10,000 in Baltimore and Philadelphia's combined 2,000,000 population have no use for the canal and are unconcerned over its purchase, for which they will indirectly have to pay their share with every other taxpayer; and its ultimate cost equals $1 on the average for the head of every family in the country.

The Angus commission said of this project (p. 8) that for a distance of approximately 7,000 feet the borings indicated quicksand that will require "special and costly treatment by revetment or otherwise to insure stable conditions."

When it is realized that powerful political interests are enlisted in the effort to force the canal's purchase on the Government and that the railway interests and dredging interests of Baltimore and Philadelphia have shown no violent prejudice to the proposition, it appears a hopeless task to protest; but if Philadelphia and Baltimore interests want to buy and dredge this canal, then those interests should persuade those great cities to buy it and not unload the bankrupt proposition upon the Government.

HARBOR OF REFUGE, CAPE LOOKOUT, $1,826,600.

For two or three centuries the little craft that formerly swept the Atlantic coast were unprotected and sailed the North Carolina coast without fear. Since the railways have taken control of the coastwise trade and a few great steamships remain, a relic of the wonderful shipping trade of another century, it is now found necessary to spend nearly $2,000,000 at a point far removed from any large port. Ships avoid Hatteras and Lookout, and always will; but dredging companies and railways that must be built out to this "project," and other interests, not all nonpolitical, are pushing this form of ship subsidy onto a reluctant people. It is one of the 26 pieces of pork apportioned to North Carolina in the 1914 barrel.

PENSACOLA AND MOBILE WATERWAY, $800,000—MOBILE BAY TO MISSISSIPPI RIVER, $468,000.

Neither of these projects are found under the titles given in the engineers' reports for 1913. Just why they should be left out of the bill that originates in the House is also singular. Mobile Bay receives $125,000 under the regular bill and Mobile bar gets $20,000, but the influences behind waterway projects are past finding out. It is just such items as the above that failed to get recognition in the House bill, bad as it is, that invite an investigation into the character of projects and the influences behind them.

BLACK WARRIOR, WARRIOR, AND TOMBIGBEE, $750,000.

Just how this three-quarters of a million is to be spent does not appear, but the "pork barrel" is inviting, and it is not much of a raise from $500,000, as the item passed the House, to $750,000, as it is expected to be returned.

The Black Warrior and the Warrior Rivers are one and the same, excepting that the color line is drawn after the river reaches Tuscaloosa. The engineers' report for 1913, on page 2148, gives the appropriations for the present project at $9,151,295.54, which indicates that the Warriors' fiercest and most successful battles since 1884 have been waged against the guardians of the Government Treasury.

From the engineers' report, excluding logs and staves, which could be floated, and stone, apparently used for Government construction, the lockages showed the following freight traffic for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913:

	Tons.
Lock 4	10,353
Lock 5	6,624
Lock 6	6,923
Lock 7	6,750
Lock 8	6,278
Lock 9	5,170
Lock 10	6,142
Lock 11	5,995
Lock 12	5,968
Lock 13	2,002
Lock 14	1,837
Lock 15	1,353

The foregoing averages about 5,450 tons to the lock, or 18 tons per day for 300 days. Lock 1 averaged higher, but three-fourths of the lockages were for logs and lumber that could have been floated. And for floating 18 tons per day through the locks the Government paid $122,009.05. (P. 2158, report 1913.) To this should be added interest at 3 per cent on $9,151,295, amounting to $274,537.

Other services at Lock 1 should be included, and possibly other traffic occurred on the river, but when the sum of $750,000 additional for 1914 is added to the $9,151,295 already expended it would seem that $396,546 annual charges for carrying 5,450 tons of freight ought to be sufficient even for a colored warrior.

To offset any other advantages received from these improvements it might be well to estimate 4 per cent loss in depreciation, a modest estimate, that would add to the eventual governmental expense over $350,000 annually. As an evidence of the methods of preparing engineers' reports it is interesting to note that in computing the amount of commerce handled on the Black Warrior the amounts carried through each lock are added together to ascertain the total. In other words, the same boat would be counted separately whenever it showed up at the several locks. In conclusion, it might be urged that $9,151,295 is a good deal of money.

RED RIVER, $2,548,377.

I will pass over the Brazos $250,000 item, that has been a sink hole for many years, and $100,000 for the Red River, which has swallowed up $2,548,377, involves an annual cost of maintenance of $100,000, and, as stated by me in a discussion of this project on March 24, appearing on page 5423 of the RECORD, cost the Government $93 per ton of freight in 1908. I am unable to give the subsidy for 1913, but in its ascertainment interest on the investment should be added to the $100,000 annual maintenance expense to ascertain what a monumental piece of extravagance is contained in this project which is now added to the bill according to press reports. A letter just received speaks the truth of this statement:

KIOMATIA PLANTERS' CO.,
Kiomatia, Red River County, Tex., June 13, 1914.

Hon. Mr. FREAR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the June 6 edition of the Saturday Evening Post the first article in the editorials is one with reference to yourself and your proposed investigation of the waste of the public money on rivers and harbors.

Allow me to congratulate you on the step you have taken, and wish you great success in your much-needed probe.

As a Red River planter, one who has spent 20 years on Red River, allow me to say (and it is the consensus of opinion of all my neighbors) that the improvement (?) of Red River this high up by snag boats is not only a farce, but actually detrimental to navigation—were such a thing possible—and to the land on the banks of the river. It is even a joke among the crews of the snag boats themselves. I will not go into figures and dates as to the number of boats navigating Red River, amount of money spent on it, etc., as you have all these at hand. But as for the good it does, I can speak. There has not been a boat (except a snag boat) on the river here in six years, and the last one was a booster boat that went to Shreveport to prove that Red River was navigable this high up, and it went down on the biggest rise we have had since 1843. The crews of these snag boats quit at 4 p. m., giving them four hours before dark in which to lay around and hunt up negro women and shoot craps.

I wish you to know that this plantation has actually suffered from the work of the Government snag boats.

These snag boats are all right in their places, but this Simple Simon business of SHEPPARD'S is the limit.

I understand the work on the Trinity is even more foolish and wasteful of money.

If this matter is of interest to you, I will gladly get you up some more facts. At any rate, I would be pleased to have you keep me posted as to the headway you are making in this line.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

GEORGE T. WRIGHT.

OUACHITA RIVER, $664,000.

Like the Black Warrior, that dropped the color line when it reached a certain fork of the river, the Sneezing River adopts the name of Black River at Trinity. (Engineers' Rept., 1913, p. 842.) To those who are used to dealing in millions when discussing crooked creeks, it will not prove alarming to note that this "project" is to cost $4,876,654.35. Even the exact cent has been determined that is to be thrown into this river of color, indicating the Ethiopian is not in the woodpile but in the creek.

On page 2322 of the 1913 engineers' report, after deducting logs and lumber that would float without help, we have a net traffic of 18,222 tons a year, which is probably as inaccurate as other estimates that have been pointed out. To ascertain the cost of this subsidy per ton it is only necessary to add interest on the total cost, at approximately $150,000, to the annual maintenance charge, hereafter to be determined. The interest alone will amount to a $14 per ton subsidy, in round numbers, and the present existing charge for maintenance of $31,500 helps to boost the cost of this freight, over 2,000 tons of which is cement. In a note the summary of expenditures, on page 2323—significant figures—says:

Lock and Dam No. 8: This lock and dam is located at Franklin Shoals, Ark. It was completed, and has been ready for operation since October 1, 1912. During the portion of the fiscal year from that date to June 30, 1913, the lock and dam was properly cared for, but was not required for use, as there was no navigation in the river below during low stages.

Again, on the same page, it states:

No commerce passed through these locks and dams during the fiscal year June 30, 1913.

What can be said to fitly express an opinion of this stream, which gets $664,000 in 1914, through the generosity of gentlemen not located at this end of the Capitol? I trust I am keeping within parliamentary bounds when I say that there is no need of developing gold mines in North Carolina or in Arkansas as long as North Carolina preserves its 26 projects in the 1914 bill, and Arkansas gets a few more projects like the Red, the Sneezing, the Saline, the Arkansas, the White, the Black, the Cache, the St. Francis, and other leads that connect directly with bags of gold located in the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I am unable to discuss the numerous increases proposed in the 1914 House pork-barrel bill by another legislative branch of the Government. To anyone interested in studying the viciousness inherent in the entire measure I recommend an investigation of the Tennessee River item, which was bad enough when it left the House at $550,000, but which now reaches the sum of $930,000.

I shall not discuss further the class of increases placed on a bill that was filled with objectionable items before it left the House. To find that such a transparent fraud has apologists in men of high standing, connected with advancing the economic policies of this administration, seems to explain some of the strange processes of reasoning which have been given to the country in justification of these policies.

Mr. Speaker, some of these suggestions were offered in my remarks of March 24. Since that date I have been brought into contact with ex-Army engineers and other important factors, all interested in solving the waterways problem, which has now descended into a disreputable pork-barrel grab. Recently there came to my hands a careful analysis of the weakness of the present system. It further contains the illuminating opinions of several Presidents who have vetoed such bills in the past. Believing it may add to the general fund of information on this important subject, and that its recommendations are worthy of careful consideration, I append as a part of my remarks a report from the special committee on rivers and harbors to the New York Board of Trade:

SHOULD A NATIONAL DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS BE CREATED?

NEW YORK, January 8, 1908.

To the New York Board of Trade and Transportation:

It is claimed by those who advocate practically unlimited appropriations by Congress for rivers and harbors improvement that there is no other proposition before the people of the United States upon which so much unanimity of sentiment exists as that the rivers and harbors of the country which it would be practical to improve within a limit of cost not prohibitive and with a relative benefit to national commerce should be improved.

The organized movement in behalf of unprecedented and practically unlimited appropriations has seemingly gained much favor throughout the land; so much so, in fact, that it must soon command everywhere the attention and best efforts of those who have concern for the true welfare of the country, including the Senators and Representatives in Congress, to guard against the very serious abuses to which the widely conceded merits of the general proposition will make the National Treasury more easily the prey.

The messages and vetoes of nearly all the Presidents of the United States since the time of Jefferson give unimpeachable evidence that practically every general river and harbor bill has contained appropriations for many projects which were essentially and indisputably designed to benefit local and individual interests.

President Madison vetoed such a bill upon the constitutional ground that Congress has no power to divert the money from the National Treasury for improvements within the States which were not essentially national. For similar reason President Monroe withheld his approval from like measures, and Presidents Jackson, Tyler, Polk, and Pierce made many emphatic vetoes. In more recent years President Grant vetoed a bill appropriating the public money for private interests, and Presidents Arthur and Cleveland vetoed rivers and harbors bills.

But, notwithstanding these vetoes, projects for the benefit of local and individual interests have been carried through with other measures and have been undertaken at the public expense. Some such are now under contract and in the course of construction, and, whether approved by the United States engineers or not, are so classed, and millions of the public money have been expended on them.

Furthermore, it is a fact which can not be successfully denied, that such projects, essentially and indisputably for the benefit of local and individual interests, are in many instances the inciting motive to the activity of individuals and localities throughout the country, whose influence and cooperation have been combined to create the unanimity of sentiment heretofore referred to and to swell the demand which is intended to bear down upon Congress as a whole and upon individual Senators and Representatives with irresistible power.

Moreover, it is a melancholy fact that no river and harbor bill can be passed by Congress under the existing system and conditions which does not contain so great a number of private and local projects and require sums so large that if known by the people they could not be safely allowed or defended by any one political party alone in control of legislation.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR'S VETO.

Some of these unfortunate features of river and harbor legislation were pointed out by President Arthur in his veto of August 1, 1882, as follows:

"My principal objection to the bill is that it contains appropriations for the purposes not for common defense or general welfare, which do not promote commerce among the States. These provisions, on the contrary, are entirely for the benefit of particular localities in which it is proposed to make the improvements. I regard such appropriation of the public money as beyond the powers given by the Constitution to Congress and the President.

"I feel more bound to withhold my signature from the bill because of the peculiar evils which manifestly result from this infraction of the Constitution. Appropriations of this nature, to be devoted purely to local objects, tends to an increase in number and amount. As the people of one State find that money, to raise which they in common with the whole country are taxed, is to be expended for local improvements in another State, they demand similar benefits for themselves, and it is not unnatural that they should seek to indemnify themselves for such use of the public funds by securing appropriations for similar improvements in their own neighborhood. Thus, as the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support. This result is invariable and necessarily follows a neglect to observe the constitutional limitations imposed upon the lawmaking power."

Nothing could more forcibly demonstrate the correctness of President Arthur's statement than the fact that Congress promptly passed the bill over his veto.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S VETO.

President Cleveland in vetoing a similar bill on May 29, 1896, with equal courage and patriotic purpose pointed out like objections, as follows:

"Many of the objects for which it appropriates public money are not related to the public welfare, and many of them are palpably for the benefit of limited localities or in aid of individual interests.

"On the face of the bill it appears that not a few of the alleged improvements have been so improvidently planned and prosecuted that after an unwise expenditure of millions of dollars new experiments for their accomplishments have been entered upon. * * *

"To the extent that the appropriations contained in this bill are instigated by private interests and promote local or individual projects their allowance can not fail to stimulate a vicious paternalism and encourage a sentiment among our people, already too prevalent, that their attachment to our Government may properly rest upon the hope and expectation of direct and especial favors and that the extent to which they are realized may furnish an estimate of the value of governmental care.

"I believe no greater danger confronts us as a Nation than the unhappy decadence among our people of genuine and trustworthy love and affection for our Government as the embodiment of the highest and best aspirations of humanity, and not as the giver of gifts, and because its mission is the enforcement of exact justice and equality, and not the allowance of unfair favoritism."

PRESIDENT JACKSON'S VETO.

In vetoing a bill providing for internal improvements President Jackson said, in part, May 27, 1830:

"I am not able to view it in any other light than as a measure of purely local character, or, if it can be considered national, that no further distinction between the appropriate duties of the General and State Governments need be attempted, for there can be no local interest that may not with equal propriety be denominated national."

Then, after pointing out and discussing the national achievements and the national destiny for the elevation of mankind, President Jackson said:

"A course of policy destined to witness events like these can not be benefited by a legislation which tolerates a scramble for appropriations that have no relation to any general system of improvement and whose good effects must of necessity be very limited. In the best view of these appropriations the abuses to which they lead far exceed the good they are capable of promoting.

* * * * * * *

"This subject has been one of much—and I may add painful—reflection to me. It has bearings that are well calculated to exert a powerful influence upon our hitherto prosperous system of government and which on some accounts may even excite despondency in the breast of an American citizen."

PRESIDENT JACKSON'S VERIFIED PROPHECY.

Then denying the power of Congress to appropriate public money for the local or private benefit, and in urging consideration of a constitutional amendment on the subject, President Jackson said:

"This is the more necessary in order that they may be equitable among the several States, promote harmony between different sections of the Union and their representatives, preserve other parts of the Constitution from being undermined by the exercise of doubtful powers or the too great extension of those which are not so, and protect the whole subject against the deleterious influence of combinations to carry by concert measures which, considered by themselves, might meet but little countenance."

Such declarations, which are only illustrative of many more which might be quoted of some of our illustrious Presidents, and the evidence which the context of rivers and harbors bills give, and the records and reports of the chief engineers of the War Department furnish would leave no doubt in the mind of any American citizen conversant with them whose judgment is not warped and whose conscience is not stilled by personal interest that we are confronted by a most serious problem. Upon the threshold of the adoption of a policy under which more than a billion dollars to be expended within the coming few years for improvements of the national waterways, it must command everywhere the attention and best efforts of all those who have concern for the true welfare of the country, including the Senators and Representatives in Congress, if we shall prevent a most dangerous multiplication of serious abuses to which the widely conceded merits of the general proposition will make the National Treasury more easily the prey.

Nothing in the foregoing remarks or in what follows should be construed as in criticism of any officer, department, or bureau of the Government, past or present. The faults which have been pointed out in the past by the Presidents of the United States, and by others, and which still menace the public welfare, in connection with river and harbor bills are due to a system which has grown with the country, and which is responsible for the fact referred to by President Arthur: "Thus as the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support."

HOW THE PORK BARREL GROWS.

The evolution of river and harbor legislation has been rapid in recent years. In 1870, $2,000,000 were appropriated in the river and harbor bill, the largest up to that time. In 1882 the bill that was passed over President Arthur's veto was for nearly $19,000,000. In 1896 nearly $30,000,000 were appropriated, but in that year the amount appropriated and authorized, including the direct appropriations and the contracts for future expenditures, was about $80,000,000. In 1907 the appropriations and amounts authorized for future expenditures were $87,013,432.

The space allowed to a report of this kind forbids us to analyze recent bills separately, and it is not necessary to show that their faults were the same and as great as those in the days of Jackson, Arthur, Cleveland, and other Presidents. It is enough to know that in the bill of 1907 one item of over a million dollars, palpably for a local project, although thoroughly exposed and denounced in the public press while the bill was pending, had not a voice against it in the House of Representatives. How many other items of like character the bill of 1907 contained we are not informed. But it is not far from the truth to assume that this was not the only one to be condemned, and that such items were probably so numerous that to have cut them all out would have lost so many votes for the bill as to cause its defeat. This is the logical and practical result of the prevailing system, and, if the assumption be not correct, it is difficult to understand why, when the item referred to was announced on the floor of the House and objections demanded, silence prevailed and the item passed.

WHERE THE RESPONSIBILITY RESTS.

If the system is responsible for such unwarranted drafts upon the Public Treasury for private or local objects, the system must be wrong. If rivers and harbors bills can not be passed without such abuses, the system should be changed, and that quickly, for the conditions could hardly be more demoralizing. In the interest of the general proposition some change should be made and responsibility located. The responsibility can not be laid to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, for that committee but reflects the demands of the individual Members, and the committee must make the best of a very difficult situation. Neither can the responsibility be laid to the Secretary of War, who for many years has been nominally in charge of the expenditures under river and harbor bills. Nor can the responsibility be laid to the Chief of Engineers nor the Board of Engineers, whose approval is supposed to be necessary for all projects undertaken, because items disapproved by them are sometimes approved by Congress, owing to the system.

PROPER FUNCTIONS OF ARMY ENGINEERS.

This raises the further question whether or not the officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Army are qualified, by training, by experience, by education, by the traditions and circumstances of their service, and their personal and official environment, to pass upon the merits of projects proposed, except as to their technical engineering aspects. Without any disparagement of the Corps of Engineers, it may be said—and has been said—that they are an exclusive set of educated gentlemen selected from among the graduates of the West Point Military Academy and assigned to the various districts in charge of the corps under the Chief of Engineers. Transfers from district to district may be made at any time; and in many instances a project from its inception to its completion will be under the charge of many different engineers for brief periods. Every new project is nominally examined and reported upon by the engineer in charge of the district where it is located. Such examinations are intended to reveal not only the practical engineering and construction possibilities of the project, but its bearing and merits in relation to the commercial interests of the country. New projects of national importance are almost without exception initiated by the commercial interests in, or having an interest in, the commerce of the district; sometimes by commercial interests along the entire coast of the country or along a river that passes through several States. In preparing his reports the engineer seldom takes the testimony of such interests, although in most cases they are far better qualified than any other persons to give information as to the necessity or otherwise of the project.

The question also arises whether, in anticipation of the contemplated great expansion of public construction projects, the present Corps of Engineers of the United States Army is sufficient in number to give the needed professional supervision that would be required?

The total number of officers of all grades in the Corps of Engineers is 169; and it may be stated that the corps consists exclusively of officers. Of this number 49 are serving with the Battalions of Engineers which constitute a part of the line of the Army; and there are now 19 grades in the lower grade of second lieutenants. Some of the older officers, by reason of having reached the age limit, will probably soon be retired. Others have leave of absence or are employed upon local, State, or municipal work, while Maj. Goethals is engaged upon the Panama Canal. So that at the present time something less than 100 members of the corps are in this service. The vacancies are to be filled only by appointment from among the graduates of West Point, and these are necessarily young men without experience. When it is considered that the city of New York alone in its various municipal departments employs between 2,500 and 3,000 graduated engineers, it would seem that the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army would be quite overwhelmed, even as supervising officers, by the work incident to the rivers and harbors improvements contemplated in the near future.

A CHIEF OF ENGINEERS AT $5,500 PER YEAR DETERMINES THE ITEMS IN THE $93,000,000 PORK BARREL.

There is another very important feature of this service. Engineering talent of the highest order is coming more and more into demand with every year as the construction of private, corporation, municipal, and State works become more numerous, comprehensive, and imperative. The rewards of engineering talent in civilian life far exceed the pay of even the Chief of Engineers of the Corps of Engineers, or $5,500 per year; colonel, $3,500; lieutenant colonel, $3,000; major, $2,500. To these amounts 10 per cent is added after 5 years' service; 20 per cent after 10 years; 30 per cent after 15 years; and 40 per cent after 20 years' service. Commutation of quarters and other allowances, for maintenance, servants, etc., materially increase the pay above indicated in the several grades. Hence, as the demand for engineering talent increases in civilian fields of activity the most capable and experienced members of the Corps of Engineers will be tempted into private life, to the serious disadvantage of the Government and the demoralization of the United States engineering service.

It may be answered that, as we are informed, during the past 25 years there have been only 10 resignations from the Engineer Corps. But as evidence that resignations will be much more frequent in the future we direct attention to the fact that three of such resignations were handed in since January 1, 1906, viz, Maj. Cassius E. Gillette, May 26, 1906; Maj. Eugene W. Van C. Lucas, January 1, 1906, and Capt. Robert P. Johnson, September 17, 1906.

It may be further said in response that civilian engineers may be employed and are employed on the national river and harbor work, and that is true. During the year 1907 there were 174 such so employed, but, if we are correctly informed, these were mainly in subordinate and clerical occupations and at proportionate rates of compensation.

WEAKNESS OF PRESENT SYSTEM.

We can but briefly refer to some of these.

The Secretary of War is nominally charged with the expenditure of the moneys appropriated for the rivers and harbors improvement. It can be readily conceived how much or how little time and thought, for instance, the present most illustrious, capable, resourceful, and energetic Secretary of War has been able to give in the past year to the measures provided in the bill of 1907, and to the other measures under his "direction," as provided by law.

In his annual reports for the years 1904, 1905, and 1906 he has devoted an average of 29 lines each year to the subject of river and harbor improvements, excepting the tabulated statements of appropriations, expenditures, and balances. This is not referred to as in any sense a reflection upon the Secretary of War, but as showing how practically impossible it is for him to give this important branch of the Government's activities the attention it should have. The consequence is that practically the entire subject is in actual charge of the Chief of Engineers and the Corps of Engineers. We have already sufficiently referred to this corps.

The War Department is essentially a military establishment in charge of this construction work, which in no way relates to the primary functions of the department. We are informed that the military authorities of neither France, Germany, nor England have anything to do with rivers and harbors improvements, limiting their work in such countries to that purely of a military character, such as fortifications. The chambers of commerce, which are official and semi-official organizations, in most instances handle the major part of the work. The minister of public works primarily has jurisdiction over the improvements and passes upon the merits of every enterprise. Instead of the legislative body of the country appropriating specific amounts for the projects, the municipality or chamber of commerce is authorized to make a loan, which is guaranteed by the Government, and a portion of this, depending upon the character of the improvement and its strict national importance, is subscribed by the Government.

It is unnecessary here to indicate or even to suggest the outline of the organization of such proposed new department of public works. That is a matter of detail which can have careful attention hereafter, and there are doubtless other matters which could be entrusted to such department with propriety and advantage to the public service by relieving departments now overburdened.

We believe that such new department, suitably constituted and equipped, would be the instrument which by properly investigating projects and defining their national or local character would eliminate the evil of the logrolling scrambles for appropriations, and insure for those projects which would be approved their proper construction under competent engineers selected from civilian members of the engineering profession, while relieving the Government from the embarrassment which it will almost certainly experience, such as have been referred to herein.

Respectfully submitted.

THOMAS F. MAIN,
Special Committee on National Rivers and Harbors Improvement, New York Board of Trade and Transportation.

The foregoing report was submitted at the monthly meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, held this day, January 8, 1908, a printed complete copy being in the hands of every member.

Col. Charles H. Patrick offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the report submitted by the committee of this board on rivers and harbors improvement be received, and the committee be requested to take such steps as it may deem proper to secure the creation of a national department of public works, with the power to print said report and such supplementary statements on the subject as it may approve, and to send same to such persons and organizations as it may direct."

The resolution was seconded by Hon. Charles A. Schieren, Mr. William H. Gibson, Mr. Calvin Tomkins, Mr. G. Waldo Smith, Mr. John H. Washburn, Mr. Thomas F. Main, Mr. W. S. Armstrong, and Mr. F. H. Stillman, each of whom spoke in favor of the proposition to create a national department of public works.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

A true copy.

Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House only limited debate is afforded many important bills. If the rules permitted, I should be pleased to discuss this river and harbor question as exhaustively as physical endurance would permit, not for the purpose of self-aggrandizement, but, so far as my humble efforts might avail, to focus public attention upon the measure. I would be pleased to take up hundreds of worthless projects and to show how the Government's money, the people's money, is being squandered. From the little rivulets in New Jersey and North Carolina and Florida to the numerous big wasteful projects of Texas, many of which reach into seven figures and total many millions of dollars; from the $21,000,000 that goes into the Mississippi and the Ohio canalization projects down through the 1914 bill to the many harbor projects for the exclusive use of railway and steamship interests, where no open piers are provided—all of these should be renovated in Congress.

One of the greatest services performed by any Member of either House in many years was that rendered by Senator Carter when he talked to death the rivers and harbors bill over a decade ago. He served his country well by saving many millions that were about to be wasted. True, the bills have continued to grow larger with each succeeding year, until now the stupendous 1914 bill staggers all belief that the people will longer submit to such gross imposition.

Carter's greatest service to the country lay in his successful effort in calling attention to the "humbug and steal," as the bill was characterized in that debate. He focused the eyes of the country upon the humbug, but he did not seek to do more than defeat the bill. Had he then demanded an investigation into the whole debased legislative system he might have saved to this generation scores of wasted millions, now stored away in the 1914 pork barrel; he might have saved us the humiliation which comes with conscious weakness of a bad cause to be defended. These things Carter failed to do. He made a heroic stand, he won a fight single-handed, but he did not win a final victory. It was only temporary success. It was spectacular because it was won single-handed, but it was not a well-organized battle, in which all the forces were used effectively toward a common end. Without detracting from the tremendous fight waged by Carter on the floor, he failed to marshal to the cause other Senators of equal ability and high purpose whose aid would have given lasting vitality to the fight, and it needs lasting vitality to win a lasting victory. Never in the recent history of this country has Congress been so free from the domination of special interests. Strong men have been found who act upon convictions of right and wrong, unaffected by personal considerations. I am now referring more particularly to the great legislative body in which Carter won his fight. Never before was there better opportunity to win a lasting victory than now. Concerted effort will focus public attention on the evil pork barrel, which stands out conspicuously a shining mark of legislative disgrace.

No man can perform a greater public service than by aiding in such a fight. Without depreciating the importance of the Panama tolls fight, it was largely a mock battle, so far as the subsidy question was involved. If the railroads or the steamship lines were involved, nothing was proven on either side. In the pork barrel we have the goods on both. I have furnished proof of railway contributions toward the passage of the Ransdell-Humphreys bill, and have shown the direct monetary interest of many railway companies in the water transportation companies and water terminals. The exclusive franchises and monopolies through ownership or lease have been proven by Government authority, which has been quoted. The greatest Government subsidy ever known in all history is being extended to the railways and other monopolies that control our harbor terminals and both water and rail transportation companies. No resulting benefits are afforded the people. Not one cent of freight reduction is granted when hundreds of thousands and millions are poured into harbors for the exclusive benefit of trans-Atlantic vessels flying a foreign flag or for their affiliated railway connections. Thirty, thirty-five and forty foot depths are being dredged out all along the coast for huge liners. The Government pays the subsidy, it foots the bills, and every year the bills amount to many times the total tolls of all classes which will be paid at the Panama Canal.

Mr. Speaker, the reports of the Commissioner of Corporations on waterways in four volumes would furnish a strong-lunged, fearless man ammunition to sink the 1914 bill.

The report of the Army engineers for 1913, filled with cold, hard facts that puncture rosy-colored balloons which sail through every page of the bill under the misnomer of "improvements," is an invaluable adjunct to the truth concerning the 1914 pork barrel.

House documents and Senate documents covering the different projects are to be had for the asking, and, as I have demonstrated beyond a doubt, they give facts that can not be met, defended, or excused. Mr. Speaker, during the investigations pursued as to the contents of the pork barrel, there has come to my hands much valuable data on the waterways of the country, their possibilities which are now latent, and authoritative utterances that are of great value.

I hope some day to see the waterways of this country improved and teem with traffic as they do in Germany and other foreign countries. This result, in my opinion, can not be brought about until the railways and waterway lines work together for the common good. The interests of all transportation lines in the country are selfish and measured by the stockholders' dividends. Under such conditions it will be impossible to achieve any material results, no matter how many millions are sunk into the waterways of the country. Foreign countries have succeeded, but in those countries, generally speaking, public ownership or thoroughgoing public control of the whole transportation system has existed.

Differing methods of transportation on our inland waters will follow the profitable use of such waters. We are today seeking to stimulate navigation by blowing a stream of golden oxygen into the lungs of a dying traffic. A gold dope needle has punctured the waterway veins of the country year after year until the country has become converted to the drug-fiend habit. That habit undermines honest waterway legislation and is wasteful. I believe contributions should be afforded worthy projects promoted by communities for actual navigation purposes. Such contributions and the entire systematizing of the waterways of the country should be undertaken by a public body composed of capable, independent officials.

Mr. Speaker, I have concluded with these few observations because it is a mistake to tear down even a bad system without offering something better in its place.

The first step is to defeat the 1914 bill and the next is to demand an investigation into the present system and influences behind the pork barrel, to some of which I have alluded. It is a big fight and possibly a long one, but I can not believe it is a hopeless one. The press of the country is being aroused to the situation. It reflects the common understanding of the character of the pork barrel. We can not longer ignore demands that an investigation be had. It ought to be thorough, and if so, we shall have no more demoralizing waterway pork barrels, but improvements will be conducted sanely, coordinated by a comprehensive scheme wherever conditions warrant, and one-fifth of the present wasted millions will then bring substantial and permanent results.

Mr. Speaker, I have offered a resolution of investigation, which has been smothered by the committee, but which, I believe, has teeth in it provided it is ever adopted, and nothing is impossible if it is right in its purposes and is strongly pressed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. RUCKER (when the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, I call up the bill H. R. 8428.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] calls up the bill H. R. 8428, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The point of order is that this bill should be upon the Union Calendar. Or, at least, the point of order is that it should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because it sets in motion a train of matters which eventually lead to a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to that I think the gentleman is clearly mistaken. I am not conscious of a single proposition or principle in the bill that will lead to any expenditure whatever on the part of the Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the bill amends, or proposes to amend, the law already in existence, which provides for regulating the expenditure of money and reporting the money both in the primary and in the election of Members of Congress and Members of the Senate. If that is all that it did, it would not be subject to the criticism that I make upon it, namely, that it can not be considered in the House, but must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because it will eventually lead to a charge upon the Treasury. If the Chair will indulge me, I shall undertake to show from the bill itself that it does that. In order that I may be correct in my statements——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit, the Chair would like the gentleman to point out what provision in the bill he contends will ultimately entail a charge upon the Public Treasury.

Mr. BARTLETT. I surely would not ask the Chair to sustain me if I were unable to do so. I lay down the proposition, Mr. Speaker, that we all are aware that any bill may be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union upon the motion of the House to do so; that all bills which either raise revenue or ultimately in any way lead to a charge upon the Treasury must be, under the rules, considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, no matter how small that charge may be. It must be done. That proposition is sustained by section 844 of the Manual, contained on pages 372 and 373, and especially on page 374, as the Chair will notice if he will turn to it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Page 374.

Now, I want to lay down the principle before I call the attention of the Chair to the sections of the bill which I think bring themselves within the provisions of the rule. Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 4827, gives many instances and, in the particular case I refer to, a concrete example of what must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I think the Chair will find upon reading those that they contain the very principle that I assert.

Now, I call the Chair's attention to certain provisions of this bill. There are section 12——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman permit a question there, for the information of the Chair?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the mere passage of a law in aid of a criminal statute, which would cost the people something to enforce it, make such a bill a bill that would come under the rule, so that it would have to be considered by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. BARTLETT. Not at all; and that is not the case with respect to this bill. I would not make the point of order if that were the only proposition in the bill. I am not in the position that the Chair thinks I am in. I am not occupying the position that the Chair thinks I am occupying, and I will undertake to demonstrate it.

Section 12 of this bill provides, amongst other things—

SEC. 12. That the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate shall, on or before the 15th day of January next after any general or special election for Representative in Congress or Senator of the United States, report to the House and Senate, respectively, the name of each candidate for nomination or election to such office who has filed statements as required by this act, giving his place of residence and the congressional district or State, as the case may be, in which he was such candidate and the total amount of campaign expenses paid or promised by him or by any one for him, as shown by such statements; also, the name of each candidate for such nomination or election, as shown by the files of his office or otherwise ascertained, whether nominated or elected or not, who has failed, neglected, or refused to file any or all of the statements required by this act, giving his place of residence and the congressional district or State, as the case may be, in which he was such candidate, as shown by said files or otherwise ascertained. The report required by this section shall be printed as a public document.

That is one proposition that I propose to call to the attention of the House. Now, the Clerk of the House is burdened with the expense and trouble of either doing it himself or paying somebody for doing it, and if he does it himself somebody has got to pay him for it out of his salary. He has got to have clerks to do it. Not only that, but the report required to be made by this section shall be printed as a public document. Will not the printing of this report as a public document ultimately entail some sort of an expense, however small it may be, upon the Public Treasury? It is not now required to be printed under any law, and if we pass this bill and require the Clerk to keep this record and report it to the House, and not only that, but require it to be printed as a public document, some appropriation of money must be made to print it. Public documents are not printed at the Government Printing Office without expense to the Government.

The expense may be defrayed out of the general printing fund, but an estimate is made before the Committee on Appropriations at each session as to the amount of money required to print public documents, and if the amount allowed for congressional printing is not sufficient application is made to Congress, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to appropriate more money for that purpose. And when you enact a new law which requires the Clerk of the House to make this report and requires the Public Printer to print something that is not now printed you have got to provide money in order to print it.

If the Chair will read carefully the section of the manual that I have referred to, he will see that Speaker Cannon held, in the case of a proposition offered by Mr. Brick, of Indiana, to provide that certain men should be placed upon certain retired lists or rolls that they were not then upon, that if the bill put in motion a certain train of circumstances which ultimately would lead to an appropriation of money which would be a charge upon the Treasury, no matter how small, then it was the duty of the House to consider that bill in Committee of the Whole.

The Chair will find that is section 4827, at the top of the page, on the right-hand side, if he has the section now in hand. So that we have here a bill which does not simply do what the Chair asked me if it did; it does not simply amend the criminal law in making it a crime for a candidate for Congress or for the Senate and House to fail to do certain things or comply with certain requirements, but we have here a law which requires the Clerk to keep a record. He must have the means to keep a record. He must have a record. He must have books in which to keep the record. He must have clerks; and, finally, when the report is made to this House, it become the imperative duty of the House to have it printed as a public document. The Chair can not say that that will not entail some sort of expense, that that does not inaugurate a system, that that does not put in motion a certain train of circumstances which will ultimately lead to a charge upon the Treasury, no matter how small or infinitesimal. I do not know that I am correct in the statement I am now going to make, but, as I understand it, the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate are directed under certain circumstances to forward to the opposing candidate a copy of these returns. Am I correct about that?

Mr. RUCKER. You are not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then I will not make any remarks on that. Anyhow, in another part of the bill—section 6; I will not read all of it—it provides what the treasurer of every political committee shall do, and it says that it shall be his duty to—

File in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., with said Clerk, an itemized detailed statement; and on each sixth day thereafter, until such election, said treasurer shall file with said Clerk a supplemental itemized detailed statement. Each of said statements shall conform to the requirements of the following section of this act, except that the supplemental statements herein required need not contain any item of which publicity is given in a previous statement. Each of said statements shall be full and complete, and shall be signed and sworn to by said treasurer.

It shall also be the duty of said treasurer to file a similar statement with said Clerk within 30 days after such election, such final statement also to be signed and sworn to by said treasurer and to conform to the requirements of the following section of this act. The statements so filed with the Clerk of the House shall be preserved by him for 15 months and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we all know that the present law has entailed expense upon the Government. We know that there are prepared by the Clerk certain printed forms and statements, one furnished to each candidate, not only to a Member of Congress but to each candidate for nomination and in the election: certain printed forms and statements—first, those before election and then those after election; first, those before the primary and then those after the primary. But even if there was any doubt about that, I will call the attention of the Chair to section 844 of the Manual, discussing paragraph 3 of Rule XXIII:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made—

And so forth—

shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of the bill has commenced

Consulting those precedents, which it is not necessary to read, I call the attention of the Chair to this:

But where a bill sets in motion a train of circumstances destined ultimately to involve certain expenditures, it must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Surely.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will admit, of course, that there are many bills which may be placed on the House Calendar and passed?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If passed, these bills must be printed, under the law—first, as separate laws; second, as a part of the session laws; third, as a part of the laws of the Congress; and fourth, eventually as a part of the supplement to the Revised Statutes. This is done at the expense of the Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, does the fact that when the House passes a House Calendar bill it must be printed at the expense of the Government render it a Union Calendar bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. No. The gentleman knows what my answer is to that; and the reason for that is because the estimates are submitted and appropriations are made in a bill which must be and is considered in Committee of the Whole, the appropriation bill making the appropriations for that sort of expenditure.

Mr. MANN. Is not that true about the printing of the report in this case?

Mr. BARTLETT. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Because those House calendar bills do not contain any provision which upon its face shows that it will require an expenditure. A bill which does not upon its face show that it will require an expenditure need not be considered in the Committee of the Whole. Of course I know it is like carrying coals to Newcastle for me to tell the gentleman anything that is in the Manual, because he knows more about it than I do; but the gentleman knows I state the rule correctly——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman undoubtedly does.

Mr. BARTLETT. That if a bill upon its face does not show that it is to carry an expenditure of money or provide for an expenditure of money it is not subject to this point of order, although it may, after it has passed, require some expenditure of money. But this bill upon its face carries a requirement that it shall be printed as a public document, which necessarily will require an expenditure of money.

Mr. MANN. When I rose to interrupt the gentleman he was discussing that part in relation to the filing of reports with the Clerk.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, how does that on its face require an expenditure?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think probably on its face that does not sustain me on that particular point. I never undertake to argue anything that I do not believe. I always undertake to be frank with the House and everybody else in any position I take. I do not desire to take any position which I do not believe to be tenable.

Now, if the Chair will indulge me just a moment, I will read from section 4827 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 4:

A bill which sets in motion a train of circumstances destined ultimately to involve certain expenditure must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

On December 12, 1904, during the call of committees for the consideration of business on the House Calendar, Mr. Abraham L. Brick, of Illinois, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, called up the bill (H. R. 3586) to provide for the retirement of petty officers and enlisted men of the Navy, which provided:

"Be it enacted, etc., That in computing the necessary 30 years' time for the retirement of petty officers and enlisted men of the Navy all service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be credited."

Mr. SERENO E. PAYNE, of New York, made a point of order that the bill properly belonged on the Union and not the House Calendar.

The Speaker held:

"The Chair must sustain the point of order. It seems to the Chair that, upon the face of it, it makes a change of existing law, that this bill provides for an additional charge upon the Treasury not now made by law. The Chair must take notice that if these men go upon the retired list others will fill their places, and by the terms of the bill they are to go upon the retired list by virtue of their service in the Army or the Marine Corps, as well as their service in the Navy, the law now being that they must serve 30 years' time in the Navy, as the Chair understands, before they can go on the retired list. It seems to the Chair that, upon the face of it, it makes a charge upon the Treasury and should receive consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The bill will be referred to the Union Calendar."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield to me to make a request?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be transferred from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar, and that we proceed to consider it now.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no objection to that. That is my point, and I have no other purpose to gain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 8428 be transferred from the House Calendar, where it is now pending, to the Union Calendar, and that it be considered at once. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Let us see if we can agree on general debate.

Mr. RUCKER. Very well. What does the gentleman say on that point?

Mr. MANN. We would like one hour on this side.

Mr. RUCKER. To be frank with the gentleman, no Member has spoken to me about time on this side, but I think an hour on a side will be sufficient. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill may be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] and the other hour by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to not exceeding two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], and at the end of two hours the general debate shall end. Is there objection?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if there is any new legislation in the bill not already in force?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. In what sections?

Mr. RUCKER. Some in all the sections. The report sets it out very thoroughly. There is no new principle involved.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I did not see any new principle involved in it, and I did not see any reason why the House should stop and debate a bill two hours that has no new legislation in it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have ascertained that there are probably two or three gentlemen on this side who may want some time, and who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Florida wants 10 minutes, the gentleman from Louisiana 10 minutes, and I will be satisfied with 10 minutes myself.

Mr. RUCKER. I will give the gentleman 20 minutes if the gentleman from Illinois will give him 10 minutes out of our time.

Mr. MANN. That will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate shall not exceed two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], and at the end of that time the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest that general debate will run beyond 6 o'clock. Is it the idea that the gentleman will take up the bill under the five-minute rule at the end of that time?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no; not to-day.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, the next committee under the call is the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, and we have one or two bills. I would like to ask if there is any possibility of our reaching them this evening?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think so.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask, being interested in the calendar as we go along, how long this bill is liable to occupy the time of the committee?

Mr. RUCKER. This is the only bill we have, and after the general debate is over the bill will be considered under the five-minute rule next Wednesday. I think we should finish it in two or three hours under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GARNER. And we may finish it this afternoon.

Mr. RUCKER. It might not be impossible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8428, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be notified at the end of 30 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I ought to make a brief statement of this bill and what it contains to the House, and in the beginning I want to invite each gentleman present, if he will do so, to read the committee's report which accompanies the bill. I really believe the report filed with this bill gives a clearer statement of what the bill contains and the amendments that are proposed than any statement I can make.

In the beginning I want to ask to be permitted to proceed for a few minutes without interruption until I can state briefly the salient features of the bill. After that I will gladly yield to interruptions and will try to answer any question which any gentleman may see fit to propound to me.

I will deal with the bill by sections. The only change made in section 1 is in line 16, where the word "Senators" is inserted. That, as it has already appeared to your minds, is for the purpose of adjusting this bill to the present mode of electing Senators. At the time the present law was enacted Senators were elected in the old way by legislatures.

Section 2 inserts the word "payment" and the words "or promised," which do not change the effect or the intent of the present law except to make it clearer and broader.

Section 3 is a new section.

Its purpose is to limit the amount of money a "political committee" may use or expend for campaign purposes in any State to a sum not "in excess of or greater than the aggregate amount contributed to such committee by actual residents of such State," with a proviso that this section "shall not be construed to limit the amount which such political committee may expend" for campaign speakers and their expenses, printing and distributing literature, and the cost of newspaper advertisements, and so forth.

No attempt is here made, nor in any part of this bill, to limit the expenditure of money used in an effort to reach the judgment of electors. Appeal to the minds and judgment of men by political parties and candidates for political office is commendable and is encouraged by every section and provision of this bill. But the objectionable and vicious practice, sometimes indulged in, of collecting large campaign funds in the great money centers and carting them into other States to demoralize, corrupt, and debauch the electorate and thereby destroy the safety and purity of the ballot box is a crime against public morals which can not be too harshly denounced or too soon prohibited. If the enactment and enforcement of this section will cure this evil, it will have fully accomplished its purpose and will meet the hearty approval of every voter whose vote can not be purchased with money.

I should say section 3 of this bill is the direct result of the action of the Senate in passing Senate bill 192, introduced by Senator CLAPP of Minnesota. The phraseology of the bill, Senate bill 192, is not exactly the same as section 3 of this bill, but without reading it I venture the assertion, which I think is true, that it covers the same evil sought to be removed, the effort being to prevent great political committees, like the national committee or the congressional campaign committee, from accumulating vast sums of money and taking that money into close or doubtful States or districts and there using it on the eve of election. In order to prevent that practice, which has become an abuse, the Senate of the United States passed the bill to which I refer limiting the power of committees, and we incorporated the principle of the Senate bill in this bill by providing that these great committees shall not use in any one State a larger sum of money than has actually been contributed to such committees by bona fide citizens of that particular State. Further on in the bill an amendment is proposed which will require the secretary or treasurer of these great committees, in keeping accounts of moneys contributed for campaign purposes, to keep the amounts by States, so that at a glance the officer in charge and having the distribution of these funds can determine how much money has been contributed by Missouri or by Georgia or by Illinois or by Michigan, and the amount contributed to the committee by the citizens of those States limits the amount which the committee may expend in the particular State, except that the committees are unlimited in the amount of expenditure necessary to defray the expense of those who actually participate in campaigns, campaign speakers and trains to carry them, and so forth, or for newspapers carrying advertisements.

It occurred to me, and to the committee having this matter in charge, that it would be better to crystallize the principle enunciated in the bill as introduced in the Senate by Senator CLAPP into a section of this bill, so as to have in a concrete form all of these laws governing the expenditure of money in political campaigns and requiring publicity of the same.

Section 4 is existing law without any change whatever.

Section 5 is substantially existing law. There are one or two verbal changes made, but none that would effect any change of moment.

Section 6 of this bill, which is section 5 of current law, is amended in line 21 so as to make it clear that political committees must file statements under oath showing the receipts and expenditures of such committees in connection with special elections held to fill vacancies and in case of general elections in any one State for the election of candidates for Senators or Representatives if such committee shall participate in such election. Making that statement a little more in detail, I call the attention of the committee to this fact: In the course of time vacancies occur which require special elections in certain districts or States. I say "States" because Senators are now elected in the States. Under the law as it stands to-day it is doubtful if its provisions reach the great campaign committees, the political committees, and require any accounting of their connection with or participation in special elections, elections held in any one district or State, for the purpose of filling vacancies in the office of a Representative or Senator of the United States. To make it perfectly clear, and I think to accomplish a great good, the committee added an amendment to existing law which provides that when these great committees actually participate in special elections, or in elections held in only one State, they must account for the money received and contributed and used in connection with that election. If they have no participation in the election they are not required to file any statement under this law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the bill limit the amount that may be expended for the election of a United States Senator or a Representative in Congress, as was done under the law passed two years ago?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman the provision he refers to is not the section I am now discussing; but, answering the inquiry, as I am glad to do, will say the law is left unchanged in that regard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In the case of a poor man making a canvass for the office of United States Senator——

Mr. RUCKER. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas, if he will, to kindly defer his questions until I reach the appropriate section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well, I will very gladly await the gentleman's convenience.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, section 7 of this act is section 6 of the present law, with some changes suggested. The only change of moment that is made is the one that is made necessary in order to make this section articulate with section 3, which I have just now discussed, that being the section which limits the amount the committee can send to any State to the amount contributed by citizens of that State.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, is there anything in the bill that would prevent a citizen from one State contributing to the campaign fund in another State through a local citizen? To get at what I am trying to illustrate, take an election in Missouri, for instance. Is there anything to prevent a citizen of New York, using that as an illustration, contributing thousands of dollars to a campaign fund in Missouri, provided that citizen does it through some local citizen in Missouri?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say frankly to the gentleman that all law may be evaded.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know that.

Mr. RUCKER. And I take it if a citizen living in another State should send to the gentleman, my colleague—but I prefer to say should send to me—a sum of money to contribute to a political committee, and I should contribute it in my own name to that committee, the committee not knowing the fact that wrong is being perpetrated, the sum thus contributed would be entered as a contribution from a citizen of Missouri and would be considered in determining the amount such committee might lawfully expend in Missouri.

Mr. HAMLIN. That being true, it raises this query in my mind: Is section 3 very valuable on that account? I am heartily in favor of the principle of it, but is it not very easy to evade?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think it is very easy to evade. If the gentleman will pardon me for digressing for a moment, I believe the idea of trying to purchase the electorate of this country is becoming so unpopular that men in one State can scarcely find a man in another State to act as a medium through which they can expend their filthy lucre for the purpose of debauching the citizenship of the State. And I believe that publicity of itself is in a measure a guaranty of the protection that the American people must have and will have and which will ultimately purify the ballot box in our country. [Applause.] Section 8 of this is section 7 of current law practically unchanged. Now we come to section 9, which is section 8 of the existing law. In addition to transposing a few words without changing the meaning and omitting the word "indorsed," this section substantially amends the corresponding section of the law now in force by requiring candidates for Senator and Representative, in addition to filing their statements of campaign expenses with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, as the case may be, to deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election, if such opponent and his address are known.

The purpose of this change is apparent; its wisdom will not be questioned. Publicity is the end sought. By this amendment to existing law it is sought to give publicity in the community most concerned and at a time when it will do the most good. Each candidate will be given a duplicate of the sworn statement of his adversary containing all the details of receipts and expenditures required by law, and will thus be in condition to scrutinize and condemn the acts of his opponent before the election if it appears that either Federal or State law has been violated. The existing law, as every gentleman present knows, requires each candidate for Senator and for Representative, at certain periods, before and after the nominating primary or convention and before and after the general election, to file certain detailed statements containing information specifically required by the law with the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. DICKINSON. May I inquire, without having read the section very closely, has the gentleman made any specific provision for the manner in which this copy shall be delivered to the opponent?

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will ask of him what I did of the gentleman from Kansas—that he withhold his question for a moment, and then I will answer. A little later I will be glad to submit to an interruption.

Mr. DICKINSON. All right.

Mr. RUCKER. Under existing law these statements are filed here in Washington. Now, it is true in near-by States that gives reasonably good publicity, but in States as remote from the National Capital as the State of Kansas, in the far West, or the State of Missouri, in the very heart of this great country of ours, but also remote from the National Capital, the publicity we get is of questionable value. In other words, the law requires that not more than 15 nor less than 10 days before election these statements must be filed, and obviously, and for good reasons, we provide that the deposit of these statements at the proper time in a post office, duly addressed and registered, shall be considered a filing.

Now, the statement may be mailed, which is the equivalent to filing, 10 days before the election; but coming from California, or from Maine, or from Florida, or any other remote part of the United States, it requires 2 or 3 days in which to reach here, and then news of any valuable character requires several days to reach back again. Hence, before tidings can get from a distant part of the country to Washington and then be communicated back, the 10 days have expired, the election has been held, and, hence, the publicity is of no avail, and only because it comes too late. This amendment which the committee proposes seeks to remedy that condition by providing and requiring that when the candidate prepares his statement for the purpose of sending to the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House he shall prepare a duplicate of that statement, which he must serve on his opponent, or opponents, if there are more than one, if they and their addresses are known. Lest I forget, let me say here now that it seems strange to suggest that one may not know his opponent, because most of us do know our opponents, and know their addresses; but that language is inserted deliberately, because of the fact that in some congressional districts in the United States, especially in the great cities, it frequently happens that candidates do not know who their opponents are, as gentlemen on the floor have told me, and hence to require them to serve a duplicate of their statements on their opponents, not knowing who they are, would, of course, be requiring an impossibility at their hands and subject them to criminal penalties when they have no chance of obeying the law. So we use this language to meet the condition suggested. It certainly can do no harm, as those of us who know our opponent and know his address must comply with the law, while he who fails to comply with the law by serving a duplicate of his statement on his opponent would be guilty, unless his opponent is unknown to him.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Did the committee take into consideration this matter of filing with the secretary of state in the State in which the congressional district is located, where they might be seen, as well as in Washington?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman the committee did discuss that matter, and it has been discussed quite fully—more, I will say, at a prior date when this bill was under consideration. The question of filing the statement with the county clerk or the recorder of deeds of the county in which the candidate may reside, or with the secretary of state of the State in which he resides, was then discussed, but I very much doubt if we have power to compel those State or county officers to comply with a statute of this kind.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Could we not require it to be filed in the Federal court, with the clerk of the United States court?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; but when you come to the Federal courts, you have so many of them—sometimes two or three in one district—and it would likely prove confusing and certainly would be very inconvenient. I am strongly of opinion that the plan proposed in the bill will prove more satisfactory.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information, because I know he thoroughly understands the bill. The language says:

> And deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election if such opponents and their addresses are known.

What will be regarded as a delivery? Can it be done in person or can it be done by mail?

Mr. RUCKER. That is the same question asked me by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] a while ago.

Mr. HAMLIN. I did not catch it.

Mr. RUCKER. Further on in the bill the gentleman will observe that the same section that requires the filing of the statement with the Clerk of the House provides that the deposit in the post office shall be deemed a filing. The same provision is in the bill with regard to the duplicate. It may be sent by mail.

Mr. HAMLIN. In other words, the same provision that applies to filing with the Clerk applies to the candidates?

Mr. RUCKER. It can be delivered in person, but a deposit of it in the post office, registered and addressed to his opponent, is deemed a delivery of the duplicate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not the desire of the gentleman to have Members withhold from questioning him about provisions under the various sections until he closes?

Mr. RUCKER. I did so request, but I will yield to the gentleman if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to do so now.

Mr. RUCKER. Section 10 of this act is one paragraph of section 8 of the existing law. Section 8 of the existing law deals with two absolutely different propositions, different phases of the question, and the committee simply divided that into two sections. It does not change existing law. Sections 11 and 12 of this act are new sections. And I expect in order to discuss them I had better read them. Before reading, however, I want to answer the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let me state my question. The question I ask is whether or not the amount of money that may be expended by a candidate for United States Senator, for example, is still limited, as under the old law?

Mr. RUCKER. Identically.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now, I have just been wondering if in a campaign in a special election for United States Senator—if the State is as large as Missouri—the poor man would have any chance at all with one who had been a candidate for United States Senator through the newspapers and had been spending his money liberally for years with a view of some time or other becoming a candidate for United States Senator. The poor man has absolutely no chance now in a whip-cracker campaign or a short campaign for United States Senator, and it just occurred to me that he was barred in two ways—first, by the amount of money that might be spent and, second, by not being permitted to spend enough money to make the campaign——

Mr. RUCKER. Do you think $10,000 is too much or too little?

Mr. CAMPBELL. My contention is that men are spending to-day without making report to anybody. They are spending more money—far more—than $10,000 to be elected to the United States Senate—spending their own money, and doing it liberally—two or three years in advance, as they must do to become acquainted now in a State-wide campaign for United States Senator.

Mr. POST. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. POST. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that our past history discloses that in any event a poor man has very poor show to get to the United States Senate.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. I have never answered those other questions yet, but I will try to keep them all in mind.

Mr. COX. I would like to have the gentleman's construction on part of section 11, at the top of page 14. I will read it, and see if I can make myself plain:

> And if any person thus named as a candidate for nomination or election to any office referred to in said section 9 shall fail, neglect, or refuse to file any statement therein required, it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, within 30 days after such statement or statements should have been filed, to certify that fact to the district attorney of the United States for the Federal judicial district in which said candidate resides.

Now, just what does that language mean, in the gentleman's opinion? Is that language broad enough so that it would require the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate to certify the names of all the candidates for Congress and candidates for the United States Senate to the district court, or is it confined, under this section, directly to the nominees, to the candidates at the election, either for the House of Representatives or for the Senate? What is the gentleman's construction of it, if he catches my question?

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman will pardon me for one minute, because I have had two other questions asked me.

Mr. COX. All right.

Mr. RUCKER. In answer to the gentleman from Kansas, first, because he first inquired, I do not know whether anybody intends to make a whip-cracker fight in his section or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would be impossible for me to make a long campaign or short campaign for United States Senator under the present laws.

Mr. RUCKER. I would say that these amounts were placed in the bill not by the House but by the Senate. There is a historical feature to it that I would be betraying confidence to talk about. I want to say to you now that I solicit the earnest support of every man here who believes in publicity and beg of him to stand with me and see if we can again enact this limitation of amount that may be expended into law. There are two views of the matter. On the floor of the House at this minute are gentlemen who think the amount $5,000 which may be expended by a candidate for the House is entirely too much. I myself am one of those. I insisted on a much lower limit.

But let me say to you that there are other gentlemen just as good as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and myself—and we are among the best [laughter]—who believe that the amount $5,000 is too small. I can say, without violating confidence, that in the Senate of the United States Senators say it is unfair and unreasonable to permit a candidate for Senator in a great State like New York or Pennsylvania to spend only $10,000 and permit a candidate in a small State like Kansas to spend the same amount. This matter will be thrashed out in another forum.

I want to say to you in all seriousness that I hope that either the wisdom of the House and the wisdom of the Senate combined or determined public sentiment will so crystallize as to enable us to hold these figures down to the limit at present fixed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you limit the time within which money may be expended in a canvass for United States Senator or Representative?

Mr. RUCKER. From the time he becomes a candidate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know men who will be candidates for United States Senator four years from now.

Mr. RUCKER. Do they admit it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Their friends know that they are spending from twenty to thirty thousand dollars this year in getting acquainted in the State.

Mr. RUCKER. That is very hard to deal with. If the gentleman, with his great ingenuity, could conceive of some language that would reach those conditions and bring about a condition of purity in the ballot box in Kansas, I would be glad to join him in an effort to enact it into law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The fact is that the present law simply bars a poor fellow, like the gentleman from Missouri or myself, and gives a rich man, who has plenty of money and leisure, freedom to pave his way to a United States Senatorship through governorships and other offices, and to spend his own money freely without giving any account of it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I do.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is anything in the law to prevent a gentleman from Kansas who is a candidate four years from now from including all his expenses from now until the time he is nominated and elected?

Mr. RUCKER. I am satisfied the gentleman from Kansas is quite free to spend any money he likes along that line.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. This bill permits candidates for Congress to expend $5,000. Now, does the gentleman think that is fair, when in his district, under our State law, he is limited to about $700? I am limited in my district to $672. I can not spend any more money. That is the truth about it.

Mr. RUCKER. I think I catch the point of the gentleman's question.

Mr. BOOHER. I wanted to know why should this figure be fixed as high as $5,000. How do you arrive at that? Upon what basis do you figure it?

Mr. RUCKER. I have just said that it was written in the law by the Senate. I myself think that $2,500 is ample. But I will say to the gentleman that we can not always tell about these things. In some localities and some parts of the country much more money can be lawfully expended, without debauching anybody, than is needed to be expended elsewhere.

Now, with respect to my own district, I have been nominated and elected many times when I did not spend, all told, more than $200. If I said "many times," I mean more than once. I do not want to discuss how many times, because I understand that is a live issue in my district now. [Laughter.] Under the law of my State, if I spend more than $630 in my district for nomination and election I would be declared to be unworthy to enter that door, because I would come here as a violator of the law. And I will say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that I have not violated the law and do not intend to.

Mr. BOOHER. Why would it not be a good thing to fix the amount in here that a man can spend and base it upon our Missouri law?

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to put something in this bill that would make my good friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] like this bill better than he now does. We leave something for the States to do. We allow the States to fix a lower limit, and if the States do not do so, we in the State of Missouri will be content with the sum that is fixed in neighboring States.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Alaska?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I wish to inquire if the provisions of this bill will apply to an election in the Territory of Alaska for Delegate to Congress?

Mr. RUCKER. Well, a Delegate is not specifically named, I believe.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I believe it ought to reach our election.

Mr. RUCKER. It ought to. I believe it ought to be but I do not believe it is specifically named. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to the matter.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. I note that a duplicate is required to be delivered to an opponent. I suppose that is for the purpose of publicity, for the purpose of giving the opponent an opportunity to examine it and criticize it and to expose it if it is not a true copy.

Now, have you considered the thought of requiring a duplicate copy to be filed with the secretary of the State instead of being delivered to the individual? Would not that give more publicity? The opponent, then, knowing what the law is, can readily secure a copy, or anybody else could secure it; and has not Congress the same right to make that requirement as to make the requirement that it is to be delivered to the Clerk?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that I think the provisions of the pending bill are much better and in the end will give more publicity.

Now, I have already consumed more time than I ought to. How much time have I used, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 26 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. Regarding section 1, I notice that section 1 still retains the language that was used in the old provision of the law which limits the application of the terms of this act to committees which shall operate in two or more States. Did the committee consider that as being best to be retained? In other words, did the committee come to the conclusion that it was best to limit the application of it only to the great national committees?

Mr. RUCKER. The committee thought so; yes. But I will say I do not believe that we could have substantial publicity or effective publicity in any other way. I do not believe we could obtain what the gentleman would like to obtain through the medium of State or congressional or county committees.

Mr. TOWNER. A congressional committee in any congressional district may expend any amount of money and not make any accounting of it——

Mr. RUCKER. That is true, under this law.

Mr. TOWNER. So far as the provisions of this law are concerned.

Mr. RUCKER. But under the State law——

Mr. TOWNER. Ah, but if the State law does not provide for it, if the State law is silent upon the question, then there is no provision requiring publicity.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say to my friend the gentleman from Iowa that we are attempting to do here what the States can not do; and in seeking to make friends for this bill and to remove every possible objectionable feature, we have left it for the States of Georgia and Iowa to do some things which this law does not attempt to do; but if the States will take up this question and do as much in the direction of securing publicity, and in that way the purity of elections, as the National Government has done, I believe the time will come at no distant day when we shall hear less of the demoralizing influences of money used in political campaigns than we have heard in the past.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that we are now endeavoring as a Congress to secure the purity of the election of Congressmen, and that really the States, as States, have nothing whatever to do with that; and yet we have left open the most prolific source of corruption that I know of in the election of Members of Congress. I think the national committees never—I will not say never, but almost never, and certainly very rarely, if ever—have gone into a district and corrupted it, although money has been sent into the district from all over the United States and there used by local committees and local interests.

Mr. RUCKER. I think the gentleman's conclusion is very likely correct; but if the gentleman will bear with me for a moment, I will say that if the national committee will comply with this law, and if then the State will do its duty, we can put an end to all that. But you can not do it until we do have State cooperation, in my judgment. I would be glad to do it. I would say to the gentleman from Iowa, or any other gentleman here, that no man can go further than I am willing to go to give absolute, free, full publicity, and, as far as it is possible for men to do it, to so guard and control elections as to rid them of every impurity.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman give the committee the benefit of his construction of section 11, as I propounded the question a moment ago?

Mr. RUCKER. As I understood the question the gentleman asked some time ago, he wanted to know about the language at the top of page 14:

> And if any person thus named as a candidate for nomination or election to any office referred to in said section 9 shall fail, neglect, or refuse to file any statement therein required, it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, within 30 days after such statement or statements should have been filed, to certify that fact to the district attorney of the United States for the Federal judicial district in which said candidate resides.

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. I think beyond question it is the intention of that language to include everybody who was a candidate for nomination or election.

Mr. COX. That is the very query in my mind. Is the language expressed in this section broad enough?

Mr. RUCKER. It seems so. Let me read it to the gentleman:

And if any person thus named as a candidate——

Mr. COX. Named as a candidate?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. COX. As a candidate for nomination or election?

Mr. RUCKER. This language has reference to what precedes it, and it follows language which expressly provides that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and myself, and every other gentleman who becomes a candidate, shall, when filing our statements, give the name of our opponents. And then it says the person "thus named," and so forth.

Mr. COX. In section 9?

Mr. RUCKER. No; in this very section.

Mr. COX. Section 11 refers back to section 9?

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I think the gentleman is right. I do not think there is any question as to the proper construction of these words.

Mr. COX. I wish the gentleman would give that some study, because, in my judgment, I think it is a very important provision.

Mr. RUCKER. I quite agree to that, but I think the language clear.

Mr. COX. I think the language ought to be clear and explicit, and broad enough to include every man who is mentioned in section 9 as being a candidate.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not see how it is possible to frame language stronger than this.

Mr. COX. I wish it could be made a little plainer.

Mr. RUCKER. It requires every candidate for Congress to give the name, address, and Federal district in which his opponent or opponents, either for nomination or election, resides. And then it says if any person thus named as a candidate fails to comply with the law, and so forth.

Mr. COX. Suppose, as an illustration, that in my district there are half a dozen candidates for Congress struggling for the nomination. That is to say, they are all candidates up to the time the primary election is held, but from that time on there is only one candidate?

Mr. RUCKER. The others have all been candidates prior to that time.

Mr. COX. Is it the gentleman's idea that this language is strong enough to go back prior to the primaries?

Mr. RUCKER. My judgment is that it is absolutely strong enough to do so because it says so.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri will permit—a little out of order—is it the gentleman's intention to have a vote on this bill to-day?

Mr. RUCKER. It is not. Mr. Chairman, there are several other features of the bill that I have not been able to discuss, because I have yielded more time to inquiries than I anticipated; but I believe the gentleman from Wisconsin desired to ask me a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I desired to have you clear up a little ambiguity as to some of the language. In section 9 of the bill you exempt the Representatives and Senators from reporting and permit, without any limit, money paid for travel, subsistence, stationery and postage, writing or printing and distributing letters, circulars, and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service. From my experience with campaigning the great bulk of expense is of that character, and yet you lift the requirement from Members to make any return of that character of expenditures. A candidate might expend $100,000 efficiently in these modes to reach voters, and he would have every advantage over another not so rich.

Mr. RUCKER. I am familiar with the language and will give the gentleman my opinion. The criticism of the gentleman is a just one, but in the opinion of the committee we did not think we ought to legislate along a line which would prevent any man from honestly reaching the judgment or the intelligence of the people. If he wants to do it through printed letters and circulars and is able to pay for them, he has that advantage over a man who can not pay for them. It is a condition that we did not create and which we can not equalize.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then what is the use of placing any limit on campaign expenditures at all? It is a premium given to the rich man who has the facilities and the means to pay for circulars and postage and use these methods susceptible to gain an election. The rich man would have every advantage over the rest of us.

Mr. RUCKER. The advantage of placing a limit of expenditures on anybody is to see to it that money is not used to debauch the citizenship of the country, but we do not fix a limit for the purpose of preventing a man from coming in contact with his neighbors. I believe that any method or means which enables a man to present his views on public questions—his attitude on the great questions of the day to the public—to the voters—is commendable and ought to be encouraged rather than discouraged, and the committee and the Congress in the existing law has placed a well-defined line of demarcation between those acts which tend to enlighten the judgment of men and those things which tend to debauch men.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then why does the gentleman except advertisement in newspapers?

Mr. RUCKER. Because the rich man under the pretense of making a present to a man for printing $5 worth of matter might give him $5,000 and thus in reality buy a plant and get the support of a newspaper, and to prevent such conduct as that we require him to swear how much he paid for newspaper notices.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in this bill to prevent a man buying out a newspaper and having the newspaper boost him, and I know of plenty of instances where that has been done.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman's argument is unanswerable. I confess the statute against larceny has no deterrent effect at all on the thief except as fear of punishment may restrain him. This statute has no effect on a man who will so stultify and degrade himself as to do an abominable thing and then swear that he did not do it.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman two questions, if I may. I do not know how much time it will take.

Mr. RUCKER. I would be glad to answer any question that the gentleman asks me, if I can, but I am afraid I have already used too much time.

Mr. MANN. What good does it do to pass a bill of this sort, where there is no penalty, so far as the membership in the House is concerned, where it is perfectly evident that a man who has been a prominent candidate for Congress is indicted and can not be convicted, no matter whether he is guilty or not?

Mr. RUCKER. Assuming the premises of the gentleman to be true, I think it would be a piece of useless nonsense, but I can not concede that the gentleman's premises are good.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is willing to admit it has no effect here in the House?

Mr. RUCKER. No. I will not admit as far as that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is willing to admit that the House itself has set a precedent?

Mr. RUCKER. I will go this far, that at a time when this law was in its transitory period, when even the Members of the House themselves who helped make the law were hardly conscious of its existence, this House was exceedingly generous in voting to excuse gentlemen who grossly violated it, but I will say now that I believe that a different rule will prevail, and if gentlemen fail to comply with this law in the future and the officers of this House do their duty, the Federal district attorney, whose duty it is to prosecute, will have official notice of the fact. I believe that the penalty that stares them in the face at home with the public sentiment which I believe is crystallizing and developing in the House to hereafter enforce these publicity laws, will make gentlemen respond to them and obey them.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe you can convict a man of crime which has no criminality, as far as its moral aspect is concerned, because he has not complied with specific provisions of a statutory law like this, who is a partisan, following a partisan campaign, where his partisan constituents will be on the jury.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not believe that partisanship enters into it much, because I stood here one day feebly trying to sustain the supremacy of this law, and I noticed that all of the gentlemen on that side voted with the gentlemen on this side to ignore the law.

Mr. COX. I want to say to the gentleman that there was one on this side who did not.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not mean all.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what incident the gentleman refers to. I never voted to ignore the law.

Mr. RUCKER. I did not say the gentleman did.

Mr. MANN. And this side never did.

Mr. RUCKER. But the vote in effect ignored the law.

Mr. MANN. The House seated a Member of Congress who had not complied with the law and thereby gave notice that it would not require a compliance with the law. That was a case where a man had not been a previous Member and was not familiar with the law.

Mr. RUCKER. I believe the time is coming when this House, as a matter of respect for itself and as a matter of obligation to the people, will see to it that men who want to sit on this floor comply with the laws we make.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, in the case where that gentleman was seated it ought to be remembered that he was not seated until after the man who claimed the seat in opposition to him had abandoned it and admitted that the majority of the people had voted for the Member who was seated by this House.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield 10 minutes, now, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, Judge CULLOP, filed some newspaper clippings to show the prosperity that was now abroad in the land, the psychological panic not having yet reached him. I regret that the gentleman is not present in the Chamber at this moment, but among other clippings that he filed was one from the Terre Haute Tribune which referred to the North Baltimore Glass Co. and the great prosperity that that company was now enjoying under a Democratic tariff. At the same time he filed a clipping from one of the papers on the Pacific coast. I knew that the gentleman did not know anything about the conditions on the Pacific coast, but I presumed that he did know something about the conditions in his own State.

However, I wrote to the president of the North Baltimore Bottle Glass Co. and called his attention to the item that the distinguished gentleman from Indiana inserted in the RECORD. I hold in my hand a reply from the president of that company, and I want to read it to the House. I think they will find it an interesting statement.

The letter is as follows:

TERRE HAUTE, IND., June 12, 1914.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant is at hand, and if the statement from the Terre Haute Tribune relating to the present activity in our plant was placed in the RECORD by Hon. W. A. CULLOP for the purpose of showing "general prosperity," it is certainly very misleading. We are extremely busy in our plant owing only to the time of year, or season, at hand. We manufacture principally soda-water, soft-drink, and beer bottles, and at the approach of summer there is invariably a great demand for bottles of this kind so as to prepare in the trade for the summer months, all glass factories suspending operations in July and August.

The tariff on our particular line of goods has not been changed.

My distinguished friend from Indiana, of course, inadvertently overlooked that. I am glad he has come into the Hall.

If there had been any reduction on this line, all industries of our kind would have been compelled to suspend operations owing to the fact that we work union labor and are in close competition with the cheap labor of Germany and other foreign countries.

I hope the gentleman heard that sentence.

Until the recent approach of warm weather our business has been extremely dull, suffering in sympathy with all other lines of trade, but at present we are only enjoying a season of activity due entirely to the time of year at hand. A number of plants in our line, however, have suspended operations, even at the present time, and we regret to say that the prospects for fall business do not look at all encouraging.

Answering the last paragraph of your letter as to how our business compares at present with what it was in June, 1913 and 1912, we can only reiterate that we are always in full blast in the months of May and June, and that for many years past, due to the approach of the summer season, we are always fully sold up on our production at this time, but our entire season's business for this year will show a considerable falling off from that of the former two years.

Trusting I have covered your inquiries, I am,

Yours, very truly,

THE NORTH BALTIMORE BOTTLE GLASS CO.,
A. L. PFAU, President.

Now, on the same subject the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has handed me another letter since I came into the Hall from the National Window Glass Workers of Cleveland, Ohio, signed by the president of that organization. I will not take the time to read all of the letter, but I will read a paragraph or two, and I will ask to insert it in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

NATIONAL WINDOW GLASS WORKERS,
Cleveland, Ohio, June 12, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I note by the issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, under date of the 6th instant, that permission was given to the Hon. WILLIAM A. CULLOP, of Indiana, to insert a statement referring to glass which was printed by the Terre Haute Tribune. In referring to the article, Mr. CULLOP states that some of the largest window-glass factories in the United States are located in the city of Terre Haute and that they are in a most prosperous condition. I fail to understand how Mr. CULLOP could have made such a serious blunder. The fact of the matter is that the glass factories operating at Terre Haute produce green and amber bottles, this branch of the glass industry being as foreign to the window-glass industry as is the manufacture of steel and iron.

To the above I wish to add that the window-glass industry of this country is not at the present time in a highly prosperous condition. There is but very little demand. The manufacturers for the most part are carrying their production of the past four months. Jobbers are not buying in normal quantities expecting that the Belgian manufacturers will reduce their selling prices to such a point that foreign glass can be bought for less than the domestic product. The Belgians have already reduced their discounts to Pacific coast buyers, the American manufacturer being compelled to make radical reductions in his selling prices in order to meet the foreign competition. I fear for the welfare of our members if the American manufacturers are forced to make a general announcement to the trade of such prices as are at present prevailing on the Pacific coast.

During the past winter I have had an opportunity to study the method of production prevailing in Belgium and to compare the items of cost that enter into the manufacturing of a box of glass in that country as against the items of cost that enter into the production of glass in this country, and I do not hesitate to state that with the single exception of fuel the Belgian manufacturers have an overwhelming advantage because of the following reasons:

First. A continuous system of production is followed out, the skilled workmen being employed on Sundays, no holidays of any nature being observed.

Second. The skilled and unskilled labor cost is much cheaper than in this country. The skilled workman receives 37 per cent less in wages for producing 57 per cent more glass. Unskilled labor employed around factories is paid from about 50 per cent to 80 per cent less than unskilled labor in this country.

Third. The raw material charges are much less than in this country.

Salt cake costs $6.50 per ton, as against $13 in this country.

Lumber, $15 and $20, as against $24 in this country.

Sand, 75 cents per ton; cost per ton in this country ranges from $1 to $1.85.

The principal advantage, however, possessed by the Belgian manufacturers lies in the fact that their skilled labor is satisfied with much less than we expect and that they work longer hours per day and on Sundays and days we consider as holidays.

We had knowledge of the above conditions before the present tariff rate became effective, and at the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee endeavored to convince the members of that committee that radical reductions of the tariff rates would be injurious to the window-glass industry. The data that we submitted, however, was, I presume, considered inaccurate, and a reduction of 45 per cent in the tariff rates followed, under which arrangement importations for the past six months, commencing with October, 1913, and ending with the month of March, 1914, have increased 36 per cent, and the valuation of the product 39 per cent in excess of the amount and valuation of importations for the corresponding months during the previous year.

I expect to be in Washington within the next few days, and, if you are not too busy, will appreciate meeting you.

Yours, respectfully,

J. M. NEENAN, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. MAPES. I yield two minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is what the president of this labor organization thinks of the situation of glass manufacturing, and I want to compliment my distinguished friend from Indiana for the contribution that he has added to the prosperity of the country, to the Democratic psychological prosperity of the country, and I trust he will insert some more clippings in the RECORD of that character. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter in full.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I promised to yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, but I find I used 57 minutes——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used 53 minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. But the gentleman from Michigan has very kindly agreed to yield 15 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. I yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. And I yield the gentleman from Georgia 30 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, it is always amusing to hear the great calamity howler from the State of Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. If anybody has done overtime in the way of human exertion to cry panic in this country or to alarm labor and deprecate business conditions in this country, it has certainly been the gentleman from the State of Washington. He is daily on the job, and works at it early and late. He surely does overtime. I read the article from the Terre Haute Tribune referred to by the gentleman from Washington, and I have been advised since I put it in the RECORD by one of the best-informed men in that thriving Indiana city that it states the fact about the conditions of the glass-factory business in that city. Since that time I have conversed with a gentleman well informed from that city, and he has informed me that it is not only the condition of the glass manufacturing of Terre Haute but of every other manufacturing business in the city of Terre Haute.

Now, for the information of the gentleman from Washington I will call his attention to some of the improvements now in process of construction and manufacturing conditions in that splendid city on the banks of the Wabash, as follows:

TERRE HAUTE, IND.

Fifty miles of paved streets in 1914 (only 26 now).

New buildings.

Miller Parrott Baking Co	$200,000

Terre Haute Paper Co.
Valentine & Co.
Louden Packing Co.

This is a splendid showing and the best refutation that can be made of the great calamity howl pulled off almost daily by the gentleman from Washington. This showing speaks well for the administration of Woodrow Wilson and the Democratic Congress.

Now, for the edification of the gentleman from Washington, the great national calamity howler, I call his attention to the following editorial from the Indianapolis Star of June 13, a Republican paper with very strong Bull Moose tendencies, stating the business conditions in the city of Indianapolis, which are not altogether in harmony with those of the distinguished gentleman from Washington. It is as follows:

NO HARD TIMES HERE.

Whatever may be the status, psychological or otherwise, in some parts of the country, there is nothing wrong with business in Indianapolis. That this is the busiest, best city in the country is apparent to anyone having knowledge of local conditions.

The degree of prosperity that is being shared by the business men of the city is unprecedented and real. It is not in their minds nor proclaimed in the hope of creating an impression elsewhere. It is of the substantial kind that produces optimism and is reflected in the tax returns.

A representative of one of the large grocery concerns of the city admitted before the board of review that the business of his corporation is the best in its history. The officer of a hardware company confirmed that showing as applying to his line of business. The furniture dealers were given an increase in their appraisements for taxation purposes, as they, too, were willing to concede that they are enjoying prosperity. There are few, if any, other places on the map in which there is so much of the spirit of content and hope as in Indianapolis at present.

The builders of the city are busy. Real estate is advancing in price and the demand is good. The trolley lines that radiate from Indianapolis are bringing in each day 18,000 shoppers to help to swell the tide of local traffic. They come from prosperous communities that are looking forward to a record harvest.

The good fortune of Indianapolis and Indiana regarding the crop outlook is not unique. Unless something unforeseen and unlikely happens within the next few weeks, this country will receive many billions of new wealth from its soil. It is idle to fear even psychological depression anywhere in the United States with all that money in sight.

In addition to that I will also insert an article from the Gary Evening Times of Monday, June 15, showing the splendid condition of the banks and business in that thriving city in Indiana, which is as follows:

BANKS ARE IN SPLENDID SHAPE—EAST CHICAGO, CALUMET, AND INDIANA HARBOR INSTITUTIONS PROSPERING.

"The banks of East Chicago, Calumet, and Indiana Harbor are just in the best shape they ever were in their history," said a banker to a Times representative this morning, "and the utmost confidence may be had in them."

Not any of the banks had a penny in the Chicago banks which have suspended.

The banks of East Chicago, the First National and the East Chicago Bank; the First Calumet, of Calumet; the Citizens' Trust; Indiana Harbor National; and the First State Trust & Savings, all of Indiana Harbor, are enjoying their usual prosperity, as their statements show, and their affairs are wisely and judiciously administered.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What about the steel industry in that city?

Mr. CULLOP. The steel industry of that city is not in the condition that the great calamity howler from the State of Washington tries to have the country believe. If the gentleman will take the pains to read the report from the manufacturing industries of this country the last week he will see that there is a decided improvement in the condition, and they are immensely better than they were in the fall of 1907 under a high tariff and under a Republican administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Does the gentleman from Washington know of the conditions of the steel industry? If he did, he would not make that inquiry. Does he not know that steel in the Birmingham district is now, under a Democratic tariff, selling for $10.50 per ton, when under a Republican high tariff it has sold as low as $7.50 per ton? The Democratic Party will not suffer any time or place when its policies are placed in comparison with stand-pat Republican policies. I say now for the benefit of the gentleman from Washington that Democratic policies are all right the country over, except when they come in contact with a monopolist or some one who espouses the cause of special privilege, and the gentleman from Washington now seems to have a corner on that particular business. Now, the truth is, the gentleman apologized to his people for the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill when in 1910 they had raised the tariff on shingles and the price had gone down, that they had reduced the tariff on coal and coal had gone up. He then was trying to appease the wrath of the people of his State, aroused over the passage of that odious measure; and now he has resorted to howling calamity over the passage of the Underwood bill to withdraw their recollection from the great injury done his people in the passage of the Payne bill by his party and with his help. The truth is, the industries of his State and his people have not yet recovered from the great injury done them in the enactment of that legislation. The conditions now will improve in his State and prosperity will attend the business of his people.

In January, 1908, when we had a high tariff, the highest but one tariff bill the country had ever known, over 413,000 idle freight cars were standing on the various sidetracks of the different railroads of the country, with their wheels rusting to the rails, as a result of Republican policies. No such condition as that exists to-day. Every product produced upon the farm is as high, if not higher, than ever known, and is commanding a ready sale in the markets of the country, with abundance of money to buy it at top-notch prices, and the railroads are not furnishing the transportation to carry people's products from the farm and the factory to the markets. This is a splendid showing for the Democratic Party. Woodrow Wilson's administration is a success, and is so conceded by all, save the owners of special privilege and those who speak for them. No Democrat need fear a comparison of this administration with any Republican administration the country has ever had.

The condition of this country is all right. The gentleman never knew hard times or panic upon rising prices or high prices, such as rule the markets of to-day. Panics occur under falling prices. The commodities of the mill, of the farm, and of the factory, are commanding the very best prices possible at this time. Wheat, corn, beef, and pork are high. It is only about a year ago, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] was shedding crocodile tears for the sheep and wool industries of this country. He prophesied then that the woolen industries would go out of existence. Free wool would ruin them. And yet to-day wool, free of duty, is higher in this country than it has been at any time in 25 years, except only upon two occasions. It is higher in the State of Washington to-day, it is higher in the State of Oregon to-day, it is higher in the State of Wyoming, where the biggest shepherd of the world lives, and it is higher in every State in this Union than it was when we had the Payne tariff duties in force in this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Do you want to go ahead now?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not particularly care to.

Mr. MANN. Some of us, it seems, were here pretty late last night.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has charge of this bill.

Mr. MANN. We were here pretty late last night.

Mr. RUCKER. Let the gentleman from Georgia get through with his speech.

Mr. MANN. He does not wish to go ahead now.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to go ahead.

Mr. MANN. All right; go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HENSLEY). The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I realize the fact that there are very few Members present, and doubtless what I have to say, even if the House were full, would not fall upon listening or appreciative ears.

I am as much in favor of pure elections as anybody. My State long since has provided by law for the regulation of primary elections, and enacted a much more efficacious, stringent, and efficient law than this or any proposed in Congress. I realize that under the decisions Congress may have the power to regulate the expenditures of money by candidates for Congress in the elections held for Congressmen and now for United States Senators, though I do not assent to it that that is the law. I do not believe it is a wise policy for Congress, however, to exercise any such authority, even if it possesses it; and when the bill was considered in 1910 which is now upon the statute book I undertook to voice my objection to that kind of a law and my objections to it. I am opposed to this bill because I do not believe Congress has any power to interfere in any way with the nomination of candidates for Members of the House or candidates for the United States Senate or to prescribe any rules governing them.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question, not to answer it now, but later on, possibly?

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course I will.

Mr. MANN. One of the Members of the House told me the other day that he was informed by his lawyer, and an able lawyer, that the national law, in that lawyer's opinion, in reference to campaign contributions, fixing the amount, overrode any State law on that subject.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In other words, the national law, having been passed, was exclusive as to the amount. If the gentleman has time, I wish he would give his opinion as to that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I can answer the gentleman as to my own views upon that subject at once. I do not think Congress has the power to regulate by law the amount that a candidate for Congress shall expend either in the primary or in the election, but if it does have the power and exercises it, then that power is exclusive, so far as the States are concerned. And I believe if Congress has the power it would be as in the case of the election law passed in 1874, where it held in re Seibold and in re Yarborough, two cases, one in the One hundred and tenth United States and the other in the One hundredth United States, as I now recall, and in the case of Riens, a case from Virginia, where they construed the election law of 1874, which provided for the presence of the United States marshals and inspectors at election for Congressmen being held at the same time that the election for State officers were concerned, that as to election of Congressmen the laws of the United States on that subject were supreme and controlled. Those are cases in which the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that although the election of Congressmen was held at the same time the State election was held for governor and other State officers and county officers, yet the law of the United States as to the election of Congressmen was supreme, and the election for Congressmen had to be held in accordance with the laws of the United States, so far as that is concerned.

As a lawyer, I do not doubt at all that if the Congress has the power to regulate the primary elections for Congressmen and for Senators, if the point is ever raised, the law of Congress will be held to be supreme and superior to that of the States in the matter, provided, of course, the law is upheld as constitutional.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will.

Mr. MAPES. In that connection, would the provision in the Federal law which provides that no candidate can expend any amount in excess of the amount allowed under the law of the State where the candidate resides make the State law supplementary to this Federal statute, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think if Congress has the power at all to regulate it, which I deny, by reason of the fact that it is an election of a United States Senator and Member of the United States Congress, wherever they come in conflict, the law of Congress would be supreme.

Mr. MAPES. But the gentleman understands——

Mr. BARTLETT. And this very act, in section 16, provides that it "shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State not directly in conflict therewith." This very bill is based upon the proposition that the laws of the States shall be complied with if they are not in conflict with this law. Your very bill says so.

Mr. MAPES. I was assuming for the moment in my question that the construction of those who say that this law could supersede the State law was correct, and on that assumption I was asking if the gentleman thinks that this provision, on page 12, which says that no candidate can expend any amount in excess of that allowed by the State law, would be enforced under that construction.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does this bill say that?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; on page 12 it says that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. What line?

Mr. MAPES. Beginning with line 7, it says:

No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, in procuring his nomination and election, any sum in the aggregate in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise under the laws of the State in which he resides.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; but you follow that with the proviso that he may expend $5,000.

Mr. MAPES. No; he may spend $5,000 if there is not a smaller limit fixed under the State law.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; but you do not say so. You say he shall comply with the laws of the State, but afterwards you provide that he may spend $5,000.

Mr. MAPES. No; we do not. We say he can spend $5,000 if the State law allows him to do that.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think this qualification contains that.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Does not the clause referred to by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] mean that if the State of Georgia, for example, provides that a candidate for Congress shall not spend more than $1,000, then he can not expend $5,000 which is provided here as the Federal limit?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think it can be construed in that way.

Mr. MOORE. That is what it seems to say. I wish the gentleman would read it a little more carefully. It says, commencing with line 7 of page 12:

No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, in procuring his nomination and election, any sum in the aggregate in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise under the laws of the State in which he resides.

Mr. BARTLETT. You say that, but then you go on and say—

Provided, That no candidate for Representative in Congress shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $5,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election.

Mr. MOORE. Would not that bring him in conflict with the State law?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. If the State law says he could spend $500 or $1,000, and he really did expend $5,000, would he not be brought in conflict with the State law, where the national law provides $5,000 as the limit?

Mr. BARTLETT. If he were indicted for expending more than the State law permitted he could plead this proviso in his own behalf.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. Suppose the State of Missouri should provide that a candidate for Congress could spend $10,000. This says he could spend only $5,000. This would govern, would it not?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. This law says that in no State can any candidate spend more than he could lawfully expend under the laws of that State, and in any event not more than $5,000?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Have we the authority to fix the amount over the State statute?

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, Mr. Chairman, in answer to that, I may say that this dialogue simply shows what a wide field of uncertainty this bill opens up. I do not myself think, when it comes to a primary election, that we have any right to interfere with it at all.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. The law of a State, say, provides that the candidate shall not spend more than $500, and the Federal law provides that he shall not spend more than $5,000. Suppose he spends $2,500, and a contest ensues on the ground that he has spent more than the State law permits. What would the effect of that contest be when he arrives here?

Mr. BARTLETT. If he were a Republican, and there was a Republican majority here, he would probably be seated; and, on the other hand, if he were a Democrat and there was a Democratic majority here, he would probably be seated.

Mr. MOORE. And would there be a legal reason assigned here in the case?

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, contested-election cases are not decided here on legal reasons. They depend on whose man it is and to which side he belongs.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman agrees that there should be some rule about it, and that it is unfortunate that a candidate should come here and be forced to face a situation like that when he ought to have his way clearly outlined before him?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to state my objections to this bill, if I am permitted to do so briefly.

The State of Georgia has a most efficient law upon the subject of the publication of campaign expenses. It provides—

Likewise all candidates for Congress or for the State senate shall, within said 20 days after the holding of said election or primary election at which they shall be candidates, file with the clerk of the superior court of each of the several counties composing said congressional senatorial district, respectively, an itemized statement, under oath, of all campaign expenses incurred by them, showing the amount of money expended in such campaign, the purposes for which it was used, and the source from which it was derived, and shall, in addition, at the same time, publish in some one or more newspapers having a general circulation in such district or districts said sworn statement.

That applies to the primary election and also to the general election.

I had prepared to undertake to show that this bill, in so far as it attempts to regulate the primary elections of Senators and Members of the House, has no foundation to stand upon, by reason of the fact that Congress has no authority to interfere in the local elections, so far as primaries are concerned.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course I will yield.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman find any single provision here with reference to controlling a primary election or any other kind of an election.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not mean that the bill proposes to control. I meant "to regulate" the amount of expenditure and provide for publicity. But while I mean that, if it is true that Congress has the right to regulate the amount of expenses in a primary election, it has the right to control that election; and the only reason why you have a right to regulate the expenses of a primary election is based on the ground that Congress has some power over a primary election to regulate or control it. That must be the only reason; because if you say you do not control it, what authority have you under the Constitution to interfere in any way with the primary election?

If you have not a right to control it, what right have you to regulate the amount of expenditure in a primary election? If you do not get your power from the Constitution to regulate it, what right have you to interfere with it in any manner at all? Would you say you could prescribe the expenditures in an election of governor? No; because you have no control over the election of governor. You assume to regulate the expenditures in the primary and in the election of Congressmen because Congress has the power under the Constitution to regulate the elections of Congressmen and Senators, and a primary is but an election. That is the source of your authority, and it is the only basis upon which it is founded.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman conceding the power of Congress, and it being for a very laudable purpose, why does the gentleman object to it?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not conceded the power of Congress in the matter of primaries. I never have done that.

Mr. RUCKER. I thought you did concede it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not. If I did, I would find no ground upon which to base my objection, except the matter of policy.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood the gentleman's objection was simply on the ground of wisdom, as to whether it was advisable.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no; the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. RUCKER. Then, the gentleman says Congress has no such power?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do say that Congress has no such power, and on one occasion I undertook to voice that view and give my reasons.

Mr. RUCKER. That being true, of course any law we pass would be unconstitutional and void.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think so.

Mr. RUCKER. And the gentleman, no doubt, will undertake to test it in the courts.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know that I will.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman being so bitterly opposed to it, and it being such a hardship on the people of the State, it seems to me it would be logical to test it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know whether I shall ever have occasion to test it in court. The case may never arise. I complied with the law, which I believed to be unconstitutional, by filing with the Clerk an itemized statement of my expenses; because, however objectionable the law might be to me, or however much I might believe it to be unconstitutional, I do not desire to have a case made against me in order to test it. A man might believe a law to be unconstitutional and yet not violate it. I say a law that undertakes to interfere with our primaries is absolutely unconstitutional and void. I do not believe Congress has the power to do it. I believe the States exercise the power of regulating primaries and passing laws with reference to the expenditures in that regard solely in the exercise of the police power of the States and no other, and such have been the decisions of the courts where the question has been tested.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not want to annoy the gentleman, but if he will allow me to ask a question I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I always allow the gentleman to ask me questions.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman concede that Congress has the power to require statements of the kind we require at the general elections when Members of Congress are elected?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman thinks Congress has nothing at all to do with the elections?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think it has not.

Mr. RUCKER. Of course, if the gentleman feels that way about it——

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, I know that opinion is not sustained by the three cases I have cited. I do not believe that Congress has the right to interfere with an election of a Congressman either to regulate the election or the qualifications of electors, but that belongs to the States.

Mr. RUCKER. This bill does not undertake to regulate the election.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman believe that the State has the power to charge filing fees for the running of a man for a national office?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know what that is; the gentleman means in the primaries?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; running for Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know what the filing fees are. I say that the primary election for Congressman or Senafor is not an election over which Congress has any power to regulate or control in any manner, either by prescribing the amount of money to be expended or saying what shall be done or shall not be done. Now, I have some decisions on this subject.

In Ledgerwood v. Pitts (122 Tenn.), a case involving the constitutionality of a primary law and which has heretofore been referred to in this debate, it is said:

The first inquiry, therefore, presented for our examination is whether or not these provisions of the Constitution have any application at all to primary elections. Admittedly no such thing could have been in contemplation by the framers of the Constitution when they came to formulate the election and suffrage clauses of that instrument, for at that time no such thing as a primary election had ever been suggested. The object of this modern invention of political parties is primarily for the purpose of permitting and requiring the entire electorate of that party to participate in the nomination of candidates for political office. The plan is simply a substitution for the caucus or convention. It is true, as stated, it is a part of the political machinery that starts the candidate on his way, and the political party is thereby enabled to crystallize and concentrate its vote on that particular candidate who is chosen as the representative, and expositor possibly, of their political views, but the limitations and safeguards of the Constitution apply exclusively to the final election when the officer is chosen in the mode required by the Constitution.

The court in this opinion, in regard to the weight of authority on this question, says:

The right of the legislature to require that nominations shall be by primary and to prescribe additional qualifications for the voters participating in the same has been recognized by the weight of authority in the States of the Union. (Runge v. Anderson (100 Wis., 533); State ex rel. McCarthy v. Moore (97 Minn., 308); State v. Drexel (74 Nebr., 770); Hopper v. Stack (69 N. J. Law, 335); Healey et al. v. Wipf (S. Dak., 117 N. W., 521); Griffin v. Gesner (78 Kans., 669); Walling v. Lansdon (15 Idaho, 282); State v. Nichols (50 Wash., 508).)

In the case of State v. Felton (77 Ohio Stat., 577) the primary-election law of that State was attacked because the qualifications of electors therein were different from those entitled to vote in constitutional elections. The court said:

If this contention is sound, then every elector has the constitutional right to vote at the primary election of every party. If the election is one at which merely the candidates of a party are to be selected, it can not be an objection that electors who do not belong to that party are not permitted to take part. That was one of the evils that the legislation was intended to prevent, and, as to the test prescribed for determining an elector's partisanship, it is impossible to conceive of a political party without the possession by its members of some qualifications, and the test prescribed by the statute is the usual one and is not unreasonable.

But a primary election held merely to name the candidates of a political party is not an election within the meaning of this section of the constitution. That section refers to an election of officers, and not the nomination of candidates.

And so I might fill the RECORD with decision after decision showing that it is the right of the State to regulate primaries as to the amount of money that shall be expended, and that it is within the police powers of the State and nothing else.

So far as this bill proposes to require, as the present law does, that you shall file the amount of your expenditures and the sums paid out in the election, I am content myself to vote against the bill, as I did in the original instance.

It will not do to say a thing is demanded in order to prevent corrupt practices in former elections. Every State in the Union, I believe, with rare exceptions, has made ample provision to protect the primary and election in the matter of expenditure of money. I know how great has been the evil of the expenditure of large amounts of money in the election of Representatives and Senators. Satisfied as I am that this bill and the law now on the statute books and this one which is to extend it as a complement to it has no authority under the fundamental law under which we live, I am opposed to it and shall vote against it.

When the time comes I shall undertake, in my feeble way, to take from this bill every reference to primary elections in a State. A man may be a candidate in a primary election or in the convention and never be a candidate before the people for Congress. It is not an election, says this authority.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not true that a great many gentlemen are candidates in the primary and are virtually elected, getting ten times as many votes as they do in the election?

Mr. BARTLETT. That is true; but that does not justify Congress in exercising a power that does not exist. Because in certain parts of the country a primary is virtually an election, because there is no opposing candidate, does not give Congress the right to exercise any such authority. That grows out of the fact that there is no organized Republican or Democratic Party in that particular district.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand the gentleman's attitude is that Congress has no control over the nomination or election——

Mr. BARTLETT. That is my position and has been all the time. I do not agree with the proposition that the election law of 1874 was the exercise of a constitutional law by Congress. I agree with the dissenting judges in the One hundred and tenth and One hundredth United States in the case from Virginia. Congress had no right to interfere with the election of Congressmen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, it happens that I am not personally concerned with the question of primary elections, except as primary elections are in most cases a part of the machinery whereby Members reach this body. I, as an independent, shall run under nomination by petition, as provided in the law of my State, and as would be provided as a possibility under any enlightened system.

My election as an independent Member of this House has left me free to act exactly in accordance with my best thought and my conscience in all matters before us. I have been free to do all in my power to aid this administration in the great policies with which I am in harmony, and equally free to dissent if such dissent seemed clearly the line of my duty. Without political ambition, desirous of being useful, proud of my district, and enjoying the fellowship of the Members of this House, I am frankly anxious to secure a reelection.

Mr. Chairman, at this time, and apropos of this bill, I shall take the opportunity to state the California situation as found in the Federal and State election laws.

Mr. Chairman, there seems an unnecessary conflict between the Federal law and the laws of the States concerning the election of Members of Congress. Under the Federal law candidates are permitted unlimited expenditure for circulars and postage and for the general purpose of furnishing information to the people. This is along the line of the best public policy, for without publicity, without knowledge on the part of the voter of the platform, aims, intentions, and record of the candidate, no intelligent judgment can be obtained. The election law of the State of California, unfortunately, is in opposition to this enlightened theory. A candidate for Congress is permitted under a recently revised California law to expend a total of only $750 for all purposes, whether contributed by himself or contributed by others. To conduct a campaign from Washington under such conditions, in the face of malicious and hostile newspapers, is practically impossible without using the privilege of communicating with the constituent as a matter of official business.

I have always decried the use of the franking privilege at election times, whether for campaign purposes or for purposes of information. Those who have contributed to my previous campaigns have lawfully paid for printing and postage, and have even placed stamps on my congressional speeches when sent out at election time. But under existing conditions, due to new State legislation, I find a necessity for the use of this congressional privilege. My district contains nearly 40,000 square miles, and a total vote of upward of 100,000. While I am in Washington attending to official business it is being flooded with malicious falsehoods emanating from certain editors and from other malefactors whose hostility I am proud to have incurred. An opponent and his backers are equally busy in circulating misinformation, and unless I am given opportunity for full publicity, I shall find myself handicapped and not helped by the fact of my absence from the district in pursuance of my sworn duty to the district and the Nation. It is for this reason that I have complied with the post-office regulations in regard to a statement of my official acts in the House of Representatives. It is for this reason that I make this statement concerning the State law and my use of the postal frank, in order to show my constituents why I am forced to do something that I have not done heretofore—that is, to take advantage of the franking privilege at this time.

If not inconsonant with the law of California, I shall see to it that the Government shall be reimbursed for the cost of sending out my official communication.

I shall leave to others the interminable argument as to the rights of the States. One thing is sure, and that is that Congress is the sole and final judge of its membership, and it is obvious to me that that judgment should be so hedged about as to protect a Member from contest who, as a successful candidate, has complied with Federal law.

Congress should definitely assert its constitutional rights and should declare what may and what may not be done, so that uniformity of conditions may prevail in every State in the Union.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. CULLOP, as Speaker pro tempore, having taken the Chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8428) respecting publicity of campaign contributions and had come to no resolution thereon.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE IN ENGLAND.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed and placed in the document room to the credit of Members 20,000 copies of Senate Document No. 495, being the report of the committee on reform in legal procedure of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, appointed to investigate and make a study of criminal procedure in England. To print 20,000 copies of this document will cost $213. There are none in the document room now. There were 400 copies there, but they were quickly exhausted. I trust no one will object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, these could not be placed in the document room to the credit of Members. I make this suggestion to the gentleman from Mississippi. We have finally come to the point where the Senate now refers printing requests, in the main, to the Committee on Printing, whereas the Senate used to order anything printed. It seems to me that, since the Senate has reformed in respect to this matter, the House ought not to run loose, and that all of these requests ought to be put in the form of resolutions and referred to the Committee on Printing. I hope the gentleman will do that, and make the request for 40,000 instead of 20,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 5574. An act to amend and reenact section 113 of chapter 5 of the Judicial Code of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments thereto, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to postpone his request until the morning. I have not yet had an opportunity to examine the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 18, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Acting Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the War Department for the service of the first six months of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1914, for transporting and caring for interned Mexican soldiers and military refugees (H. Doc. No. 1040); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication of the Acting Secretary of War reporting the claim of the Independent Fish & Oyster Co., of Port O'Connor, Tex., which has been considered, adjusted, and settled, on account of damage for which vessels of the War Department were responsible (H. Doc. No. 1041); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture in connection with the estimate of appropriation for the payment of the sum of $600 to the heirs of Anton Bucar (H. Doc. No. 1042); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GUDGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 3176) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Bangor, Me., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 844), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SISSON: A bill (H. R. 17309) to amend section 3 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1898, entitled "An act in relation to taxes and tax sales in the District of Columbia"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HUGHES of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 17310) to provide for the publication of textbooks for the use of State school systems; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 17311) to secure uniformity in the award of medals of honor and rewards for distinguished service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada: A bill (H. R. 17326) providing for the establishment of a bureau of psychology at Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 17312) granting an increase of pension to Ella Day; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUCHANAN of Texas: A bill (H. R. 17313) for the relief of the legal representatives of O. M. Roberts; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. EDWARDS: A bill (H. R. 17314) for the relief of the heirs of Samuel H. Haddon, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GALLAGHER: A bill (H. R. 17315) granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Baldwin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 17316) granting a pension to Belle Covell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 17317) for the relief of James Shook; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 17318) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel V. Sylvester; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17319) for the relief of Andrew Castle, alias Andrew Smith; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17320) for the relief of James Halloran; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr KIESS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 17321) granting an increase of pension to Edwin R. Allen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MERRITT: A bill (H. R. 17322) granting an increase of pension to Robert Taylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 17323) for the relief of the heirs of Sherman P. Todd; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 17324) granting a pension to Edward F. Connors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELDOMRIDGE: A bill (H. R. 17325) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant patent to E. M. Palmer for certain lands in the State of Colorado; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the pastor of the Maryland Avenue Church and of the president of the Eckington Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Washington, D. C., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

Also (by request), resolution signed by the pastor of the United Presbyterian Church of Burlington, Iowa, protesting against the practice of polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BAILEY: Petitions of G. S. Wilt, E. C. Lingenfelter, S. H. Womer, L. A. Shaw, Eamuel Wilt, J. F. Echard, H. E. Shaw, A. P. Shaw, W. O. Wilt, Charles E. Leighty, Charles F. Martz, H. G. Hite, Aaron Ritchey, A. E. Cove, C. E. Helsel, G. C. Glaylett, Frank Stornbaugh, J. A. Stonelarch, W. O. Over, S. C. Burger, and Clarence Diehl, all of Duncansville, Pa.; F. S. Wilt, of Newry, Pa.; David Horlett, R. B. Long, Joseph Mobley, John N. Ritchey, B. F. Long, J. M. Over, Jerry Ritchey, W. F. Mosel, and Jonas Ritchey, all of Blue Knob, Pa.; John C. Ritchey, Arvel Ritchey, Leeander Ritchey, W. G. Stornbaugh, and Joseph Stornbaugh, all of Puritan, Pa.; M. L. Wilt, J. M. Curtis, A. S. Snowberger, W. H. Mattern, E. W. States, George H. Sell, H. W. Burket, George H. Thompson, C. E. Curtis, O. H. Harpster, T. A. Trout, and H. R. McCreary, all of East Freedom, Pa.; and J. H. Smith, of McKees Gap, Pa., for national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GARNER: Petition of the executive committee of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, favoring Cummins bill to prohibit railroads from limiting their liability by prescribing the value of live stock shipped; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GUERNSEY: Petition of 100 citizens of Fort Fairfield, 75 citizens of Orrington, 150 citizens of Milo, and 72 citizens of Greenville, all in the State of Maine, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 18, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Rev. C. Everest Granger, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Great Jehovah, God of nations, God of our fathers, realizing that no man should enter upon any great or important undertaking without first invoking the aid of Deity, we ask Thy presence with and Thy blessing upon Thy servants as they are met in this important capacity this day. Bless, we pray Thee, every agency for the uplift of the race and for the solution of the intricate and perplexing problems of the social fabric. Grant, we pray, Thy favor upon all who nobly strive not only in the personal conflicts of life but in those things which are community-wide, nation-wide, world-wide in interest and importance, in clearness of vision, sympathy of heart, faith to be Utopian, courage to dare, and strength to do. Through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. JAMES and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. JOHNSON N. CAMDEN, appointed a Senator from Kentucky to fill in part the unexpired term of the late Senator WILLIAM O. BRADLEY. I ask that they may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the Senate of the United States:

Whereas the death of Hon. WILLIAM O. BRADLEY causes a vacancy to exist in the office of United States Senator from the State of Kentucky for the term ending with March 3, 1915,

I, James B. McCreary, governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, by authority of the Constitution of the United States and the act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky approved March 17, 1914, hereby designate and appoint Hon. JOHNSON N. CAMDEN, of the county of Woodford, this State, to the office of Senator in the Congress of the United States, vice Hon. WILLIAM O. BRADLEY, deceased, to hold said office and exercise the functions and privileges appertaining thereto until the November election, 1914, as prescribed in the said act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, approved the 17th day of March, 1914, hereinabove referred to.

In testimony whereof I have caused this certificate to issue and the seal of the Commonwealth of Kentucky to be hereunto affixed. Done at Frankfort, the capital, this 16th day of June, A. D. 1914, the one hundred and twenty-third year of the Commonwealth, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-eighth.

[SEAL.] JAMES B. McCREARY.

By the governor:

C. F. CRECELIUS,
Secretary of State.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that by virtue of the authority vested in me as governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky by the act of the general assembly of said Commonwealth approved the 17th day of March, 1914, enacted pursuant to the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and effective June 16, 1914,

I do hereby appoint JOHNSON N. CAMDEN, of the city of Versailles, county of Woodford, and State of Kentucky, who is duly qualified thereunto, a Senator of the United States from the State of Kentucky, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of WILLIAM O. BRADLEY on the 23d day of May, 1914, to hold said office and exercise the functions and privileges appertaining thereto until the November election, 1914, as prescribed in the said act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, approved the 17th day of March, 1914, hereinabove referred to.

In testimony whereof I have caused this certificate to issue and the seal of the Commonwealth to be hereunto affixed. Done at Frankfort the 16th day of June, A. D 1914, and the one hundred and twenty-third year of the Commonwealth.

[SEAL.] JAMES B. MCCREARY.

By the governor:

C. F. CRECELIUS,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. CAMDEN is present and ready to take the oath of office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will escort his colleague to the desk, and the oath prescribed by law will be administered to him.

Mr. CAMDEN was escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. JAMES, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. On behalf of the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 599) thereon.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to file a minority report on the bill. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina when the majority report will be printed and available for examination?

Mr. SIMMONS. The advance copy has already been printed, and I think probably it will be received from the printer to-day.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to have a couple of days after the print is available in which to file a minority report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that it is not my purpose to call up the bill for consideration before Monday. The Senator will have ample time in which to file the views of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission will be granted to the Senator from Ohio in accordance with his request, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none. The bill will go to the calendar.

JOHN R. NORRIS.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1580) for the relief of John R. Norris, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 602) thereon.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following resolution, pursuant to the notice I gave on yesterday, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The notice having been read, it will be considered as having been read at this time, and Senate resolution 398 will be referred to the Committee on Rules, in accordance with the request of the Senator from Washington, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

EMPLOYEES OF SENATORS AND SENATE COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES. In this connection I desire to introduce a joint resolution relating to the same subject matter, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) providing for employees to Senators and Senate committees, fixing their compensation, commencing with the beginning of the Sixty-fourth Congress, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Rules.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on June 16, 1914, approved and signed the following act:

S. 4352. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12579, the Indian appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs to insert certain matter on page 29 of the bill. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, after line 4, the committee reports to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho, the said sum to be expended in the purchase of seed, live stock, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in justice to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and to myself, I wish to call attention to a certain portion of the hearings which were taken before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Indian Affairs which relates to the subject which was under discussion yesterday, namely, the Fort Hall Reservation.

The Senator seemed to think at that time that there might have been something personal in my remarks. There was nothing of the sort intended by me. It was the general condition which prevails to which I referred. About this particular instance I was not so well informed as I was upon some others, but I find on reading the report of the hearings that when this project was brought up, Mr. CARTER, a Member of the House, brought out a statement from Mr. Reed, who is the superintendent of irrigation for all these reclamation projects in relation to it. For the information of the Senate, I should like to say to those who are interested in the matter that when a reclamation scheme is applied to land of Indians all of his lands become responsible for the payment of the cost of the same. The expense for the irrigation of bottom lands which are cultivable is placed on all the lands of the entire reserve and becomes a lien upon it, a claim upon it for which it is held for the repayment of the expenditure necessary to bring water upon that portion of the land which can be irrigated.

In the matter of the Fort Hall project it seems there was something like $800,000 expended, a portion of which, as near as I can ascertain, perhaps all of which, was reimbursable to the Government from the sale of the Indian lands. Mr. CARTER, who took an interest, asked some questions of Mr. Reed, who is the superintendent of irrigation. Mr. CARTER said:

I notice that in your justification you state that there are 35,000 acres which may be irrigated, and that there are now irrigated by Indians 3,300 acres, by whites 5,900 acres, and leased 185 acres. I want to ask you how you manage to calculate the cost of the water furnished to the whites? What kind of a division do you make, in other words?

Mr. REED. You mean as to the first charge, the charge for construction?

Mr. CARTER. I mean as to all charges. I want to understand how you have an irrigation project which the bureau seems to be putting into operation and which goes to Indians and white people. I want some information about how you adjust those matters.

This is interesting, Senators, to all of you, whether you appreciate it at this time or not.

Mr. REED. The maintenance and operating charges are adjusted according to the acreage; the construction charges in this particular case were fixed by Congress for the white men.

Mr. CARTER. You do not charge the Indians for maintenance and construction unless they have tribal funds?

Mr. REED. We have charged against the Indians a portion of the charges, but we do not collect from them at the present time; it comes out of the appropriation made by Congress.

Mr. CARTER. But the white men you do charge?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. And they pay their money for their part of the construction of the project?

Mr. REED. Well, they do and they do not. The act of Congress of March 1, 1907—

That was the act which we attempted to cure with the provision which was ruled out yesterday. Mr. Reed said—

I think, fixed the amount that the white men should pay on the ceded strip, which is a little less than one-third of what it actually cost.

Mr. CARTER. The white men only pay one-third of the actual cost?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. Then by this project we are giving to the white men two-thirds of the value of the irrigation project?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. So we are practicing paternalism for them pretty nearly as directly as we are for the Indians?

Mr. REED. You are in that particular case.

That is the general condition which prevails, and it was an injustice which I have protested against ever since my attention has been drawn to Indian affairs. As a member of the committee I have protested against it in committee. I have stated that no honest man could wittingly afford to be a party to it. He did himself an injustice if he was connected with affairs intrusted to him if they were carried on in such a manner. The Indians have no vote, nor no voice in the matter; they are gone; perhaps nothing that we can do will save them; but there is a miserable lack of self-respect in robbing a person who is down. It is repellant.

The Indians of this country are down; they are down upon their backs and the white man is astride them and is at work taking from them everything they have. I do not know that we can save anything for them, but I do not want to be a party to further taking from them what little they have left.

It was no reflection upon the Senator from Idaho or his State but in relation to the general system that I made my protest yesterday. It does not obtain perhaps so badly in Idaho as it does in other States, yet the land of the Indians, after being reclaimed at their expense, is to be sold at $6 an acre, and, in addition to the cost of construction, which amounts to something like $18 an acre, and that land is worth several times that amount. In many places the Indians are compelled to let go of their land under the law of 1907 if they do not make use of it within a period less than they can possibly make use of it, for $7 an acre, land the like of which irrigated and in the possession of white men sells at from $40 to $80 and $100 an acre. That was the condition that I referred to. There was not anything personal in my contention.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] that the Indians have not in all cases received the fair treatment they should have received at the hands of the Government, but I want to say for the Senator's information and for the information of the Senate that the Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation have received absolutely fair treatment, with the exception of the usual extravagant manner of construction followed by the Government. I do not mean to say that this extravagance is intentional. It is caused by the fact that there is so much to do and the field covered is so large that it is impossible under existing conditions to render efficient service.

The Senator from Oregon speaks about the water being sold to the white settlers adjoining the Fort Hall Indian Reservation at $6 an acre. That is quite true; but let me offer a word of explanation to the Senate as to how that happened. In the early days it did not cost so much to get water out of the river as it now does. At that time we did not have to build expensive dams; we did not have to build reservoirs; but we would simply throw a wing dam out in the river where there was a riffle or where the water was shallow, turn the water into a canal, and run it down on the land. The first canal on the Fort Hall Reservation was built to carry 30,000 inches of water, which is sufficient to irrigate about 35,000 acres of land. There was 15,000 inches of that water, which is sufficient to irrigate about 18,000 acres of land, turned into the canal and used, or supposed to be used, by the Indians. It was used by the Indians for several years. Then this bill was introduced into Congress and became a law and the white settlers were sold a portion of that water at $6 an acre.

The Government paid $90,000 for that canal, carrying 15,000 inches of water, which was less than $5 an acre, which they sold to the settlers at $6 an acre, and the white settlers paid a reasonable proportion of the cost of that canal at that time. The records of the department will show that 15,000 inches of water for the use of the Fort Hall Reservation were in the canal when the same was purchased for $90,000. Then the Government concluded that they wanted to bring under water the whole 35,000 acres of the Indian reservation which is susceptible of irrigation. That is the time when the construction of the reservoir on the Blackfoot River was undertaken, and they spent something like $800,000 in building the reservoir which would provide the water for the Indian lands; but even with all extravagance in construction it has been and will be wonderfully beneficial for the Indians if you go on and carry out the plan of the committee, deal justly and fairly with them, and permit them to put their lands under cultivation.

Just a word as to the cost of the construction of that canal. I have been building irrigation canals for 20 years. I know something about the cost of such work and have no hesitation in saying that the canal and reservoir system cost much more than it should have cost. That being the case, who is it that is robbing the Indians—the citizens of Idaho or the Interior Department? They are not being robbed; it is simply mismanagement. There is no question but the people of Idaho had nothing to do with the contract between the Government and the Indians or the men who constructed the canal, and are in no way responsible for mistakes that have been made. I do not accuse the present administration of having any part in that, for they were not in power at the time; but I do say, with the Senator from Oregon, that everything that is done for the Indians is done at about one and a half or twice the cost of what it should be done for. You can not and should not blame the people of the West for the shortcomings of Government officials. You should find some way to make the department construct canals for something near the limit for which they can be constructed by private individuals.

Relative to the value of this land, the Senator from Oregon says that there are 35,000 acres to be brought under cultivation for the Indians. The last part of the system cost about $800,000; 35,000 acres of that land, with water on it, can be sold in a reasonable time for $1,750,000, and the purchaser will make 25 per cent profit. Therefore the Indians, if their rights are protected and the water is put to beneficial use, have made very good money, even with this extravagant manner of handling the work. I offer these suggestions so that you may know that if the Indians have been robbed on the Fort Hall or on any other Indian reservation it has not been done by the people of the West.

A word now as to maintenance. For the maintenance of these canals on 5,900 acres in the irrigation for the white settlers of the 10,000 acres that have been set apart and settled on as homesteads the people on the canals pay to the Government their proportion of the maintenance. They pay there some years as high as a dollar an acre, and other years they pay 50 cents an acre. The amount paid is the actual cost of maintenance and operation, and is as estimated by the department; they do not even have a voice in saying how much it shall be; but the department figures up how much it is going to cost to deliver the water and sets the price, and the people pay it before the water is turned into the canals. Therefore I think there is no reasonable connection between the price that it costs the Indians and the amount that the white settler has to pay for maintenance, for it is an entirely separate transaction. The white people pay all the Government asks or requires them to pay, and have nothing whatever to do with the canal on the reservation.

All these things very plainly carry out a thought, that what we need in the Department of Indian Affairs, and not only in the Department of Indian Affairs but in every other department of the Government, is proper economical management along business lines. I am not criticizing the department; they are probably doing the best they can under the circumstances; but we should all do our part toward having our governmental affairs conducted along business lines.

There is no reason in the world why the Government of the United States should not build an irrigation canal within from 20 to 25 per cent at least of what it would cost a private individual; there is no reason why the settlers under the reclamation projects should be compelled to pay 50 to 100 per cent more than the cost of their work really should be; there is no reason why the white settler should be compelled to pay for an automobile for some superintendent of irrigation to ride over the country and tell the farmer when he can have water and when he can not, while the farmer's children are going barefooted to school.

The Senator from Oregon talks about injustice to the Indians of the West. I want to say to the Senate that the Indians of the West are treated much better than are many of the whites under some of the Government irrigation projects. I know people on reclamation irrigation projects in Idaho who have been waiting for water from 8 to 10 years. I know people who are living on projects in Idaho who, when the water is not in the canal, have to carry the water for domestic use in buckets or haul it in barrels for from 6 to 8 miles, and yet the Government will put water on one piece of land and let it soak down on another piece of land; but when a man has paid his $50 an acre for it and the land becomes water-logged so that he can not use it, the Government's agents advise him that it can not take the water off; that it was only paid for putting it on; and that the farmer will have to go to Congress for relief. While they are doing this the farmer is enduring all kinds of hardships, and yet Senators will plead for the Indian and will not raise their voice for the relief of the hard-working farmer on the irrigated farms of the West, who are enduring unnecessary hardships in blazing the way as pioneers.

Now, I want to ask you men from the East whether or not the Indians of the West deserve any better protection than is due the white people of the West? This condition of affairs exists just exactly the same relative to the Reclamation Service as it does relative to the Indian Service. What you want to do, and what you should do, is to somehow or in some way so plan that these works can be constructed at reasonable cost and without unreasonable delay.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. What item is the Senator from Idaho now discussing? Is the Senator from Idaho discussing the item proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the purchase of implements, and so forth, on the Fort Hall Reservation?

Mr. BRADY. I was replying to the criticism of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] relative to a position taken by the two Senators from Idaho yesterday concerning the striking out of a part of the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I was not present when that item was considered. It has been disposed of, as I understand.

Mr. BRADY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON. The pending item is the appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of seed, implements, live stock, and so forth, to enable the Fort Hall Indians to cultivate their lands. I should like to proceed with the consideration of the items of the bill that have not yet been disposed of. However, I want to say to the Senator from Idaho, in all fairness, that an investigation of the expenditures of Indian money for irrigation purposes disclosed the fact that those expenditures have not always resulted largely in benefit to the Indians. The testimony which has been taken before a joint commission of Congress appointed for the purpose of investigating those matters in connection with Indian affairs disclosed the fact that, from one reason or another, enormous amounts of Indian funds have been appropriated for the construction of irrigation works when the direct result and benefit of those works have accrued to white persons rather than to Indians.

It is not material, perhaps, whether it is due entirely to the inattention or inefficiency on the part of the Bureau of Indian Affairs or to other causes. The material consideration is that hereafter when Indian moneys are expended for irrigation purposes Indians and Indian lands shall be the principal beneficiaries.

Whether waters which are available for irrigation purposes can be acquired solely under the State laws or whether when the streams run through Indian lands or Indian reservations the Federal Government has some right of control is a question of law about which a conflict has been and is waging, and will continue to be waged for many years yet to come; but the testimony which has been taken and the statements of employees of the Bureau of Indian Affairs disclose the fact that under the system that has heretofore prevailed a large part of the appropriations which have been made from Indian funds have accrued to the benefit of white persons, and the provision which was stricken out upon a point of order yesterday was intended to prevent that from occurring hereafter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] has the floor. He yielded to the Senator from Arkansas for a question, which has been somewhat amplified.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho kindly yield to me for just one further statement?

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. The point of order has been made against this provision; it has gone out of the bill, and perhaps I should not have been diverted from a discussion of the item under consideration to something that has already become history. I want to proceed now, if the Senator will permit me, to discuss——

Mr. BRADY. I will, if the Senator will quit discussing the item that has been eliminated from the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want to proceed now to discuss the item under consideration on page 29 of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the junior Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. BRADY. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not understand that my colleague was objecting to or discussing the pending amendment; he was simply referring to some remarks which were made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] as to the treatment which the Indians had received on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation. We are not either of us desirous of objecting to or detaining the Senate upon the pending amendment. I understand it is satisfactory to both Senators from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. Not only that, but I am very much in favor of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then I will merely suggest that we proceed with the consideration of the bill. In view of the statement of the Senator from Idaho I have no further remarks to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the rules of the Senate the widest latitude is allowed for debate and a Senator may proceed as he may desire.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I want to say a word relative to the pending amendment. I fully agree with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that a great amount of the Indians' money has been diverted exactly as he says it has been, and I for one am in hearty sympathy with everything he has said relative to that matter. More than that, I believe that the only way that you can have the Indian lands improved and their rights saved to the Indians is to adopt the amendment offered by the committee enabling them to go on and to improve their property. You must buy teams and implements for them; you will have to send men to show them how to plow and plant and cultivate their crops. There is a large per cent of the Indians, in spite of the reflections that have been cast upon them, who will plow and plant and harvest if a man is sent to show them how to do it and how to follow the crop until it is harvested and marketed and see that the Indian receives a fair price for what he raises. When the Indian is once shown how to perform a task, ever after you will find him doing the same thing of his own accord. By proper management and by carrying out the plan suggested by the committee, teaching the Indians the proper manner of farming and of marketing and economy in the handling of their affairs, you will do more good, or fully as much good, for the Indians as you will by appropriating money for the benefit of the white farmers of the United States, and it is our duty to those engaged in agricultural pursuits whenever we can consistently do so. I hope the amendment making an appropriation of $50,000 to assist the Indians of the Fort Hall Reservation in their agricultural pursuits will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 29. Unless there is objection, it will be adopted. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 30, after line 4, to insert:

> That the Court of Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to investigate the claims for damages to the lands held under possessory claims of Nells Anderson, William Winchell, and others in whose behalf a petition or petitions may be filed in said court for damages alleged to have been caused by the construction of a reservoir for storing water for the purpose of irrigating lands on the Fort Hall Reservation, in Idaho, and those ceded by the Indians of said reservation, and to make findings of fact as to each or any of said claims and the amount of damages, if any, due said claimants.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to that amendment by moving to strike out all after the word "reservation," in line 13, page 30, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

> And to render judgment in favor of any or each of said claimants for the amount of damages so ascertained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment reported by the committee, on page 30, beginning in line 13, it is proposed to strike out the words "and to make findings of fact as to each or any of said claims, and the amount of damages, if any, due said claimants," and to insert "and to render judgment in favor of any or each of said claimants for the amount of damages so ascertained."

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I never had a very good opinion of this amendment as it read before the amendment suggested by the Senator from Idaho. If I understand it, the purpose of his amendment is to refer these claims to the Court of Claims and give that court the power to render judgment thereon. When I first examined the amendment I thought it applied simply to claims of Nells Anderson and William Winchell, but upon reading it further I find that it applies to "others in whose behalf a petition or petitions may be filed." When we add to the amendment as reported by the committee the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, it seems to me that we make it clearly open to a point of order under section 4 of Rule XVI, and I am constrained to make the point of order that it is obnoxious to that rule, which reads:

> No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill—

And so forth.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a word before the point of order is ruled upon. If the Senator wants to insist upon the point of order, I will say a word about that in a few moments; but will the Chair bear with me for a moment? I yielded to the Senator, as I supposed, for a question. I did not suppose I was yielding for the purpose of a point of order.

I wish to say, in behalf of the amendment which I have offered, that these claims are based upon the proposition that in taking this reservoir site and condemning this property certain land and certain possessions of these settlers were taken by the Government, and therefore they have certain claims against the Government. In the act of 1909, I think, provision was made by which the amount of these claims should be ascertained. The department sent some one out there at a time when it was almost impossible to ascertain the amount of the damages during that time of the year. The settlement offered by the department was not satisfactory to the settlers, and therefore they have asked that this matter be referred to the Court of Claims. The amendment which was offered in the first instance by my colleague provided for the reference of the matter to the Court of Claims with the power on the part of the Court of Claims to render judgment, but the committee changed it to a power simply to make findings of fact.

I wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that these people have actually lost their holdings. They have actually lost their property. The damages are due. They have accrued. I think the point of order of the Senator might just as well be made as to have the amendment go in as it is here. There are claims over here in the department where the facts have been found for 20 years, and the parties never have been paid. It simply amounts to denying them in an easy sort of way; it is chloroforming them for a time with the delusion that they are going to get their money, but they do not get it one time in twenty.

These people are poor people. They have not the means to come here and see that an appropriation is made and attend to it from year to year. I think the Senator ought to withdraw his point of order and permit the Court of Claims to investigate this matter and to render judgment. If there is nothing due to them, nothing will be paid. If there is anything due, certainly these people who have lost their possessions, their homes, ought to be paid for what the Government has actually taken from them.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. In what way did they lose their homes?

Mr. BORAH. Their lands and their possessions and improvements were overflowed by the reservoir which the Government built.

Mr. WHITE. How much do the claims amount to?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] referred to the fact that there are only two mentioned here. I have here, I think, the names of all the claimants, and in my opinion the outside figure—and I take this statement from those who are quite familiar with the situation—would not amount, for all of them combined, to over $45,000. Their holdings were small, but of course they were all they had. They would amount to a thousand dollars or fifteen hundred dollars apiece.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho has already yielded to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CLAPP. Was it not about $28,000 in gross? The thought was running in my mind that it was about $28,000.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I do not think the total will exceed about $30,000.

Mr. BORAH. I may have it too high. I would rather have it too high than too low; but I have the names of all the parties here—

Mrs. James Heatley and children, Abe Anderson, David Anderson, Nells Anderson, Chris. Wittinrich, W. H. Chester, William Williams, Fred Larsen, James W. Chester, Grant E. Barney, Joseph Nelson, John Swank, Mrs. Mattie M. Clement, Peter Anderson, Fred A. Rogers, George E. Tolmie, George W. Strong, Ira H. Hogan, Mrs. Donald Tolmie, Francis M. Merrell, jr., Charles C. Dewitt, John Boyd, Mrs. Abe C. Anderson, Lewis S. Pond, and L. S. Marriott—

Less than 30 in all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from Idaho goes to that subject, if I understand this matter—and I am asking for information—it was practically a taking of private property without compensation, and in morals, if not in strict law, a violation of the provision of the Constitution which prevents that. What the Senator is seeking is to have an agency of the Federal Government itself, a court of the Federal Government, which surely the Federal Government can trust or ought to be able to trust, to decide between it and these claimants——

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely the situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To find the damage, if any exists, whether it is a total taking or a partial taking, and to give a decree in accordance with the facts. The Federal Government will be represented at that trial by the Department of Justice under the law of the United States.

That being the case, I hope, with the Senator from Idaho, that the point of order will not be made, and that the Senate may be enabled to consider the matter upon its merits.

Mr. BORAH. Of course I have not anything more to say if the Senator insists upon the point of order; but I am satisfied that if the Senator knew the situation and really understood the loss which is bound to accrue to these people, he would not deprive them of their rights in this way.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable. Wholly regardless of the merits of the claim or the justice of the demand, the provision has no place in this bill.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, before the Chair passes upon the point of order I should like to know more about the facts of the matter. Perhaps I may withdraw the point of order. Would it be proper for us——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not have it pending and withdraw it both. Which does the Senator do?

Mr. PAGE. I withhold the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment will be adopted, unless there is objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object. I desire to discuss the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the amendment and then the Senator can discuss it. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate was appointed to consider this item, consisting of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], myself, and another Member whom I do not now recall; I believe the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. We reached the conclusion after very careful consideration of the subject that the matter ought to be passed to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact, and then that Congress should pass upon the matter and determine whether or not, upon the finding of fact, an appropriation should be made to meet the demands of these parties.

In reply to what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has said, I will say that the Court of Claims, in passing upon cases referred to it, in the great majority of cases merely makes findings of fact. There are now in the archives of this Government thousands of cases of findings of fact that are favorable to the claimants wherein no appropriations have been made, Congress reserving its right to pass upon the findings of fact as made by the court and determine whether or not an appropriation should be made to pay the claims.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROBINSON. I decline to yield just now.

This is peculiarly a case where the Senate ought to know what it is doing before it authorizes a judgment. Here is a case of local persons, in the immediate vicinity of an improvement that has been made by the Government for the benefit of the Indians, who claim that they ought to have damages against the Government for the construction of the improvement. It is upon the disputed question of fact that the department, already having authority to pay these claims if it believes they ought to be paid, has refused to pay them. Therefore the subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the exercise of the caution which I believe ought to be exercised peculiarly in cases of this kind, has sought to refer the matter to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I simply want to say that of course I am acquainted with the facts stated by the Senator from Arkansas. There are hundreds if not thousands of cases which have been referred by Congress to the Court of Claims for a finding where the Court of Claims has made a favorable finding of fact, and then those claims have come back here to be bandied about from session to session and probably never be paid. The very worst debt payer that I know of is these United States of America.

If the Senator from Arkansas will pardon me just one moment for a digression, I remember once, when I was a Member of the House, having referred to me as a member of a subcommittee a claim growing out of the old Spanish grants in Florida and the damages done the settlers there back in 1819. In going over those papers I found that Daniel Webster had passed upon them, and had made a report to the effect that the United States owed the money and ought to pay it. I found that Marcy, afterwards Secretary of State, had once passed upon it and had made the same report. I filed with the papers a report of mine, to go to the subcommittee, saying that as far as I was concerned I had been thoroughly through the papers and thought the United States owed the debt; that it was an honest debt. Three or four years afterwards I got a communication asking me if I knew whatever became of those papers. That had gone on for generations.

If the United States Government can not afford to trust its own court, where it is represented by counsel and has an opportunity to cross-examine witnesses, it ought to be able to do it. The very thing mentioned by the Senator from Arkansas is the thing that was resting in my mind when I said what I did a moment ago, and it accentuates it. I should like to see all cases sent to the Court of Claims sent there for a decree. If this Government is going to be honest, it ought to grant to the citizens of the United States the right to sue it, and it ought to stand up for the right and abide by the decree of its own courts.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the logic of the position assumed by the Senator from Mississippi is that the peculiar protection which inheres in sovereignty, guaranteeing to this Nation the right of exemption from suit by its citizens except by its own consent, should be abolished. I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I do not believe he has seriously considered the position he has taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I maintain, Mr. President, that the position which the Senator from Mississippi has taken, carried to its logical conclusion, means that any citizen of the United States having a claim against the Government ought to have the right to sue it, and to take judgment against the Government if he can recover judgment in the courts of the country. The argument that he makes can lead to no other conclusion than that.

I do not believe that is a sound argument. I believe if you throw open the floodgates to litigation against the United States, the inevitable result will be that millions upon multiplied millions of dollars will be taken from the Treasury upon claims that never ought to be presented, much less to be paid.

I say to you, Mr. President, in view of the fact that there are disputed questions of fact, in view of the fact that the Department of the Interior already has the power and the right to pay these claims if it believes they ought to be paid, and in view of the fact that it has refused to pay them because it believes they ought not to be paid, we are going far enough when we extend to these claimants the same right that we have extended to claimants from the State of the Senator from Mississippi—the right to go into the Court of Claims and establish the facts at issue—and still leave to Congress the power of making the appropriation without being precluded by a judgment of the court.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I hesitate to disagree with my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator need not hesitate if he thinks he is right and I am wrong.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think, from my experience of quite a number of years in these matters, that the greatest farce in the United States Government is the hope it holds out by a reference of claims to the Court of Claims for a finding. If the citizens of whom the Senator from Idaho speaks have had their homes overflowed and their property taken away by the construction of a reservoir by the Government, the Government has all the facts that it can give to the court, or that the court can ever give to the Senate; and if the matter is worthy of reference to the court it is worthy of judgment.

Taking a specific case, a little while ago the Government of the United States concluded to broaden the line between the United States and Mexico in the town of Nogales, and it issued a simple order, taking down men's stores and residences for 60 feet. That was 15 or 20 years ago. The matter was referred to the Court of Claims, and they made a finding on it, ridiculously small, taking in nothing in the world except the mere improvements on the land.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I shall conclude in a sentence, if the Senator will bear with me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; go ahead.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That was found by the Court of Claims. You may now and then get it passed through this body, and now and then through the other body, and for years and years the same thing goes on. We know what ultimately becomes of the case. It is continued in the name of their executors or administrators or personal representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Mssissippi?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a moment, for an explanation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know the Senator from Arkansas does not want my position to be misunderstood. I either expressed myself awkwardly, and perhaps too emphatically—I do not remember now just what words I used—or else he misunderstood me. The position I take is that whenever the Government of the United States does grant to anybody the right to sue it, that right ought to extend to a decree.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me finish this sentence.

Mr. ROBINSON. All right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not taking the general position that we ought to put upon the statute books a statute giving everybody the right, at any time, to sue the United States Government, but simply that when the right is extended it should be a complete right; it should be a right to sue to a decree, and not merely to send to a commission, to submit back to itself, one of the parties in interest, the question whether or not it will pay its debts.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the United States Congress has the right to use any of its agencies, any of the creatures of the Government, for the purpose of ascertaining facts which may reflect upon its own action; and the United States Congress has used the Court of Claims for that purpose from the time of its creation. In view of the fact that the department of the Government intrusted with the payment of these claims and authorized to pay them if found just, has found that they are not properly payable, I can not understand why the Senator from Mississippi insists upon making an exception of this peculiar class of claims, and still leaving the many other claims that come before Congress to be passed upon as questions of fact by the Court of Claims.

This is a matter that I believe ought to be determined as a question of fact by the Court of Claims, so that Congress can act intelligently. You will be flooded with applications for the reference to the Court of Claims of claims of this character if the court is authorized to pass judgment in cases of this sort. This will become a precedent of a very dangerous and damaging character. Congress has the power of appropriation. From the beginning of this Government it has been made the guardian of the purse strings, and it is a poor answer in this case for the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to denounce Congress by saying it has not done its duty in promptly paying claims that ought to have been paid. It is proper that the representatives of the people should retain control of the purse strings.

I might just as well say now that even if the Senator from Connecticut withdraws his point of order and if this amendment prevails the point of order will be made and the whole provision will go out of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. Was this irrigation project built by the Reclamation Service or from Indian funds?

Mr. ROBINSON. It was built for the benefit of the Indians, I think, under the supervision of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I will ask the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In that case did the bureau have any power to pay damages?

Mr. ROBINSON. Under an act of Congress already passed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Where work is done by the Reclamation Service?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; there was an act of Congress passed authorizing the Bureau of Indian Affairs to settle all these claims, and the bureau settled all that ought to be settled and refused to pay Wenchell and the other parties named in the list held by the Senator from Idaho. Then they presented an amendment to the Committee on Indian Affairs and asked us to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction to try out the matter and pass judgment against the Government. We decided after careful consideration of the matter that it would be better to let the Court of Claims find what the facts are and then ourselves retain control and jurisdiction of it.

Mr. WEST. Were these claimants turned down after a thorough investigation by the department?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know how thorough the investigation was.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator will not use the word "thorough."

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not want to preclude any rights these parties may have by expressing an opinion as to the justice or injustice of the action of the Department of the Interior or the Bureau of Indian Affairs in passing upon their claims. The fact is that the department had the power to pay the claims if it found they were just. It did not pay the claims, but refused to pay them on the theory that they were not properly payable under the act which had been passed.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator from Vermont made a point of order on the amendment. If so, of course it would be hardly worth while to detain the Senate longer; but I do want to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. Here are some 30 people who have these claims. They will not exceed, my colleague thinks, $30,000. I will say they will not exceed, at the outside, $45,000. The Senator knows from his observation and from the statement which he made a while ago that to put in a provision here for a finding of fact is practically to deny these people justice. They will be lucky, indeed, if they ever get anything at all, unless the court is authorized to render judgment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not admit anything of the kind. The same committee that reports this provision will, when the findings of fact have been made, have jurisdiction to report an appropriation to pay them.

Mr. BORAH. It will have jurisdiction, Mr. President, but the archives over there are full of claims which have been reported favorably wherein citizens have just claims against the Government, and there has never been an appropriation made for them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why make an exception of this peculiar claim and take it out of the class of the many claims which have come before Congress? Why not treat them all alike and pay them when found to be just? That is the very point I am making.

Mr. BORAH. Of course this thing of referring claims to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact has become almost a scandal. It is like the entrance to Dante's Inferno—the person who goes into that process leaves hope behind. There are only a very few instances where they are paid, and those are instances where people have such large claims that they can constantly be upon attendance of Congress and look after them and have the claims allowed after finding of facts has been made. Small claims such as are here represented are generally put into the archives and pass into oblivion.

Now, I know the Senator does not want to do these people an injustice. If the Court of Claims finds in their favor, then you have this position before Congress: You have the judgment of the court that men have a just claim for having given up their homes and their possessions for the benefit of the Government. Why not give judgment and let them have it to go elsewhere and purchase possibly a place of habitation in lieu of the one which they lost?

Mr. ROBINSON. Replying to what the Senator from Idaho has said, an argument such as he makes applies to every claim that has ever been presented to Congress and every claim that ever will be presented to Congress. I admit there is much force in the contention that when the sovereign divests itself of its peculiar characteristics and goes into business it ought to deal upon the same plane that citizens deal upon; but I suggest to the Senator from Idaho and to the Senator from Mississippi that this case is one which peculiarly calls for a safeguarding of the rights of the public by Congress, because of the very fact that one creature of Congress has already passed on these claims and found them unjust.

We all know that the Court of Claims in making findings of fact passes upon many questions, and one subject which the Senator from Idaho might think would preclude the whole subject might to my mind be of comparatively small importance. So, for that reason, I think Congress ought to set the precedent in this bill of giving the Court of Claims power to pass judgment against the United States for damages or alleged damages that may have accrued to white citizens by reason of its operations through the Bureau of Indian Affairs. If you do not do that—mark my words—instead of appropriating ten or twelve million dollars for the alleged benefit of the Indians of the United States you will in the next two years have claims presented here annually to the amount of many million dollars.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if there are just claims due——

Mr. ROBINSON. The principal point is the difficulty in ascertaining what is a just claim.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Congress, in making appropriations, is charged with the duty of passing upon that very question.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose, Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I submit to the Senator from Idaho, in reply to what he said about the forlornness of hope of these people, if they are merely given a finding of fact with the same diligence with which he is presenting their case now, he will be presenting their case when the finding of fact has been made, and he will be asking for an appropriation; but if the finding of fact is unfavorable, perhaps he will be deterred from doing that.

Mr. BORAH. There is a limitation to human life and also to public office. I do not know that these people will be living or that I will be here.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Idaho is proud of that observation, I must reply that it does not, to my mind, reflect credit upon my own intelligence that he should find it necessary to communicate that sort of a statement to the Senate in this debate.

Mr. BORAH. I regret to have fallen in the estimation of the Senator from Arkansas. If the Senator from Arkansas has not concluded, I will wait until he does conclude.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I think perhaps that would be the best course for the Senator from Idaho to pursue, in view of the fact that he has sought to remind me of the truth that there is a limit to human life and human endurance.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to interrupt the Senator from Arkansas, the distinguished Senator from Idaho is no doubt referring possibly to the Democratic situation which will subsequently arise touching his own State and not to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President; if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, what I meant was this: I had a letter from one of these settlers the other day who is 80 years of age. That was floating in my mind when I said that there was a limit to human life. The other proposition was that the Senator from Idaho has only four years to serve, and he could not get any bill through in four years after the Court of Claims made a finding of fact in that time, judging by past precedents. I was speaking sincerely and not in jest.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the interest of the Government of the United States and of the Treasury of the United States requires that we exercise some caution in this particular. If the matter were limited to the claims of the constituents of the Senator from Idaho, it would be another question, but we are setting a precedent here which has not been made heretofore. We are establishing the right of claimants in a general appropriation act to recover for alleged damages accruing to them by reason of the Government constructing irrigation works for the benefit of Indians. We all know, those of us who are lawyers, that it is not every claim which is presented that is just. We all know that the rights of the Government are not always carefully protected in litigation of this character. I do not mean to reflect upon anybody or to criticize any courts, but I am simply stating what is known to be a fact and what has led to investing the Court of Claims with jurisdiction principally to determine questions of fact. Congress can be trusted to make this appropriation if it is a just one. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that this is the first time that I, as a member of the committee, have ascertained that the provision in the bill was not acceptable to either of the Senators from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair ask his colleague a question. Is it not a fact that these alleged claims could be referred to the Court of Claims now under the Tucker Act if they had any foundation?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the adoption of this provision would simply be a reenactment of existing law?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that would be the effect of it. I think it is perfectly proper for the committee to refer a matter to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact. I am bound to admit that the whole item is subject to the point of order, and with my view of the matter if a point of order is made I shall surrender the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make a point of order before he takes his seat?

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask a question. Does the point of order go to the amendment which I offered or to the entire item?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It includes the entire item under the section of Rule XVI, and that is wholly regardless of the merit of the claim.

> No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Of course this is not to carry out a provision of existing law, and, if it were admissible otherwise, that is a specific condition in the rule. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 15, to insert:

> For pay of employees at the Nez Perce Agency, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 16, to insert:

> To reimburse M. D. Colgrove, superintendent of the Coeur d'Alene Agency, for expenses incurred in connection with the retention of an Indian charged with murder, $6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 19, to insert:

IOWA.

> For expenses of the Sac and Fox Agency, Iowa, including pay of employees not otherwise provided for, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Kansas," in section 6, on page 30, after line 23, to strike out:

> SEC. 6. For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., including pay of superintendent, $127,750; for general repairs and improvements, $11,000; in all, $138,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 3, to insert:

> SEC. 6. For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $127,750; for general repairs and improvement, $13,500; for gymnasium building and equipment, $30,000; in all, $171,250.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have a little explanation by the Senator in charge of the bill as to section 6. What is this estimate of $127,750? This situation is becoming interesting.

Mr. ASHURST. The item to which the distinguished Senator from Idaho adverts reads:

> For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendent, $127,750; for general repairs and improvement, $13,500; for gymnasium building and equipment, $30,000; in all, $171,250.

This provision in the bill is in accordance with an estimate made by the department. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has not increased the amount estimated by the department, and the justification for the same is as follows—that is to say, it is required for the following purposes, which will serve as an analysis of the expenditure:

Salary and wages	$49,399
Traveling expenses	86
Telegraph and telephone services	234

There are some fractional cents in each instance, but I omit them—

Heat, light, and power (service)	$3,015
Miscellaneous material	3,024
Stationery	102
Fuel	16,090

Mechanics' supplies	$62
Cleaning and toilet supplies	1,714
Wearing apparel	8,546
Forage	1,926
Provisions	21,235
Equipment	14,851
Construction and repairs	11,598
Medicinal supplies	654
Water	1,301
Ice	607
Seed	239
Miscellaneous expenses	75

Statistical statement for year ending June 30, 1913.

Value of school plant	$299,573
Number of buildings	66
Number of employees	67
Total salaries	$51,695
Average attendance of pupils	635
Enrollment of pupils	797
Capacity of school	750
Cost of education, maintenance, per capita	$194
Area of school lands—acres	987
Value of the products of the school for the year	$19,773

The Senator will observe that $30,000——

Mr. BORAH. Yes; for a gymnasium.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator adverts to the $30,000 for a gymnasium, which I had not quite reached. If the Senator will pardon me, I will read from page 126 the following from one of the hearings had before the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] presented an amendment providing for $40,000 for a gymnasium. Mr. Meritt, the assistant commissioner, said:

In our estimates we ask for $30,000 for a gymnasium building and equipment at the Haskell Institute. The House omitted this item from the bill passed by the House. We also asked for general repairs and improvements, $13,500, and the House allowed us $11,000. We feel that we can construct a suitable gymnasium building and equip it properly to meet sufficiently the needs of that school for $30,000, but we do need that additional $2,500 for general repairs and improvements of the other buildings. We have a large number of buildings at this school.

The Senator will remember that I read there are 66 buildings. It is one of the largest nonreservation schools in the Indian Service. The school is doing——

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question? I notice an estimate there as to the cost of a gymnasium; but are there any facts there presented or was there anything presented to the committee showing why we should spend $30,000 for a gymnasium?

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair also address an inquiry to the Senator from Arizona? The Senator read the recommendation of Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Was his suggestion transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior and by him concreted in a definite estimate of this amount as a necessary expenditure?

Mr. ASHURST. Replying to the question propounded to me by the Chair, I will state that I intended to say that this item is included in the Book of Estimates, which contains all the necessary items of appropriation estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was it indorsed by the head of the Interior Department?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, certainly. The Interior Department included this item in the estimates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That might very easily be confounded with the suggestion of the assistant commissioner. What the Chair desires definitely to understand is whether the Secretary of the Interior, in his estimate of the necessary expenses of conducting the bureau, included that item of $30,000?

Mr. ASHURST. I answer the question, yes; and in reply to the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I will proceed to read all of the testimony from the hearings that were had before the Committee on Indian Affairs in relation to this ubject. Of course I can give to the Senator and the Senate only such information as I possess; and all I possess is what I gleaned at the hearings and from the reports. So, if the Senator will permit me, I will continue to read from the hearings. Mr. Meritt said:

It is one of the largest nonreservation schools in the Indian Service. The school is doing good work, but they are in serious need of a gymnasium. We have Mr. Peairs here, who lives at Lawrence, and he was superintendent of that school for a number of years, and he can tell you of the urgent need for this gymnasium. We feel, however, it should not be over our estimate of $30,000.

Senator LANE. Where will the money come from?

Mr. MERITT. It will be a gratuity appropriation by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the item of $30,000 for the gymnasium at Haskell, and raising the other item to $2,500?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has approved of this item of $30,000 as a gratuity from the Government for the building of a gymnasium?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senate committee has done so.

Mr. BORAH. That is astonishing in view of the economy which is being practiced.

Mr. ASHURST. I notice the absence of several Senators who appeared before the committee to urge these appropriations. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] in the discussion of this item states as follows:

Senator THOMPSON. We have nothing there but a basement; and only about 40 can get in there at a time out of 700.

There was some further discussion of the subject by other Senators, which I will not weary the Senate by reading at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I inquire whether the Senator from Arizona has concluded?

Mr. ASHURST. I have concluded, unless the Senator from Idaho wishes to have me read further from what was stated before the committee.

Mr. BORAH. No; the statement made with reference to the necessity of this gymnasium is very full and very conclusive; the necessity of it seems unquestioned; and I am not permitted to criticize the economical tendencies of the committee by reason of allowing it.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, the committee is profoundly gratified to have the approval of this item by the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to say there was some mental reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 31, after line 16, to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. For support and education of 325 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., including pay of superintendent, $56,275; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $61,275.

And to insert:

SEC. 7. For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., and for pay of superintendent, $60,450; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for gymnasium and manual training buildings and equipment, $25,000; in all, $91,450.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, might I inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the gymnasium covered by this appropriation? The House of Representatives does not seem to have been partial to gymnasiums, but the Senate committee seems to have put them in in all of these instances.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Michigan, Mr. President.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this is an item that was estimated for last year by the Interior Department. We have a very prosperous school, considering all the conditions, at Mount Pleasant, Mich. There are in that school about 400 students. There are of Indian children in the State of Michigan who are entitled to school benefits about 1,400. This building is needed. They have absolutely nothing that can be used for this purpose. The department has recommended that it should be erected.

As is known, we have long winters in Michigan. A gymnasium, a physical exercising room, has come to be a very essential part of school work, and in this particular instance we need this building, because it was discovered by the committee that visited the Indian reservations of the country last year that where the schools are provided with such accommodations, where they have these things which are so near and so dear to the Indian heart, they are more attractive and the schools are better attended. I repeat that this is an essential part of the educational work practically of all schools, but especially of the Indian schools.

This school is being maintained in Mount Pleasant, where there are white schools, and these Indians are doing very favorable work in comparison with the white children, who have all the advantages which this bill seeks to provide in part for the Indian children.

It is true that the House left out this provision, but it left out many other provisions which were inserted in this bill by the Senate committee, and which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or his representative argued were absolutely essential to the proper conduct of these educational institutions.

We have but the one school in Michigan for fourteen hundred Indian children. There ought to be more than 400 in that school, but they can not all be accommodated in the buildings which now exist. We are making provision for some extension of this building for this gymnasium, which is a manual training school; properly it is more of a manual training school than what we understand the ordinary gymnasium to be; although it is a place for physical exercises, it is also a manual training building. In that building these Indians, it is believed, will get great advantages.

When the bill was pending last year before the committee I did not urge this amendment so strongly, because I did not know for myself what the conditions at Mount Pleasant were. I have since made myself personally acquainted with the conditions there, and I say, without hesitation, that this building is essential to the highest usefulness which can be obtained from that school.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the explanation of the Senator from Michigan is satisfactory, but I notice that since we eliminated the item on page 30 and refused to pay the honest debts of the United States to its citizens because of the fact that we were anxious to protect the funds of the Indians and practice economy, we have already appropriated in the next two pages $65,000 for gymnasium buildings and equipment. I suppose they are provided in contemplation of a possible war with Mexico, with the idea of getting ready.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Michigan if he knows how many gymnasiums are provided for in this bill? Are they only provided in a few places or are they generally provided where Indian schools are located?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not prepared to answer that question, but I think there is no building of this kind provided for in the bill that is not needed and that is not actually a necessity for the school work in connection with the training of the Indians. I think all the practical educators connected with the work, not simply the men who have charge of the institution at Mount Pleasant, but those at the Haskell Institute and at other places; in fact, every man who has investigated Indian school work has recognized that manual-training work is one of the absolute necessities of Indian education. I repeat that I can not tell how many such buildings there are provided in this bill, but I do not think there are very many, because very many of these institutions throughout the United States have already been equipped with gymnasiums and manual training buildings, as they are called.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I feel, in justice to the committee, as well as in justice to the Senate itself, which is entitled to and should have this information——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, does not the Senator feel, in making an explanation to the Senate, that there should be more than 12 Senators present? I suggest the absence of a quorum before the Senator proceeds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggestion of the absence of a quorum having been made, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Hughes	Page	Smoot
Brady	James	Perkins	Sterling
Bristow	Johnson	Pittman	Stone
Bryan	Jones	Ransdell	Sutherland
Burleigh	Kenyon	Reed	Swanson
Camden	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Catron	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lewis	Shafroth	Tillman
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Townsend
Crawford	Myers	Sherman	Vardaman
Cummins	Nelson	Shively	White
Dillingham	Norris	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Gore	Overman	Smith, Md.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 31.

The amendment was agreed to

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 7, on page 32, after line 2, to insert:

For pay of expenses of the Mackinac Agency, including pay of employees not otherwise provided for, $2,400; for purchase of site and construction of agency building, $1,200; in all, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 6, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Joseph Bradley, attorney in fact for the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River Bands of Chippewa Indians, Michigan, the balance of $30.65 in the Treasury and due these Indians under the provisions of article 2 of the treaty of August 2, 1855 (11 Stat. L., p. 633): Provided, however, That he shall before receiving the said sum execute as attorney in fact on behalf of these Indians a receipt in full therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," in section 8, at the top of page 33, to insert:

For the payment of high-school teachers at White Earth, Minn., for instruction open to the children of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used under rules to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000 of this sum may be used to continue the education of boys appointed under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," approved June 30, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 16, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$215,000" and insert "$173,500"; in line 25, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$20,000"; on page 34, line 2, after the words "Mille Lacs Indians," to insert "to whom allotments have not heretofore been made"; and in line 9, after the word "amended," to insert: "Provided further, That $8,500 of this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the removal of Chippewa Indian bodies from the burial grounds in the vicinity of Wisconsin Point, Wis., and their reinterment in an established cemetery in the city of Superior; said amount to cover markers for each grave or one monument, as may be found most suitable; and for the removal and suitable burial and marking of the graves of Indian bodies at Mille Lacs, Gull Lake, and Sandy Lake, Minn.," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $173,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians in manner and for purposes provided for in said act: Provided, That not to exceed $20,000 of this amount may be used in the purchase of lands for homeless non-removal Mille Lacs Indians, to whom allotments have not heretofore been made, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said lands to be held in trust and may be allotted to said Indians, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388, as amended): Provided further, That $8,500 of this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the removal of Chippewa Indian bodies from the burial grounds in the vicinity of Wisconsin Point, Wis., and their reinterment in an established cemetery in the city of Superior; said amount to cover markers for each grave or one monument, as may be found most suitable; and for the removal and suitable burial and marking of the graves of Indian bodies at Mille Lacs, Gull Lake, and Sandy Lake, Minn.

The amendment was agreed to.

Then the next amendment was, at the top of page 35, to insert:

That the building at Bena, Minn., is hereby granted to the village of Bena to be used as a schoolhouse, together with so much land as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, not exceeding 3 acres, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to convey said property by a deed: Provided, That the children of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall have access at all times to the school maintained therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 20, after the word "Minnesota," to insert "Provided, That any persons who are bona fide residing upon said land shall not be required to remove therefrom except upon terms approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Northern Minnesota Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church a patent in fee to lot 1, section 19, township 65 north, range 21 west of the fourth principal meridian, State of Minnesota: Provided, That any persons who are bona fide residing upon said land shall not be required to remove therefrom except upon terms approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 23, to insert:

That the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota now in the Treasury, to pay the expenses incurred by the delegations of Chippewa Indians who visited Washington, D. C., on business for said Chippewas and who were elected by the councils of March 25, 1911, and December 30, 1912, and also for the expenses of the duly elected delegates who attended the general council of the Chippewas of Minnesota, held at Cass Lake, Minn., on May 6, 7, 8, and 9, 1913. Said sum of $1,500 shall become immediately available upon the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 12, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve the assessments, together with maps showing right of way and definite location of proposed drainage ditches made under the laws of the State of Minnesota upon the tribal and allotted lands of the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, Minn., in Carlton County judicial ditch No. 1. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to pay the amount assessed against said allotted and tribal lands: Provided, That said assessment shall not exceed $1.50 per acre; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,080, to be immediately available, the said sum to be reimbursable, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, from any funds belonging to the individual allottees or their heirs or any funds belonging to the tribe subject to be prorated, which are now or may hereafter be under his charge. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve deeds for right of way from such said allottees or their heirs as may be necessary to permit the construction and maintenance of said drainage ditch upon the payment of adequate damages therefor. That in the event a patent in fee shall be issued for any Indian land within this district before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, the amount remaining unpaid shall become a first lien on the land, and the facts of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth thereon, and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against such land as herein provided, shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions hereof into full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 38, to insert:

That the sum of $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the general council of said tribe to be held at Bemidji, Minn., the second Tuesday in July, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 8, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$75,000," and in line 15, after the word "maintaining," to strike out "two hospitals, one to be located either on the Red Lake or Leech Lake Reservation and one to be located on the Fond du Lac Reservation," and insert "three hospitals, to be located on the Chippewa Reservation in Minnesota," so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and to use the same for the purpose of constructing, equipping, and maintaining three hospitals, to be located on the Chippewa Reservation in Minnesota, the sites to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, for the use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 21, to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to use for or advance to individual Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota entitled to participate in the permanent fund of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota out of such fund such sum or sums as he may deem necessary or advisable from time to time, except that such sums so advanced to any one of said Indians shall not in the aggregate exceed one-fourth of the amount which would now be coming to said Indian under a pro rata distribution of said permanent fund: Provided, That any money received hereunder by any member of said tribe, or used for his or her benefit, shall be deducted from the share of said member in the permanent fund of the said Chippewa Indians in Minnesota to which he or she would be entitled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 7, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the merchantable timber on the Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, subject to the following limitations: The term "merchantable timber" within the meaning of this act shall include white, Norway, and jack pine, spruce, tamarack, cedar, elm, oak, birch, poplar, and basswood, but shall not include maple and ash. On that part of said reservation comprising the peninsula between upper and lower Red Lake lying west of the present east line of said reservation and north of Battle River only the dead and down and not exceeding 25 per cent of the standing timber shall be sold, and each tree to be cut shall first be marked by a forest officer. On the balance of the reservation all the merchantable timber may be sold, except that on tracts where white and Norway pine and spruce may be growing not less than 10 per cent thereof shall be left for reforestation. All lumbering hereunder shall be according to approved forestry methods and such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Not more than 30,000,000 feet board measure in the aggregate shall be sold in any one year.

All saw timber shall be scaled on the bank by the Scribner decimal C-rule, and full scale shall be allowed for all timber that will saw out No. 3 lumber or better.

The following are the minimum stumpage prices at which any of the timber on said reservation may be sold: White pine, $10 per thousand feet; Norway pine, $8 per thousand feet; spruce, $5 per thousand feet; cordwood, 50 cents per cord; pulp wood, $1 per cord; poles 20 to 25 feet in length, 10 cents each; poles 25 to 30 feet in length, 15 cents each; poles 30 to 50 feet in length, 2 cents per running foot; fence posts 3 inches at top, 1 cent each; fence posts 4 inches at top, 2 cents each; and fence posts above 4 inches at the top, 3 cents each; ties of all kinds, 5 cents each for No. 2 and 8 cents each for No. 1; piling, 3 cents per running foot. All ties, posts, and piling sold shall be counted and graded, and pulp wood and bolt wood shall be measured up to the standard cord.

The proceeds from such sales shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians owning the timber, and thereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, used for the benefit of the Indians of the said Red Lake Reservation, in such manner as he may direct.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, as I understand, the parties who are asking for the legislation contained in the amendment beginning on page 40, line 8, and going down to and including line 4 on page 42, are willing that it shall go out on a point of order, and I make that point.

Mr. ASHURST. Do I understand that the Senator from Vermont makes a point of order against that amendment?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAPP. There is, of course, no question but that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. Every Senator is bound to confess that the point of order is well taken. There is no opposition to it.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the point of order being sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ASHURST. In order that I may not be under a misapprehension, the point of order, of course, does not run against, and is not intended to apply to, lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, on page 42?

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. PAGE. No point of order was raised as to those lines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont state the ground of his point of order, so that the RECORD may show it?

Mr. PAGE. It is new legislation. I would not have raised the point of order but for the fact that the two Senators from Minnesota are willing that the amendment shall go out upon a point of order, and so I have raised it. There is no question of its being obnoxious to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 42, after line 4, to insert:

No appropriation of the tribal funds of Indians in Minnesota in excess of $5,000 shall be available until such expenditure has been duly approved by the tribe of Indians whose funds are to be expended, by a majority vote, cast in a regular election, and the authenticated result thereof certified to the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, and for the convenience of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], I ask unanimous consent that the items relating to Oklahoma be next considered. The Senator from Oklahoma is compelled to leave the city in a short time, and is anxious that these items shall be considered before he has to go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, the request of the Senator from Arkansas will be granted. The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. CLAPP. Before we proceed with that part of the bill, Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment beginning with line 5 and ending with line 10, inclusive, on page 42, was adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 8 on page 57.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Oklahoma," in section 16, page 58, line 22, after "$7,000," to strike out "in all, $93,250" and insert "for new buildings, $18,000; in all, $111,250," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 500 Indian pupils at the Indian School at Chilocco, Okla., including pay of superintendent, $86,250; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; for new buildings, $18,000; in all, $111,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 23, to insert:

For the purpose of acquiring sites for school buildings on restricted Indian lands under the jurisdiction of the Quapaw Agency, Okla., the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to remove the restrictions as to alienation from not to exceed 5 acres of any Indian allotment, original or inherited, held under the jurisdiction of said Quapaw Agency, and to permit the sale thereof under such terms and conditions as he may deem advisable, whenever necessary to enable the trustees of a school district to acquire a site for a school building: Provided, That where the allotment is held under a trust patent he may cause a patent in fee for the purchased tract to be issued to the trustees of the school board: Provided further, That when said land is no longer needed for school purposes it shall revert to the allottee to whom it belonged, or his heirs, and the restrictions as to alienation shall again apply, which condition shall be incorporated in the patent in fee when issued for such lands as are held under trust patents.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he thinks the provisions of this section can be carried out without the consent of the Indian allottee?

Mr. OWEN. No; I think the consent of the Indian will have to be obtained always.

Mr. PAGE. There is no proviso to that effect in the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. It removes the restriction as to alienation. Unless the Indian gives his consent, however, of course it could not be alienated. In line 2, page 59, it says "to remove the restrictions." That only permits the Indian to alienate; it does not alienate the lands without his consent. His consent, of course, is required.

On page 59, line 2, the Senator will see the words "to remove the restrictions." That only means that the restriction of the present law, which makes it impossible for the transfer to be made, would be removed in the Secretary's discretion; but, of course, the Indian would have to give his deed for the land in order to dispose of it.

Mr. PAGE. As I looked over the amendment it seemed to me that the matter was left to the agency to decide about that, and that it made no provision for the consent of the Indian allottee.

Mr. OWEN. It only removes the restriction; that is all. The Senator will see the words to which I refer on page 59, line 2.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, supplementing what the Senator from Oklahoma has said, the amendment merely enables the Indian to convey these lands that are desired for school sites where the owner is under restriction. It does not, of course, compel him to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 60, after line 2, to insert:

For pay of employees at the Sac and Fox Agency, Okla., not otherwise provided for, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 4, to insert:

For pay of employees at the Seneca Agency not otherwise provided for, $1,500.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I can not understand why the pay of employees at some agencies is especially provided for here. On page 13, line 8, we make a general provision in which we say:

For transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $125,000.

Then we insert here a specific appropriation of $1,500 over and above that. I should like to know why we destroy the symmetry of the bill by doing that.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that yesterday the same question arose; and I then adverted to page 14 of the bill, I think, which contains a provision that wherever a specific appropriation is made the general appropriation for civilization and support of the Indians shall not obtain. I think the Senator will remember that provision, which will be found on page 14 of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. But the point I want to ascertain is why it is necessary to introduce at this point in the bill a measure to provide for paying the employees of a certain agency; when on page 13 we appropriate a lump sum of $125,000 for this very purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator was present during the hearings held by the committee, and I think took part in that discussion. I shall be very glad, if he will pardon me a moment, to refresh his memory on this point.

Mr. PAGE. I do not care to take the time of the Senate to discuss the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is entitled to the information.

Mr. PAGE. It seems to me, however, that when we have a lump sum it is not a happy feature of the bill to introduce a special feature of this kind.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator adverts to the provision on page 60 which reads as follows:

For pay of employees at the Sac and Fox Agency, Okla., not otherwise provided for, $2,060.

Mr. PAGE. No; I referred to lines 5 and 6.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; and lines 5 and 6:

For pay of employees at the Seneca Agency not otherwise provided for, $1,500.

The amount estimated in each instance is as set out in the bill. Hence we begin the discussion by disclosing that the Interior Department has requested this in its Book of Estimates. The same amount was appropriated in the last bill, and there is an unexpended balance of $2.

The Indian population is 657. The present appropriation is made to cover the salaries of three employees, but it has been found necessary to employ temporary help from time to time to keep the work up to date. The increase will be used to provide such additional help as is required and for increases in the remuneration of faithful and efficient employees.

Such salaries as the appropriations heretofore allowed admit of are not sufficient to enable us—to retain efficient employees.

This reservation—

Speaking of the Sac and Fox—

This reservation was created by treaty, and of the area within the former reservation 87,683 acres were allotted to 548 Indians. The residue was opened to settlement by proclamation of September 18, 1891, except about 800 acres, which were reserved for school and agency purposes. There are no remaining tribal lands on this reservation.

Mr. PAGE. I do not seem to make myself understood by the chairman. The point is that we make a special provision for employees at one agency, whereas on page 13, from line 3 to line 13, we make a general provision that covers all the agencies, as I understand it. Why should we make a special provision of $1,500 for this particular agency?

Mr. ASHURST. I will advert to the House hearings on the items for the pay of Seneca Indians in Oklahoma:

This is $1,000 more than the amount allowed for the fiscal year 1914. The appropriation is being used to pay salaries of two clerks, while an additional employee is being paid a salary of $840 per annum from the appropriation for general expenses of the bureau, this position being essential to the proper handling of the affairs of the Indians.

I ask the especial attention of the Senator from Vermont to this point:

The additional amount requested is for the purpose of relieving the general appropriation and for making small, well-deserved promotions in the salaries of other employees.

Indian population: Seneca, 407; Eastern Shawnee, 129; Ottawa, 274; Peoria-Miami, 355; Wyandot, 449; total, 1,614.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I dislike to take the time of the Senate in discussing the introduction of this particular item here. I think it is wrong. I think it ought to go in the general clause, but I will make no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 13, to strike out:

That the fourteenth paragraph of section 18 of the Indian appropriation act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., pp. 533 and 534), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to cause to be delivered to the persons entitled thereto, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, checks payable to the order of individual Indians who are members of the Band of Mexican Kickapoo Indians residing in the Republic of Mexico, covering individual Indian moneys now on deposit to the credit of such Indians, or in any manner under the control of the superintendent of the Shawnee Indian School and other officers of the Interior Department or which may hereafter be deposited with or come under the control of the Department of the Interior or its representatives, except such moneys as may belong to members of said band who are under 18 years of age and the feeble-minded Indian known as Paw-kaw-kah, in which cases such moneys shall be paid to the proper custodians of the members of said band who are under 18 years of age, and the said Paw-kaw-kah."

And to insert:

That part of the act of Congress approved June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 363), reading as follows: "All restrictions as to sale and encumbrance of all lands, inherited and otherwise, of all adult Kickapoo Indians, and of all Shawnee, Delaware, Caddo, and Wichita Indians who have heretofore been or are now known as Indians of said tribes, affiliating with said Kickapoo Indians now or hereafter nonresident in the United States, who have been alloted land in Oklahoma or Indian Territory are hereby removed: Provided, That any such Indian allottee who is a nonresident of the United States may lease his allotment without restriction for a period not exceeding five years: Provided further, That the parent or the person next of kin having the care and custody of a minor allottee may lease the allotment of said minor as herein provided, except that no such lease shall extend beyond the minority of said allottee," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the trust period on the lands allotted to said Indians now held in trust is hereby extended for 10 years from the date of the expiration of the present trust period on said lands, and the further sale of any of the lands allotted to or inherited by the Mexican Kickapoo Indians shall not be permitted without specific authority of Congress.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. Would a point of order to the amendment be in order if it did not go to the entire amendment. I wanted to make a point of order on the amendment down to and including the word "repealed," in line 4, on page 62, as the balance is, I believe, a good provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will be good enough to state the proposition again, so that the Chair may understand it.

Mr. KENYON. I will state the point of order I make. I make the point of order on the amendment commencing at line 12, page 61, down to and including the word "repealed." in line 4, page 62. I make the point of order that it is new legislation attached to an appropriation bill. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the entire amendment proceeds to line 10, on page 62. The question I suggest is whether the point of order may be made to a part of the amendment, or must it be made to all the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is separable. It is distinct, so that it can be separated for a vote upon request. The Chair would hold that that could be made.

Mr. ASHURST. I regret that the distinguished Senator from Iowa should make a point of order against the committee amendment on page 61, down to line 11 on page 62.

Mr. KENYON. No; it is to and including the word "repealed" on line 4.

Mr. ASHURST. I will merely take time enough to say that this item alone was the subject of nearly two weeks' discussion by the committee. Tomes of testimony were taken. If the distinguished Senator from Iowa understood how carefully the committee tried to guard the rights of the Indians and how essential this legislation is to protect the Indians, the Senator would be the last one to think of making a point of order upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. KENYON. I will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not subject to debate except at the request of the Chair, but the Chair will be glad to hear his colleague.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not wish to speak on the point of order. I wish to address the Senate for just a moment on the merits.

Mr. KENYON. I made the suggestion for another Senator who desires to raise the question. If the amendment can be passed until a later stage in the consideration of the bill, we can then return to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A request of that kind will be submitted to the Senate. The Senator from Iowa asks that this amendment may be passed over for the present. Unless there is objection, such will be the order. The Chair hears none. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 18, to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for water rights for the irrigation of 600 acres of land, more or less, in the Fort Sill Indian School Reservation in the State of Oklahoma, within the proposed Lawton reclamation project, for the irrigation of not to exceed 2,500 acres of Indian and private lands, upon the same terms and conditions as those prescribed for the acquisition of water rights for other lands to be irrigated by said project: Provided, That operation and maintenance charges shall not be assessed against said Indian land prior to completion of the lateral system so as to provide for actual delivery of water thereto, and the project shall include lateral construction for the Indian lands down to each legal subdivision thereof equal in area to the size of the farm unit for lands in private ownership within said project.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there ought to be some explanation of this amendment, particularly the part of the amendment beginning in line 23, following the word "Oklahoma," wherein it says:

Within the proposed Lawton reclamation project, for the irrigation of not to exceed 2,500 acres of Indian and private lands.

Mr. ASHURST. I will refer to the letter of the department as soon as I have it at hand, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will notice that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is "authorized to contract for water rights for the irrigation of 600 acres of land, more or less." That is found at the beginning, in lines 20 and 21, on page 62.

Mr. ASHURST. The words "more or less" are well defined in law. That would be within a reasonable limitation of 600 acres; but there is no objection to striking out the words "more or less."

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator interrupted me or I would have gone on and told him what the point is. After the word "Oklahoma," in line 22, we find the words:

Within the proposed Lawton reclamation project for the irrigation of not to exceed 2,500 acres of Indian and private lands.

I should like——

Mr. OWEN. That might go out without any objection, I should think.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Arizona has the letter he spoke of, I should like to have it read, because I can not see the connection between the two.

Mr. OWEN. Those words might as well go out.

Mr. ASHURST. While there would be no objection to their going out, I will say that they are very proper here. The letter will be obtained at the earliest possible moment, and when that letter is read the Senator will perceive, I think, that it is a very proper amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see why we should authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to contract for water rights for the irrigation of 600 acres of land in this reclamation project and then provide for the irrigation of not to exceed 2,500 acres of Indian and private lands. What right have we to say how many acres the project shall water or what the area shall be? I suppose that has already been determined. But I shall wait until the Senator has the letter.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the amendment be passed over until I get the letter.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the item will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 9, to insert:

For the purchase of certain articles of furniture originally bought from personal funds by Mr. Gabe Parker while superintendent of the Armstrong Academy, Oklahoma, and since used by that school, $286, to be paid for from Choctaw funds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Women's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church in America, the sum of $10,000 for mission and school buildings built by them on the Fort Sill Military Reserve, Okla., for the use of the Apache Indians and rendered useless on account of the removal of said Indians to the Mescalero Indian Reservation in New Mexico.

Mr. SMOOT. There may be some good reason for an amendment of this kind to an appropriation bill, but I do not understand it. If there is any claim against the Government, it seems to me it ought to be made in the shape of a claim and go before the Claims Committee and be passed upon; and if there is any justice in the claim, we ought to pay it; but to bring in on an appropriation bill here a provision of this kind, it seems to me, is out of place. I say that with due deference to the judgment of the committee. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if there is any reason why this personal claim should be inserted in the appropriation bill. The Senator knows we have a rule against items of this kind.

Mr. ASHURST. I will advert to page 548, volume 2, of the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs:

RELIEF OF THE WOMAN'S BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS, REFORMED CHURCH OF AMERICA.

* * * * * * *

Statement of Mr. Meritt, assistant commissioner:

Mr. MERITT. We have another item that might well go in this bill. It was introduced in the House by Representative FERRIS and has received the favorable recommendation of the department. It is a bill for the relief of the Woman's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church, in America. The item is as follows:

Then the item was read.

The department submitted the following report in regard to this matter. This is a department letter, which is dated March 18, 1914——

Senator CLAPP. I do not think it is necessary to read that to the committee. I move that the item be allowed.

It seemed to the committee, without further reading, that it was a just and proper claim. As to the propriety of putting it on this bill Senators may have a difference of opinion. It seemed to the committee just and proper and no objection was offered. It was discussed at some length.

I will read further from the statement of the assistant commissioner:

Mr. MERITT. I might say that this church organization has been doing missionary work among the Fort Sill Indians for a number of years. They have constructed certain buildings there, and because of the fact that the Indians have been removed from the reservation those buildings are no longer of any use to this mission. This Fort Sill property has been turned over to the War Department. This church wishes to reinvest the money derived from these mission buildings for mission-work purposes at Mescalero Reservation, N. Mex.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Gladly, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. There is a good deal of force in what the Senator says, but the committee regarded it somewhat in the light of claims where reservations are abandoned and eliminated as reservations and different denominations have put buildings upon the ground. We usually provide in the Indian appropriation bill for granting a small amount of land—40 or 80 acres, it may be—to the particular denomination that put the building there.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, strictly speaking, probably all such matters ought to go to the Committee on Claims, but this was so nearly analogous to that class of cases that the committee having all the information before it and the commissioner appearing before the committee, we thought that perhaps there would be no serious objection to dealing with it in the bill instead of sending it to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I believe the Senator will admit that this is rather a dangerous precedent to set. If we are going to pay for every church building on every reservation that may be abandoned hereafter, well and good; we could pay for this; but it does seem to me that if we pass this item and compel the Government to pay $10,000 for this school building it will be looked upon in the future as a precedent and will always be pointed to as a thing that the Government should do.

Mr. CLAPP. I was not directing my remarks so much to the wisdom of paying for the property; I was, rather, justifying the action of the committee in dealing with it instead of sending it to the Committee on Claims, it being, although the reverse of the operation, somewhat in the nature of recognizing a certain claim where they put buildings on reservations and granted them a small quantity of land with it. That goes rather to the merits of the case. Of course, it is for the Senate to decide the question.

Mr. SMOOT. If this item was not for a church, I would not hesitate a minute to make a point of order against it. It is not proper and it is not right to put a claim against the Government on an appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator pardon me for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. Of course the Senator raises no question about the merits of it, but only as to its place on this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I really do not know whether there is merit in it or not.

Mr. OWEN. It has been reported on favorably by the department and has that justification. The facts are that after this missionary board established these buildings upon an Indian reservation the Government, without consulting them, moved the Indians away. It was done after these people had put the buildings there for missionary purposes among the Indians. These women desire to transfer the buildings to the Mescalero Agency, where the Indians have been sent by the department. The Government has simply removed the people who were being served by this missionary society, and since it deals with an Indian reservation the Commissioner of Indian Affairs took it up with the Committee on Indian Affairs for that reason. That is all there is about it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are a number of cases—I remember we had them several times in the Committee on Claims—where private citizens went on military reservations and put up a building for a store, a photograph gallery, or something of that kind, and did it largely at their own risk, and afterwards the Government abandoned the fort. Unless the Government in some way appropriated that property and used the material or derived some benefit from it by appropriation, I know we declined to grant the claimant anything for his property.

Mr. OWEN. I hope the Senator——

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will just let me finish the thought, it seems to me a little remarkable. Even with a church they are sometimes enthusiastic and a little visionary, and they will establish schools and different things where they have not used very good judgment about it, and sometimes commit serious errors in expending more money than they ought to spend for buildings, making them too expensive and too large. If when some accidental change occurs the Government is to take over the property and pay for it, where it has had no responsibility and made no use of it, and does not have any use for it, I think it is going too far, whether it is church property or some other property. It does not look to me as being at all a proper use to make of the Government funds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make a point of order?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Utah has the floor. I should be inclined to do so unless he makes the point.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I look forward to the time when these Indian reservations will all be abandoned; and if we undertake now to pay $10,000 for a church that was established upon this particular reservation——

Mr. OWEN. It is a school.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, the principle is the same. If we undertake to pay $10,000 for a school that has been established on this Indian reservation because of the fact that it has been abandoned, it will follow, as day follows night——

Mr. OWEN. I do not think the Senator can say it was abandoned when the Government moved the Indians from the place where those people had erected a school. They did not abandon it; the Government took the Indians away.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, Mr. President; but did the Government ask them to come there and establish the school?

Mr. OWEN. The Government has always invited missionaries to undertake to teach civilization and Christianity to the Indians.

Mr. SMOOT. And very properly, too.

Mr. OWEN. I do not think they ought to be put on a level with those who are there conducting stores for profit. They are conducting it without any profit, doing it purely for an altruistic purpose. It is their purpose and desire to help the Indians, and they receive no recompense for it. Because it dealt with an Indian reservation it was stated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the committee that it should be placed in this bill, which I think is orderly enough.

Mr. SMOOT. I want also to state, as has been so well stated by the Senator from South Dakota, that in the Claims Committee there have been dozens of claims made for buildings that have been established upon military reservations, and the committee has refused at all times to report one of those bills. They have had not only stores but different buildings on military reservations, some for religious purposes, and the Claims Committee of the Senate and also of the House has universally decided not to pay such claims.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senate should also be in possession of this information. It will be observed from the reading of the amendment, on line 18, page 63, that it is not only a church but school buildings. The War Department now has charge and possession of these buildings, and this item, as the hearings disclosed, has not only been approved by the Interior Department, but by the War Department as well. That was, of course, persuasive on the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I have noticed wherever there has been a reservation abandoned in any part of the country it will not be more than one or two years before there has been a bill introduced in Congress giving the buildings upon the reservation for some State purpose, and no objection has ever been made. The Government of the United States has willingly given them for State purposes. The Government, I take it for granted, will never receive any benefit from these buildings. I do not think the Government will ever get a cent out of them, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. President, I know the item should not be here, but, as I stated, I am not going now to make a point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah declines to make a point of order. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask a question about it. Where will the title to these buildings rest after we make this appropriation? Is it intended that the title shall vest in the Government of the United States?

Mr. ASHURST. In the Government of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Government of the United States own the land upon which these buildings were constructed?

Mr. ASHURST. The buildings are upon a military reservation belonging to the United States of America.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The church or the mission had no title whatever to the land?

Mr. OWEN. No.

Mr. ASHURST. That is my understanding.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Should there not be some provision in the amendment providing that the title of the buildings should pass?

Mr. ASHURST. That would be a very salutary provision, as far as I can see.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They were put there under the license of the Government, I take it. This is simply an appropriation, and there is no transfer of title apparently. I simply suggest that to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a good suggestion, and will be given attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection to the amendment, it will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if this amount of $10,000 comes out of the Indian fund or out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a gratuity appropriation. It comes out of the Treasury of the United States.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I wish to recur to the Fort Sill matter, which begins on line 19, page 62. Referring to that item, I have now a few data submitted by the Indian Bureau, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

LAWTON PROJECT,
Fort Sill, May 29, 1914.

The proposed legislation is intended to authorize the inclusion of the lands of the Indian school reserve in the Lawton project.

On April 13, 1914, the chief engineer addressed a report to the commissioner, in which he considers the project from the points of engineering feasibility, water supply, needs of irrigation, requirements of Indian lands, legal condition, and human element.

The city of Lawton constructed a dam on Medicine Bluff Creek for the purpose of supplying water for domestic, manufacturing, and other city purposes. This dam lies about 12 miles from the city and has a present capacity of about 14,000 acre-feet. This provides considerably more water than is required by the city and enough to irrigate from 2,500 to 3,000 acres. About 600 acres of Indian land are so located as to be irrigable from the proposed system, and the legislation proposed authorizes the commissioner to contract for water rights for this amount; operation and maintenance charges are not to be assessed against Indian lands prior to completion of the lateral system.

The proposition is believed to be a favorable one, and was favorably reported to the Secretary under date of April 29, 1914, and to Senator ASHURST on the same date.

In view of the fact that no payments are to be required of landowners for construction of the reservoir, in which storage capacity for this project has been donated by the city of Lawton, and that the payments for the diversion and distribution system will not be due until after completion thereof and promulgation of the customary public notices, no present appropriation is contemplated. The reports indicate the feasibility of the project, provided the Indian lands may be included and bear their proportionate share of the cost. It is not desired that any of the Indian lands be disposed of, but that they be reserved for the use and benefit of the Indian school and whatever other enterprises may be on the reservation.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator for the information, and based upon that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator request that that item be taken up at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the committee requested it.

Mr. ASHURST. I made that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon the information contained in the letter, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the following words in lines 23, 24, and 25, on page 62:

For the irrigation of not to exceed 2,500 acres of Indian and private lands.

So that it would read:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for water rights for the irrigation of 600 acres of land, more or less, in the Fort Sill Indian School reservation in the State of Oklahoma, within the proposed Lawton reclamation project, upon the same terms and conditions as those prescribed for the acquisition of water rights for other lands to be irrigated by said project.

Mr. OWEN. That is all right.

Mr. ASHURST. So far as I have authority to do it, the committee approves of the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 22, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $16,500 from Chickasaw tribal funds for the purchase of the property known as Hargrove College or Ardmore College, situated at Ardmore, Okla., to be reserved and used as a boarding school for the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the chairman of the committee if there is any report on that proposition? I should like to hear what has been said in regard to it.

Mr. ASHURST. I refer to page 550, volume 2, of the hearings before the Senate committee, under the head of "Hargrove or Ardmore College, Oklahoma," where this occurs:

Mr. MERITT. The commissioner asked me to request that this item be incorporated in the bill:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $16,500 from the Cherokee tribal funds for the purchase of the property known as Hargrove College or Ardmore College, situated at Ardmore, Okla., to be reserved and used as a boarding school for the Chickasaw Nation."

I have the following justification for this item:

"Accompanying this is a proposed item authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to expend the sum of $16,500 of Chickasaw tribal funds for the purchase of the Hargrove College property at Ardmore, Okla. It is intended to continue at this place the tribal school heretofore known as Bloomfield Seminary. Bloomfield Seminary has been at Hendrix, situated upon a tract of land reserved for school purposes by act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641). Recently the main building at Bloomfield was destroyed by fire. Insurance thereon will probably be collected to the amount of approximately $15,000.

"The matter of the purchase of the Hargrove property, to be used in lieu of the old property, has been carefully investigated and is a very desirable proposition, both financially and for other reasons. The buildings are substantial and can be put in first-class condition by the expenditure of a small amount for plumbing and incidental repairs. If this purchase can be consummated, the Bloomfield property will be sold and the proceeds deposited to the credit of the tribes. It will cost the service at least $16,500 to replace the main building at Bloomfield if it be compelled to continue the school there."

The assistant commissioner continues:

The Bloomfield buildings were recently destroyed by fire, as stated in the justification, and the commissioner would like to have this item incorporated in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 64, after line 3, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Mrs. Robert Leo Bowman, widow of Robert Leo Bowman, late deputy special officer for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians, who was killed while in the performance of his duty.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I do not care to be constantly interfering with these items, but there is a matter which, it seems to me, ought to go in the list with that class of employees' claims which are provided for by statute under which the Committee on Claims is acting very frequently, upon which it makes reports to the Senate, and upon which appropriations are based, under the statute which provides for compensation for personal injuries and deaths in cases of employees, regulated by the salary received. I should like to know why a claim for a death loss is put in this bill without being referred to the regular Committee on Claims, which entirely ignores the provisions of that statute and comes in here without any action such as usually is taken in these cases? It is not fair for a claim to come before the Committee on Claims and a widow to receive on account of the death of her husband one year's salary which her husband was earning, which may have been only $1,200 a year, under that statute, and then put a claim in here for $5,000 for the death of a special deputy. I do not know how long he was special deputy; I do not know what salary or compensation he got or who employed him or what the particular nature of his service was, and yet in this appropriation bill is a lump sum of $5,000 to his widow. I should like to have some information in regard to the claim and as to the reason for putting claims of this kind into a general Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I can well appreciate the desire of the Senator from South Dakota to keep the Indian appropriation bill and all other appropriation bills free from claims. That is proper; but I will say that this belongs to a distinct class of claims, it occupies a peculiar relation.

Here is a claim which grows out of these facts: The man was murdered while in the actual discharge of his duty in enforcing the laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to the Indians. He was shot and seriously and mortally injured. He lingered some time, and then died. In view of the fact that he was in the actual discharge of his duties with respect to the laws prohibiting traffic in intoxicating liquor among the Indians, the committee was of the opinion that it was a just and proper claim, and that the Committee on Indian Affairs, while it attempted in every possible way to prevent the placing of claims on the bill, felt that this occupied a peculiar position, as I said before, and was entitled to be put on the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD and Mr. WHITE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think in every case where the Committee on Claims has recognized a personal-injury claim, a claim for damages growing out of the death of an employee, the accident or the damage must have occurred while the person was engaged in the line of duty at the time it occurred. This is no exception in that respect; such claims are all of that character. In those cases we follow a certain rule, which might give the widow of a deceased employee only one-fifth of what is proposed to be paid here to the widow of this man. It is not fair. If we are going to depart from that rule in one case, we ought to abandon it entirely, and let each case go it alone. How much compensation was this man getting?

Mr. ASHURST. He was getting $100 per month.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well. Then his salary amounted to $1,200 a year. If his death had occurred down here in the gun factory or had happened to an operative on the Isthmus of Panama or in one of the Government buildings, the widow would get $1,200. Here is this man who was engaged in enforcing the laws in the liquor traffic among the Indians, and it is proposed to give his widow a lump sum of $5,000. It is not fair to put an item like that into this bill granting $5,000 in this case, and to follow the statute in other cases.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota pardon an interruption?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The fact that led the committee to give this consideration to this matter was that where a man is injured through the carelessness of others in the breaking of machinery, in explosions and such accidents, there may possibly be an element of negligence on his part, and always the negligence of some one which results in the accident which leads to the killing. In this case it was not negligence, but it was the overt, positive, premeditated act of those against whom he was trying to enforce the law. So there could be no possible question of his negligence.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me there, then there was absolutely no element of negligence so far as the Government is chargeable with it.

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all. It is upon the same principle that we make contributions to men who lose their lives in the service of the country; of course, upon a broader field, perhaps a more patriotic field; but there is that difference between a case where a man is killed by those who are resisting the enforcement of the law and where a man is killed by accident that is attributable, perhaps, in some cases in a greater or less degree to the negligence of some one.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Just one moment more, if I am not trespassing on the Senator's good nature——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not at all.

Mr. CLAPP. This grew out of the performance of his duty by this man in the Indian Service, in a matter that was peculiarly within the purview of the Indian Office, with which, of course, primarily the Committee on Indian Affairs deals. The committee felt that they might put that item upon the bill, although, of course, ordinary claims, unless they be claims against the Indian funds, should go to the Committee on Claims. If the Senator feels that this is too much, I hope, instead of making a point of order against the amendment, he will seek to have the amendment modified to meet his views, for the Senator knows that it is just about useless to talk of this woman getting anything at all unless she gets it on this bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. WHITE. I simply want to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHITE. Does this claim differ from the case of any other marshal or deputy marshal who was killed in the enforcement of the law?

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all, except, perhaps, in the circumstances of the killing. The service was the same. He was there enforcing the law.

Mr. WHITE. Then, would not this be showing favoritism to the widow of this officer who lost his life in the discharge of his duty as against the compensation which we allow to the widows of other officers who have lost their lives in the discharge of their duties?

Mr. CLAPP. Since I have been in the Senate, I think in every instance where a man has been killed in the discharge of his duty in enforcing the laws in the Indian country, we have made provision for his widow and children on Indian appropriation bills, and we have usually fixed the sum at $5,000.

The Committee on Claims, of which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] was formerly chairman, established a rule or perhaps secured the enactment of a statute——

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is a statute.

Mr. CLAPP. That widows shall only receive the equivalent of one year's wages or salary, whichever you may call it, of their husbands. This would not be an unusual thing, so far as making some reparation is concerned. The only question is, first, whether the item should be in the Indian appropriation bill, and, secondly, as to the amount that should be appropriated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, my feeling about this is simply one of being somewhere near fair in the treatment of all claimants. The Government has never undertaken to put itself in the position of the ordinary employer of labor, liable for negligence, as a railroad company is liable for negligence, in the case of its employees. It would open a pretty wide door if the Government should undertake to assume a liability like that, and the Government has never done so. The States have never done so; counties heve never done so; and there is not a rule of law anywhere that fixes a liability upon sovereignty for damages of that character.

The attitude of the Government has been fixed by statute, and since that statute was passed claims are settled under it without coming to Congress at all. Claims for damages occurring before that act was passed have come to Congress, been referred to the Committee on Claims, been investigated, reported upon, and appropriations made allowing relief, exactly the same as if they had occurred subsequent to the enactment of that statute. Hundreds of cases from the Isthmus of Panama, involving engineers, brakemen, and trainmen employed in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, where accidents occurred before the enactment of the statute, have been paid by appropriations upon the same basis as they would have been adjusted had they occurred after the enactment of that statute. Such cases have come from every direction.

In this case, if this man was getting $1,200 a year, under that statute his widow would get $1,200; and over and over again——

Mr. CLAPP. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I am not familiar with that statute, but, as I understand, under that statute the claimants do not have to ask Congress or any court for relief.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The heads of the departments can adjust the claims.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and consequently a general, broad limitation was put in the statute; but that does not apply to Congress in dealing with individual cases. I can understand that if Congress is going to issue a license ad libitum, under certain rules of course, for the settlement of claims for injury or death, leaving nothing for Congress to do, but simply turning the case over to the departments, it might very well establish a lower level of compensation for damages than it would in individual cases.

Mr. President, I never heard of this man. We are taking a good deal of time in what may seem a small matter; yet it is a vital matter to the widow, of course, and I simply desire to ask the Senator, in case he can not agree to let the amendment go as it has been reported, instead of making a point of order against it to seek to amend the amendment by providing an amount that he thinks is fair and proper.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator that I appreciate as keenly as anyone can—because of the opportunity I have had to witness hardships in similar cases—the cruelty of long delay. Where dependent members of a family have a claim of this character, if they are to get relief at all, they ought to be afforded prompt relief; and I have no feeling or desire to do anything here that will delay giving this woman some relief, but I do insist that if we are going to make exceptions, as we are proposing to do in this case by paying one widow for the loss of her husband $5,000, we ought to repeal the statute and get away from the practice of paying other poor women with dependent children, where the head of the family was receiving $100 a month or $600 a year of $1,500 a year, a sum equal simply to one year's compensation. We have treated that statute as binding, and we have been following it; and now here comes a woman, whose husband lost his life through absolutely no negligence on the part of the Government, who was in the same position as a deputy marshal who might, in undertaking to make an arrest, be shot down. If we are going to take cases of this kind and appropriate $5,000 in a lump sum to the widow we are being outrageously unfair to other claimants, and on that account I protest against the allowance of this sum in this way in this bill. I do not like to cut it out absolutely.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to suggest to the Senator that the particular kind of service in which this man was engaged is extrahazardous. A good many men have been killed in the service while engaged in suppressing the liquor traffic on Indian reservations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator that, while that is true, every deputy marshal and every marshal and every engineer who is riding in his cab is also taking his life in his hands. This man was not any better than they are, and we pay their widows, in case they are killed, one year's compensation, but propose to give this widow $5,000.

Mr. OWEN. I was only making that suggestion to the Senator to indicate the reasonableness of giving some inducement to men to render that service which is an extrahazardous service.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am going to do this—and I am not going to do it with this particular case in view, but I am going to do it in order to emphasize the fact that we are outrageously unfair in these cases. I am going to make a point of order against the amendment unless the amount is cut down to $2,000.

Mr. OWEN. Then I will move that it be cut down to $2,000.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the Senator from South Dakota, instead of putting it in the alternative, move, first, to amend by striking out $5,000 and inserting $2,000, and if it is not amended the point of order can be made.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In one way I do not like to do that.

Mr. OWEN. Then I will make the motion.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$2,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment reported by the committee on page 64, line 6, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$2,000."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not going to oppose this amendment; I merely want to emphasize what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] has said with reference to the enforcement of the rule laid down by the law and which the Committee on Claims has been following. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] says that Congress has granted carte blanche to settle such claims, and that is true; but when claimants come to the committee the committee holds them to that law and does not grant them any other relief. For instance, I have the cases of two men who were killed at the navy yard at Bremerton, Wash. According to the report of the department, the accident by which they lost their lives was the result of the negligence of the Government. The widows of those men each got a year's pay. They then came to the committee, but the committee said, "We will not allow them anything at all."

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an inquiry?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I had supposed that the statute simply applied where a case was adjusted by a department. In such case, as a general shield of protection, we fixed the amount at a year's salary; but if you give the widow of a man who was killed under circumstances where she would be entitled to recover greater damages if the action were against private parties only $1,200, or a year's salary, you establish a lower rate of recovery than any State of this Union.

Mr. JONES. I think that is right; that is what the committee does, and that is what Congress is doing all the time. The claims of these parties were rejected. I think the rule established, taking it as a hard and fast rule, is unfair and unjust. We ought to treat these cases in Congress, as nearly as we can, alike. I do not think that $2,000 is anything too much in this case; and yet I think that where a man loses his life by the negligence of the Government his widow is more entitled to a larger compensation from the Government than is the widow in this case, because this man assumed the risk of his employment, and that, no doubt, was taken into consideration when his salary was fixed. There was no negligence on the part of the Government, and he knew he was likely to engender hatred and ill will and to suffer in consequence. Here are two cases that I have just mentioned where, according to the report of the Navy Department, the men lost their lives through the negligence of the Government itself and through no negligence on their part. One of them, I think, was getting $2.50 a day; and yet all the committee says is, "This widow having gotten the amount allowed her by the statute, we can allow her nothing more." As the Senator from South Dakota says, I do think Congress ought to use more discrimination in these matters and try to treat these people as nearly alike as possible.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, claims of this character, which are constantly passing, emphasize the necessity of having a general compensation law. The Government of the United States ought to pay its employees who are injured and pay the dependents of those who are killed in its service precisely the same as various State governments compel private employers to pay. The difficulty with passing items of this kind is that they beget legislation by emotion instead of in accordance with any sort of a fixed rule. I remember a short time ago we had a claim up here of some poor girl who had sustained an injury, and the committee brought in a bill appropriating some $3,500 or $4,000, as I recall, but the emotions of Senators were stirred up by the appeals made on the floor and the amount was increased to six or seven thousand dollars.

Then an emotional appeal was made in the other House in that case, and the amount was increased still more—I have forgotten the final amount which was appropriated. I think that we ought not to make appropriations of this character at all. I think we ought to pass a general law, under which whenever an injury is sustained or whenever an employee is killed a certain definite sum shall be paid, so that we shall not be paying $1,200 in one case, $5,000 in another case, and $10,000 in another case. Under the law to which the Senator calls attention, as I understand, this widow would receive $1,200. That is wholly inadequate. She ought to receive, and every widow in a case of this kind ought to receive, compensation far in excess of that; but so long as we have a statute of that kind under which the great majority of dependents are compelled to accept compensation, we ought not to make a special appropriation in one particular case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 64, after line 9, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to sell to the State of Oklahoma for military purposes the following tract of land situate in Pittsburg County, Okla., to wit: The east half of the east half of the east half of the west half of section 9, the east half of section 9, the west half of the west half of section 10, the west half of the east half of the west half of section 10, the west half of the east half of the east half of the west half of section 10, township 5 north, range 14 east of the Indian base and meridian, being 640 acres, more or less, according to the Government survey thereof: Provided, however, That the said land shall be sold for cash at the appraised price fixed thereupon by the appraisers appointed by the President under authority of the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and for other purposes:" And provided further, That the coal or asphalt on or under said lands is hereby reserved, and the Secretary of the Interior is instructed to expressly reserve the same in preparing conveyance thereof: And provided further, That this authorization shall lapse and expire by operation of law unless the said appraised price of said land shall be tendered to the Secretary of the Interior in behalf of the State of Oklahoma within six months from the date of the approval of this act by the President.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask either of the Senators from Oklahoma if this amendment should not somewhere show that we are legislating about Indian lands. There is nothing in the amendment to show that, although it is to be presumed, this being an Indian appropriation bill, that it does. Should it not so state, however?

Mr. OWEN. It states that on page 65, line 1, where reference is made to the act to provide for the sale of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. It is Indian land, of course, under that.

Mr. PAGE. This amendment simply says that the land "shall be sold for cash at the appraised price fixed thereupon by the appraisers appointed by the President" under the authority of the act.

Mr. OWEN. That is the act dealing with the segregated coal and asphalt Indian lands.

Mr. PAGE. But should it not be a litle more specific and say where the money received for these lands shall go? Is there under the law a place where it would go without any specification in the amendment?

Mr. OWEN. It would go without saying; yes. This being the Indians' land, it would go to the Indians' credit.

Mr. PAGE. I have no doubt that a point of order would lie against this amendment, but I do not wish to make it.

Mr. OWEN. Any amendment the Senator may suggest upon that line will be acceptable. I do not think it is really necessary, however.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say that so far as the State of Oklahoma is concerned this bill contains a great deal of general legislation. There is some of it that, I think, I should very seriously oppose under any conditions, and I do not know but I shall have to interpose points of order later.

Mr. OWEN. I agree with the Senator that that is true; but it is also true that the Indian appropriation bill has been used as a vehicle for legislating for that part of the country because we have such a large number there, and it is so difficult to pass independent bills. The Senator, of course, is familiar with that practice.

Mr. PAGE. To what tribe does this land belong?

Mr. OWEN. The Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator says the appropriation bill has been oftentimes used as a vehicle for legislation of this kind?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator will remember that we had a long hearing as to the distribution of certain money which belonged to the Indians. I believe the amount was $800. It is in the bill somewhere.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. If I remember correctly—and if I am incorrect, I hope the Senator will correct me—the claim was made that if hereafter we were obliged to add to the enrollment the names of as many Indians as it was insisted should be enrolled, there would not be $800 each to be distributed.

Mr. OWEN. I will say to the Senator that that related to another tribe entirely—the Creek Tribe.

Mr. PAGE. All of this legislation, it seems to me, is important. So far as I am concerned, I have, at least, tried to do my duty about it, but I have not been quite satisfied that it ought to pass. It may be right and it may be wrong, but I have not seen evidence convincing me as to the wisdom of all of this legislation. Is there not so much of it, and is it not so important, that the provisions of this bill for the State of Oklahoma ought to be put in one general bill and considered outside of the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. OWEN. Of course the Senator knows that that is impossible. This item simply permits the State of Oklahoma to acquire, for military purposes, a piece of this land at the appraised value. There is nothing extraordinary about it. There is nothing involved about it.

Mr. PAGE. I said that as to this item, although I was quite clear that it was open to a point of order, I would not make it; but in running through the bill it seems to me I have found so much general legislation——

Mr. OWEN. Oh, well, it is true, as the Senator says, that we are obliged to rely upon the Indian appropriation bill for such items as are not objected to. If they are objected to, they go out.

Mr. PAGE. I make no point of order as to this item.

Mr. OWEN. Anyone can strike them out, I take it.

Mr. ASHURST. Referring to this amendment, in line 12, page 64, after the word "the," I move to insert the words "surface of the," so as to read:

For military purposes, the surface of the following tract of land.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to suggest an amendment there. I move to insert, after the words "coal and asphalt," the words "and other minerals."

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to that.

Mr. OWEN. It is only coal and asphalt lands that are reserved.

Mr. CLAPP. Those words are used in describing the title of the act on page 65, line 2.

Mr. OWEN. It applies only to the coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator desire to make of his amendment? Does he abandon it?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; since I have acquired from members of the committee information that I did not possess before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended on motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 65, after line 11, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $65.50 to William Volz, in settlement of his account for horse hire furnished the agency physician at Oraibi, June 23 to October 21, 1905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," in section 17, on page 65, line 21, after the word "employees," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$200,000," and, in the same line, after the word "That," to insert "effective July 1, 1914," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 17. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $200,000: Provided, That, effective July 1, 1914, the offices of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes and superintendent of Union Agency, in Oklahoma, be, and the same are hereby, abolished, and in lieu thereof there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes, with his office located in the State of Oklahoma, at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and said superintendent shall exercise the authority and perform the duties now exercised by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and the superintendent of the Union Agency, with authority to reorganize the department and to eliminate all unnecessary clerks, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if my understanding is correct, the adoption of this amendment does not carry with it the section, and amendments to the bill other than the committee amendments will be in order later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to amend at this time the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not care to amend the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments offered by individual Senators will be entertained after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 66, after line 15, to insert:

That the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to convey to the Dwight Mission School, on Sallisaw Creek, Okla., 26 acres of land heretofore set aside in accordance with the provisions of section 24 of the Cherokee agreement approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stats. L., pp. 716, 720), for the use of such school for missionary and educational purposes, and now being occupied and used by the said Dwight Mission School, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept in payment therefor $10 per acre.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

That full legal and equitable jurisdiction, without regard to lapse of time, is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and adjudicate, as justice and equity shall require, all claims against the Cherokee Nation by the estate of John W. West, deceased, or by the heirs or any heir of said estate, and particularly the claim of the said estate and the heirs thereof against the said Cherokee Nation for the deprivation of the said John W. West, deceased, his estate and his heirs, of the beneficial use of certain property, wherein it is alleged that the said John W. West was interested; and any judgment rendered under this act against said nation shall be paid to the administrator of the estate of John W. West, deceased, out of any funds standing to the credit of said nation, and the amount necessary to pay any such judgment is hereby appropriated out of any money of the Cherokee Nation under control of, or held in trust by, the United States. Suit shall be begun, within 30 days after the approval of this act, by petition filed by the administrator of the estate, and service thereof shall be made on the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, who shall appear by attorney, within 20 days after service of said suit is made upon him, and defend said suit on behalf of the nation; the record heretofore made in the case, together with any material evidence on file with the Department of the Interior pertaining to said claim, shall be considered by the court, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to transmit to said court all such records in his department.

Mr. GORE. I make a point of order against the amendment. It is general legislation. It undertakes to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims in a case where it does not have jurisdiction.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Oklahoma will withhold his point of order on this amendment for a time, until I can call the attention of Senators to some matters connected with it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have no objection to passing the amendment for the present. I can not agree to withhold the point of order, however. I ask that it may be passed for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma states that he will not withhold the point of order, but that he will suspend his remarks at this time in order that the Senator from South Dakota may make a statement concerning it. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I meant to pass the consideration of the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma present unconditionally a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. GORE. If there is no other recourse, I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from South Dakota. The point of order is not debatable, but the Chair has discretion to hear him.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to say that the basis of this proposed legislation is an award made in 1883, whereby the heirs of John W. West, deceased, were to be paid the sum of $5,000, with such interest thereon as should be deemed just and equitable. That award was made in pursuance of a treaty between the United States Government and the Cherokee Nation, whereby certain damages claimed by the heirs of John W. West were to be determined. The arbitrators were a representative selected by the Cherokee Nation and a representative of the United States, selected by the Secretary of the Interior.

The award was approved by the Secretary of the Interior; it was afterwards contested; but on a full hearing before Secretary of the Interior Teller the award was affirmed. A rehearing on the award for the payment of $5,000 with interest was afterwards had before Secretary Lamar, and the previous decision was reaffirmed. This was in 1886. So the award determined in 1883 has been reaffirmed by two successive decisions of Secretaries of the Interior; and according to this award the Government of the United States has been owing, since the time of the award, anyhow, to the heirs of John W. West the sum of $5,000 with interest.

This legislation has been before Congress for many years. It was before every Congress between the Forty-eighth and the Fifty-fourth Congress, inclusive of those two Congresses. It has been reported on favorably by House committees four different times. A bill making a direct appropriation for the payment of the award has passed the Senate five times. It seems to me it has been determined here often enough that the United States owes this just debt, and surely the least Congress can do is, as provided by the proposed legislation, to let the Court of Claims determine the justice and the equity of the matter.

I wish to call attention to the report of the House committee on this bill, made in January, 1913, and to a few statements contained in that report. The House committee says:

This judgment or award, final and conclusive under the treaty and binding upon all parties, has never been paid. The doctrine of res adjudicata clearly applies to this award, whether considered from a judicial, executive, or legislative point of view. That doctrine amounts simply to this, that a cause of action once finally determined between the parties on the merits by a competent tribunal can not afterwards be litigated by a new proceeding either before the same or any other tribunal (100 Mass., 409); it is a general principle that a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction of matters put in issue by the pleadings is binding and conclusive upon all other courts of concurrent power and between the parties and their privies (168 U. S., 48); and it is a principle of public policy as well as a matter of private right (34 N. J. Eq., 535).

The rate of interest fixed in the bill, namely, 5 per cent per annum, is the same rate allowed the Cherokee Nation on its claims against the United States Government, arising in part out of the same treaty, by the Supreme Court of the United States in Cherokee Nation v. United States (202 U. S., 101), wherein the court allowed interest from the date the Government took the property of the Cherokee Nation.

The United States was a party to the treaty. It guaranteed fulfillment of the treaty provisions. The commission was appointed pursuant to the terms of the treaty. The award was regularly made. By the terms of the treaty it was a finality. The Government of the United States can not now shirk its responsibility, particularly as two Secretaries of the Interior—the officer of this Government whose duty it is to supervise such matters, and men whose legal ability and fairness all men must concede—examined into the award with care and approved it in all respects. The Government of the United States is in honor bound to see that this award is paid.

I wish to say that I myself, before presenting a bill for an appropriation to pay this award, something more than a year ago, investigated the evidence thoroughly, and from the investigation made I think the findings of the Secretaries of the Interior fully justified.

The report further says:

There has been no negligence on the part of the claimants in prosecuting their claim. They are not in fault. The delay in the payment of the award has been due to the failure of the House of Representatives to concur in legislation directing its payment, which has frequently come before it for action. On account of the long delay, for which Congress alone is responsible, your committee urges action at this session in order that the beneficiaries—Cherokee Indians—who have already waited for justice at our hands for many years, may no longer be subjected to the injustice which they have so long endured.

Mr. President, this matter ought not to be required to go to the Court of Claims. It ought to be settled, after this long delay and after this long course of injustice on the part of the United States, as against these heirs. It ought to be settled by a direct appropriation of so much money to pay the claim. The committee, however, has seen fit to provide for its reference to the Court of Claims, and it seems to me that is the very least we can do.

I hope the point of order will not be insisted upon.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator that this claim has been presented to Congress time and time again. The Chair has heard me discuss this proposition, I think, every session since I came to the Senate, and undoubtedly to his heart's discontent.

The original treaty under which this claim is sought to be presented provided that claims on the part of Western Cherokees could be presented. John W. West was an Eastern Cherokee. His brother, Buford West, was a Western Cherokee. John W. West never had any right even to start to present a claim of this character. He was disqualified under the express terms of the treaty. It granted permission to Western Cherokees to present claims. John W. West was an Eastern Cherokee. He never had any right in court or in Congress. This is one of those persistent claims that drags itself into the Senate whenever the Indian appropriation bill comes up for consideration.

The pending amendment undertakes to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to determine the rights in the premises. I have made a thorough investigation of the matter, and I do not think John W. West has any rights. I do not think he has any right to be heard, because the treaty was unequivocal in its terms.

Mr. STERLING. Permit me to say that these questions were raised before the commission appointed to arbitrate and make an award, and were again urged before the Secretaries of the Interior. It seems to me that ought to be decisive.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ought to have said that John W. West's descendants qualified and drew their portion of the money as Eastern Cherokees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota makes a much stronger case in his argument than is made by the amendment. The amendment treats this as an unliquidated demand, and proposes to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate the fact of liability and the extent of it. The amendment also waives the statute of limitations in this instance, and is obviously subject to the point of order that it is general legislation and a provision for the payment of an unliquidated private claim, as well, in violation of clause 4 of Rule XVI. If the claimant had proceeded upon his original award made under the authority of the existing statute in presenting his claim against this particular tribe of Indians, whose funds are held and controlled by the United States, the matter might present a different aspect and raise a different question.

Subdivision 4 of Rule XVI says:

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

In the form in which it appears in the bill the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STERLING. I simply wish to suggest, before the President pro tempore rules, that the bill contemplates an appropriation for the payment of any judgment that may be rendered by the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the very point. The claimant abandons the adjudicated claim and turns it over to the court to decide upon the equities of the matter, whether or not the first adjudication was right. He asserts his claim at large, as the lawyers say, reopens the whole thing, and makes a mere claim out of what otherwise would be an adjudication.

In the form in which it appears in the bill the item is subject to a point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 68, line 10, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$15,000," and in line 11, after "$15,000," to strike out "in all, $42,000," and insert 'in all, $50,000: Provided, That any unexpended funds heretofore appropriated for this school for the fiscal year 1914 may be used during said year for the purchase of additional land, not to exceed 80 acres, repairs, and improvements," so as to make the clause read:

For the support, continuance, and maintenance of the Cherokee Orphan Training School, near Tahlequah, Okla., for the orphan Indian children of the Five Civilized Tribes belonging to the restricted class, to be conducted as an industrial school under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $35,000; for repairs and improvements, $15,000; in all, $50,000: Provided, That any unexpended funds heretofore appropriated for this school for the fiscal year 1914 may be used during said year for the purchase of additional land, not to exceed 80 acres, repairs, and improvements.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what additional land is necessary? Where is the 80 additional acres of land located that they speak of purchasing?

Mr. OWEN. It is right near the school. They have only 40 acres, I believe, and they want to get 80 acres more, so as to have gardens adjacent to the school. It is outside of the 40 acres reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. On line 16, page 68, after the figures "$275,000," obviously there is an error in the bill. The words "is hereby appropriated" should be inserted, so that it will read:

The sum of $275,000 is hereby appropriated—

And so forth. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 16, after the numerals "$275,000," it is proposed to insert "is hereby appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 68, line 19, after the word "Chickasaw," to insert "Quapaw," so as to make the clause read:

The sum of $275,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Quapaw, and Seminole Nations in Oklahoma, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood.

Mr. GORE. I move—and I assume the Senator from Arizona will accept the amendment—that the word "Quapaw," in line 19, page 68, be stricken out, and that after the word "Nations," in line 20, the words "and the Quapaw Agency" be inserted.

The words "Quapaw Nation" do not describe the community in question. The official designation is "Quapaw Agency."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, first, is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Seminole Nations," in line 20, page 68, it is proposed to insert "and the Quapaw Agency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 69, to insert:

That section 9 of the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 312), be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: By adding, after the word "allottee" in line 6 of said section, the following: "Provided, That no sale of inherited lands by heirs who are full-blood Indians shall be approved by the judge of the county court without giving at least three weeks' notice in some newspaper of general circulation published and printed in the county in which said land is situated that an application for such sale is pending, a copy of which notice shall be sent by registered mail at least three weeks before such sale is made to the United States Indian superintendent at Muskogee: Provided further, That upon the day fixed for such sale the judge of the county court may, in his discretion, accept the highest bid offered for such land and approve a conveyance by the heirs to such purchaser, or refuse to accept any bid offered: Provided further, That upon the approval of any sale of inherited land by full-blood heirs the judge of the county court shall require the purchase price to be paid into court or to the United States Indian superintendent, and such officers shall jointly supervise and control the proceeds derived from such sale of such land and shall pay the same to the heirs in such amounts, at such times, and under such rules and regulations as they may prescribe: Provided further, That the judge of the county court and the United States Indian superintendent shall have power and authority to expend such funds in the improvement of the lands of such heirs, in the purchase of stock or farming implements, or for such other use or purpose as they deem most beneficial to such heirs."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I find that there is serious objection on the part of the people of Oklahoma to that item. I moved it myself in the first place in the committee, and, with the consent of the chairman, I make a point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What matter does the Senator intend to include in his point of order?

Mr. OWEN. The matter beginning on line 1, page 69, and going down to and including line 5 on page 70.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the chairman of the committee desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what ground does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. OWEN. On the ground that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if that provision has met the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. OWEN. It has.

Mr. ASHURST. It has, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. I move to strike out the word "also," in line 25, and to insert "hereby."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, page 70, line 25, before the word "appropriated," strike out "also" and insert "hereby."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 11, after the word "property," to insert "including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 U. S. Stat. L., p. 67), and of the improvements thereon: Provided, That $10,000 of the amount above appropriated shall be immediately available," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $40,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 U. S. Stat. L., p. 67), and of the improvements thereon: Provided, That $10,000 of the amount above appropriated shall be immediately available: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of such amount may be used in connection with the collection of rents of unallotted lands and tribal buildings.

Mr. PAGE. Commencing on page 72, line 12, that is legislation which I do not think ought to be enacted at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We have not reached that yet. We have not passed upon the particular amendment before the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to give notice now that after that amendment has been read I shall raise a point of order, and I should like to have the Chair give especial attention to the reading so as to decide on the point of order when the Secretary has concluded the reading of the amendment, commencing at line 11, on page 72, and concluding at line 26, on page 75.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment inserting line 12 to line 19 on page 71.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 10, to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to consider and determine the claims to enrollment as citizens of the Creek (Muskogee) Nation of Indians of the 64 persons whose names are contained in the list prepared by W. C. Pollock, assistant attorney for the Interior Department, bearing date of January 15, 1912, and which names appear in Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-second Congress, third session, at pages 45 to 52, inclusive; and the said Commissioner of Indian Affairs is directed to enroll all such persons as he may adjudge to be citizens of the Creek Nation, and when so enrolled there shall be paid to each and every such person, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Creek Nation, the sum of $800 in lieu of an allotment of land, said payment to be subject to such restrictions, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe, and hereafter such enrolled citizens shall share alike with all other citizens of the said nation in the distribution of tribal funds, and shall be entitled to all other benefits accruing to the members of said tribe.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enroll on the proper respective rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, as indicated, the persons enumerated in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

That to carry into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stats., p. 861), and the supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 500), and other laws and treaties providing for a minimum allotment to each Creek citizen whose name has been placed on the roll by the Government of the United States under authority of said agreements and laws, of the standard value of $1,040; and in order that the claim of said citizens of the Creek Nation who have received allotments in land and money of a less value than the standard allotment of 160 acres of the standard value of $1,040 might be determined and finally adjudicated, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear, determine, and render final judgment against the United States for such amount, if any, as may be found due by the United States, and as may be necessary to equalize all of such allotments up to the treaty standard value of allotments of $1,040; also to hear, determine, and render final judgment, with right of appeal as herein provided, in the matter of the claim of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation against the United States based on alleged errors in the survey of the boundary of said nation, and any other Creek lands in townships 11 and 12 north, range 6 east, that may have been erroneously taken and disposed of by the United States without compensation therefor; and the actions herein authorized may be brought in the name of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation and against the United States. Said suits shall be begun by petitions filed within six months after the approval of this act, which petitions shall be verified by the principal chief of said nation or the national attorney for said nation, and said suit or suits shall be prosecuted by the national attorney for the Creek Nation and by attorney or attorneys, if any, employed by said nation or tribe, or its duly authorized representatives or individual members of said tribe, to prosecute said claims: Provided, That no attorney shall be authorized to represent said nation, or individual members of said nation, by reason of any contract or agreement made with the tribe or members thereof unless such contract of employment shall have been, subsequent to the passage of this act, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That in the event of the employment of additional attorneys, as herein set out, the said attorney or attorneys shall not be paid out of any funds now to the credit of the Creek Nation, but his or their fee shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior after final judgment, but in no event to exceed $15,000 in each case and in event of a recovery, and shall then be taxed and paid as other costs of the actions in which such attorney or attorneys may be authorized to appear.

The money accruing under any judgment or judgments rendered under this act shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior to the persons entitled to participate therein under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, payment to minors and restricted Indians to be subject to the conditions affecting the payments of funds derived from the sale of restricted lands. To effect a speedy settlement of the affairs of the Creek Nation said suits shall be advanced for hearing by the Court of Claims and by the Supreme Court if the same shall be appealed.

Mr. PAGE. At this point I raise a point of order on the part of the amendment from line 11, on page 72, to line 5, on page 73, ending with the words "accruing to the members of said tribe." I think it is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole amendment is an entire proposition, is it not?

Mr. PAGE. I think the lines following, from line 6 to line 10, on page 73, may be wise legislation, and I do not care to make a point against those six lines. I think they are independent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I was in hopes that the Senator from Vermont would not raise that point. It will make it necessary for me to oppose wherever possible any distribution of the fund or any portion of the fund of this tribe of Indians. Here are some Indians who were found by the agents of the department to be entitled to enrollment. Their names were not acted upon before the times fixed by the statute for the closing of the rolls. They were on their way to the department; they were entitled to recognition; and they are as legally or as morally entitled to go on the rolls as the names that were on them. It was agreed when this and similar matters were before the committee that those names which had been certified as being entitled to enrollment and reported by Mr. Pollock——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me? The Senator is talking about the enrollment of Indians as members of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians on page 72.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is a part of the Five Civilized Tribes. It is one tribe, the Creek Nation. The Senator from Vermont has made a point of order which applies directly to the Creeks.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Are they those who were on their way?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Many of those were on their way to the department and were entitled to the enrollment.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I am in entire accord with what the Senator from Michigan has just stated. I believe that the enrollment should be completed by the addition of further names, and if that enrollment is completed it is very doubtful whether the sum of $800 will be left for distribution to each one. That being the case and because of the very reasons the Senator has stated, I think we should not legislate at this time to appropriate the $800.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it was shown before the committee that there are funds sufficient, but if there are not sufficient funds for that purpose it is all the more reason why there should be no further distribution of the funds of this or any other tribe so long as there is an incomplete enrollment. The time will come, in my judgment, when some of the gentlemen—not in the Senate, but attorneys outside—who are now interested in closing the rolls and keeping these men off will be quite as active in pressing bills before the Senate asking that the Indians who have been kept off the rolls shall be given what they are legally, or at least equitably, entitled to.

I do not care to open these rolls; I have tried to avoid that as best I could, but I have felt since I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs that these Indians should be cared for.

As I said, it was agreed before the committee, as I understood it, that if these designated Indians whose title had been passed upon and recommended by the agents of the department as entitled to enrollment could go on this list and share in the distribution of the tribal funds as they were given out from time to time, at least the apparent defect in the enrollment would be cured, because, I repeat, these names have been passed upon by the department, and simply through the fact that the day fixed by statute passed while some of these names were already in the department but before they could be acted upon, these men ought not to be defrauded of their rights to this division of the tribal funds.

I say I am sorry the Senator from Vermont felt it was necessary to make the point of order against this item, because I am very confident that if it was known that these names were not going on the list there would have been no distribution of tribal funds. It seems to me it is quite time that we had this matter settled properly and equitably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, as at present advised, is inclined to believe that the matter from line 6 to line 10 is separable from the preceding matter. It reads:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enroll on the proper respective rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, as indicated—

Referring, of course, to that which has gone before—the persons enumerated in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have in my hand the document referred to, containing a letter of April 24, 1914, from the office of the Secretary of the Interior, to this effect:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 24, 1914.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request of April 22, I am inclosing herewith a list of the names of persons who, upon the investigation heretofore made, have been found apparently equitably entitled to enrollment on the rolls of the various tribes composing the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. The data as to each of these names have heretofore been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and may be found in Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-third Congress, third session.

This list contains the names of all those whom the department has found equitably entitled to enrollment, omitting, as suggested, the names of new-born Choctaw freedmen.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

In the Choctaw and Chickasaw country there is quite a large number of claims, four or five thousand—I do not know the number—varying according to the estimates that are made. In the Choctaw and Chickasaw country that contention has been raised, but as far as these people are concerned, since the department has found them entitled, and since the attorneys representing the United States are willing to have them enrolled, I should not think anyone would agree to have these people kept off when they have the right to be enrolled. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not press his point of order.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am not objecting to any enrollment that the department thinks ought to be made. The point I make is this: We provide here for the payment of $800 to each such person. I will read the provision at line 25, on page 72:

The sum of $800 in lieu of an allotment of land, said payment to be subject to such restrictions, rules, and regulations as he—may prescribe.

I have been informed by those who have made a study of this matter—and perhaps I may say that in the last Congress a very valuable member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who is now away, discussed this matter somewhat at length—and the information I have is that there is, in addition to the names referred to in Document No. 478, just referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma, another large number who claim to be entitled to allotments.

I confess my mind is not very clear in regard to the different Indian nations in Oklahoma; but if we are to make an appropriation of a certain sum, it seems to me we ought to safeguard the Treasury so that later on, if there are so many added allottees, it will not make the sum in the Treasury belonging to the tribe insufficient and the Federal Treasury be obliged to take funds not belonging to the Indians. I say I think we ought to safeguard the Treasury against that possibility.

At present I am not sufficiently conversant with the facts to say that we do that under this bill. Indeed, I rather think we do not do it. That was my purpose in raising the point of order.

I do not want, in any event, to take issue with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] about this matter, because he and I have thought very nearly alike in all the hearings and consideration of the bill in the committee. If he says that, in his judgment, I ought to withdraw the point of order, I am rather inclined to do it, although I wish I might have some further light before I consent to withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be necessary for the Chair to know whether the Senator withdraws the point of order before he knows what action to take.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the Senator from Vermont there can be no possible question, if the information which has been presented to the committee is correct as to the condition of the treasury of this tribe, that the tribe will have something over $2,000,000 when this payment has been made. That at least has been the testimony. I had no thought that this question could possibly have been raised. It was not stated before the committee.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, there seems to me some uncertainty among Senators in regard to the wisdom of this proposed legislation. The Senator from Michigan, I understand, is not quite satisfied as to the provision, and although the Senator from Vermont has withdrawn the point of order, I renew it. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. OWEN. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will withhold the point of order until we can further consider it. I ask that we pass over the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That request is addressed entirely to the Senator from South Dakota. It is subject to what he says.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator from South Dakota consent to pass it over for the present?

Mr. STERLING I will consent to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The item will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma and with the consent of the Senator from South Dakota. Does that include all the matter which appears in the bill from line 11, on page 72, down to and including line 26, on page 75?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole amendment will be passed over.

Mr. NELSON. I understood the objection was limited by the Senator from Vermont, and, in the first instance, it extended down to line 5, on page 73, and that the rest is undisposed of.

Mr. PAGE. I gave notice that I would raise the point of order as to the balance of the amendment from line 11, on page 73, to line 26, on page 75, and I give notice that I will do that when we return to the amendment, unless I have some light that I do not have now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know how much has been passed over, because I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To this matter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and I want to see whether that part is included in the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what extent does the Senator intend that his point of order shall apply? All the matter which appears from page 72, line 11, down to and including line 26, on page 75, seems to be associated and covers the same general topic. Is the point of order directed against the whole provision?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That being the case, I desire to offer an amendment and let it be pending and go over with the entire subject matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not passed on the point of order, but the amendment to the amendment can be entertained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to offer it now and have it read and pending at the proper place, and I will let it go over with the entire subject matter to which it refers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 10, page 73, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] proposes to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to enroll on said citizenship rolls all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, in the roll and report of said commission dated March 10, 1899, and in subsequent reports of said commission, which persons have not heretofore been finally enrolled; and he shall also enroll all full-blood Mississippi Choctaws not heretofore enrolled, and all persons who may satisfactorily establish their rights as descendants of Choctaws to whom privileges were guaranteed by the provisions of articles 14 and 19 of the treaty of 1830, known as the "Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will lie on the table until we reach the amendment of the committee in the further consideration of the bill. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 4, to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to permit the principal chief of the Creek Nation to call a special session of the national council of said nation, and for said purpose there is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Creek Nation, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the mileage and per diem of members and other incidental expenses of such council meeting upon the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall fix the time for calling said session of the council, the length of time said council may remain in session, and the amount that shall be allowed members attending.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 17, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of their respective tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, said payment not to exceed, in the case of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, $100 per capita, and in the case of the Cherokees, not to exceed $15 per capita, and all said payments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians.

Mr. KENYON. I think this amendment is subject to the same point of order that was made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], but I should like to have some explanation of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any Senator who is inclined to enlighten the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Five Civilized Tribes made agreements with the United States which took the form finally of statutes of the United States. They passed as statutes with the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Cherokees. Under that statute provision it was agreed that as these funds arose from the sale of their lands they should be distributed. There is only about $50 left to be distributed to the Cherokees. In the case of the Choctaws and Chickasaws they have property undistributed that will probably amount to between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000—a very large sum. There are, I suppose, about 30,000 of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and at $100 apiece it would take about $3,000,000. If there were allowed the claims of those now demanding the reopening of the rolls, even to the extent of three or four or five thousand people, it would make no substantial difference, because there will be an abundant Choctaw and Chickasaw fund to meet any of such claims.

Mr. KENYON. Are there not a large number who are seeking to have the rolls reopened?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Then, if there was not enough money for their share, that would become a claim against the Government?

Mr. OWEN. There is enough for any claim that they might have. That is what I was explaining to the Senator. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] knows the amount, and he knows the number of Choctaws and Chickasaws, being very familiar with the matter.

Mr. KENYON. It occurred to me that in all these provisions there is that danger if the rolls should be opened.

Mr. OWEN. The rolls never will be opened; never in the world.

Mr. KENYON. There are a good many people who think they will be.

Mr. OWEN. I know they have that apprehension, but they will never be opened.

Mr. KENYON. There are a good many Indians trying to have them opened.

Mr. OWEN. There are a good many people claiming that they should be opened, and who are trying to do it through their attorneys.

The statutes requiring the distribution of this fund to these people are very plain. This amendment is merely carrying out an existing law, and in pursuance of existing law these funds pass into the Treasury of the United States as trust funds and can not be disposed of except by consent of Congress. So Congress must direct the distributions that are made.

It therefore would not be subject to a point of order, as the other items are obviously subject to a point of order. Being in pursuance of a statute law and carrying out an existing agreement with the Indians, under the statute law it is not, I take it, subject to a point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To what statute does the Senator refer?

Mr. OWEN. I refer to the statute of 1902.

Mr. KENYON. I will make the point of order that the provision commencing with line 18, page 77, and extending to line 11, page 78, is new legislation, and that it is not germane to the subject of this bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask to have this item passed over temporarily. I am perfectly willing that it shall be disposed of this afternoon if the Oklahoma items are disposed of, but it will make some difference with me as to what is done with certain other items, because I think they are all related. I therefore ask that this item be passed now without a decision of the question raised.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be glad to have it passed over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that is done, I have an amendment which I want to offer as a proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This practice of reserving matters for future consideration is becoming a real evil. It ought not to be extended to the present situation. The Chair does not see any reason for withholding to a future day a decision on the point of order raised by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I expect that point of order will have to be argued to some extent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That depends on whether there is an appeal from the decision of the Chair. This appeal may be argued, but there is no great danger of consuming much time in arguing the point of order itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean, if the Chair wants some enlightenment a whole lot of Senators are prepared to try to give it to him under the exercise of a wise discretion of the Chair which permits discussion. But before entertaining the request of the Senator from Michigan, what I rose for is to offer an amendment which is connected with the matter which he wants to have passed over. I ask that it be read and go over with the subject matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not disposed to invite debate on the point of order to remove doubts as to what action he should take. He now overrules the point of order. It seems that the proposition contained in the amendment affects trust funds held by the Government as trustee, and they never can be used in any way without authority derived from Congress. The amendment is not objectionable on the ground that it is general legislation, because it is a kind of legislation necessary to make the trust effective by affording the trustee that permission that the sovereign alone can give. It is not general legislation in any sense. It is the kind of legislation that is necessary to give the consent of the sovereign trustee which controls the ultimate disposition of the trust fund. It is not objectionable under the fourth clause of Rule XVI, because it is an amendment that is to carry out the provisions of an existing law. The Chair will hold that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. KENYON. Just for the sake of the RECORD——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I do not expect to convince the Chair at all, but I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that a similar provision was inserted in the Indian appropriation bill, as it has been each year, on February 25, 1913, as will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 4006.

Senator LODGE interposed a question of order against a similar provision on the appropriation bill of that year—that it was new legislation and not germane to the bill under the rules of the Senate. The question was submitted to the Senate, and by a vote of 57 to 34 it was decided that it was not in order on the bill. On June 18——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question as to whether or not the amendment is germane to the bill is not for the decision of the Chair, but for that of the Senate. If the Senator insists upon the point that the amendment is not germane, that question must be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. One further suggestion. On June 18, 1913, the Vice President—I assume it was the Vice President—held that a similar provision inserted in the Indian appropriation bill was not germane to the bill under the rules of the Senate. That is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 18, 1913, page 3386.

I ask that the question as to whether or not the amendment is germane be submitted to the Senate, if the Chair holds that it is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proper. The Senator from Iowa having raised the question as to whether or not the amendment in question is germane to the bill, it becomes the duty of the Chair to submit the matter to the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Let the paragraph be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the paragraph.

The SECRETARY. It is the paragraph commencing on page 77, line 18, and running down to line 10, on page 78.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, my recollection is that on the last Indian appropriation bill that question was submitted to the Senate, and the Senate decided it was in order; that it was germane.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it was decided that it was not.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from Mississippi is mistaken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I remember when this exact point was up.

Mr. OWEN. I have the matter here, if I may call the attention of the Chair to it. It was decided by the Vice President that the amendment was not germane, and there was no appeal taken to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules of the Senate, the question as to whether or not any proposition is germane is exclusively for the decision of the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. A Senator has the right to appeal to the Senate on the question of whether or not an amendment is germane under the rules. I believe the Chair has so held.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule under which the Senate must proceed reads:

> 3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate.

If the present occupant of the chair could decide the question, he would do so in accord with what he thought was right. Having no jurisdiction to deal with it at all, the question is submitted to the only tribunal that can pass on it. The question is, Is the amendment germane to the bill? [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. OWEN called for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

Mr. OWEN. I call for a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma suggests the absence of a quorum. The Chair doubts whether in the midst of taking a vote that can be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the call can not be made when the Senate is dividing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That procedure need not be strictly adhered to unless we are bound to do it under some existing rule, and the Chair knows of no rule which requires it to be done. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Owen	Sterling
Borah	James	Page	Sutherland
Bryan	Jones	Perkins	Swanson
Camden	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thornton
Catron	Lane	Reed	Tillman
Chamberlain	McCumber	Robinson	Townsend
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clapp	Myers	Shively	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	White
Crawford	Norris	Smith, Md.	Williams
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Gore	Overman	Smoot

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], with whom I am paired, is necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the roll discloses the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. LEE of Maryland, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. STONE, Mr. BRISTOW, and Mr. BRADY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. Several Senators have come into the Chamber since the pending question was raised. The Chair will therefore restate it. Incidental to that, however, the Chair will ask the Secretary to read the item in dispute, which appears on page 77, beginning at line 18.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, after line 17, the committee propose to insert the following:

> That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of their respective tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, said payment not to exceed, in the case of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, $100 per capita, and in the case of the Cherokees not to exceed $15 per capita, and all said payments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] raises the question as to the relevancy of this amendment to the pending bill. Under the rules of the Senate all questions of relevancy of proposed amendments to a pending bill are to be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate. That question is now submitted to the Senate. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but I understand if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when Mr. STONE's name was called). The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted without stating my pair. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MYERS. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—40.

Ashurst	Gore	Norris	Sheppard
Bryan	Hitchcock	Overman	Shively
Camden	James	Owen	Smith, Ariz.
Catron	Johnson	Page	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Jones	Perkins	Smith, Md.
Chilton	Lane	Pittman	Swanson
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Ransdell	Tillman
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Robinson	Warren

NOT VOTING—41.

Bankhead	Goff	Martin, Va.	Stephenson
Brandegee	Gronna	Newlands	Stone
Burleigh	Hollis	O'Gorman	Thomas
Burton	Hughes	Oliver	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Penrose	Walsh
Colt	La Follette	Poindexter	Weeks
Culberson	Lea, Tenn.	Root	West
Cummins	Lewis	Saulsbury	Works
du Pont	Lippitt	Shields
Fall	Lodge	Simmons
Gallinger	McLean	Smith, S. C.

So the Senate decided the amendment to be germane to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the amendment to the amendment, which I have already sent to the desk, be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi proposes an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, line 10, after the word "Indians," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma and until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the words "and Chickasaw Nations" be stricken out and the word "Nation" inserted. I did not know they were in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks that his amendment to the amendment may be modified by striking therefrom the words "and Chickasaw Nations" and inserting "Nation." In the absence of objection, the amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona in charge of the bill if he thinks we will probably finish the bill this afternoon before we go into executive session, because if he does not think so I should like to have this matter go over until to-morrow. I have a little neuralgia in one of my eyes, and I hope to feel better to-morrow; but if the Senator thinks we can finish the bill this evening I will go ahead.

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the Senator from Mississippi, I will say that there is no possibility or hope of finishing the bill this afternoon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I ask that the amendment go over until to-morrow.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I wish to state to the Senator from Mississippi that I desire to interpose a point of order against the amendment which he has just offered, and possibly that might obviate any necessity of debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point of order can go over with the amendment. Let the point of order be considered as entered, and let the entire matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. GORE. I am perfectly willing that that course be pursued, if it will accommodate the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the consideration of the amendment will be postponed until to-morrow. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. If it is not objectionable to the Senator in charge of the bill, I should like to move an executive session at this time in order that we may have time enough to transact pending executive business.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. R. 15578. An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

H. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved May 2, 1914, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CONFIRMATION OF ROBERT H. TERRELL.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the injunction of secrecy be removed from my vote cast on the confirmation of Robert H. Terrell to be a judge in the municipal court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oklahoma will be granted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the injunction of secrecy be removed from my vote cast on the confirmation of Judge Terrell.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the vote of the Senate taken April 24, 1914, on the confirmation of Robert H. Terrell to be a judge of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia, and that the vote be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The result of the vote is as follows:

YEAS—39.

Brady	Cummins	Lewis	Shively
Brandegee	Gallinger	Lodge	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Goff	McCumber	Smoot
Burleigh	Hollis	Martine, N. J.	Sterling
Burton	Hughes	Nelson	Thomas
Catron	Johnson	Norris	Thompson
Chilton	Kenyon	Page	Walsh
Clapp	Kern	Pomerene	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Root	Weeks
Crawford	Lane	Shafroth

NAYS—24.

Bankhead	Lee, Md.	Reed	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Newlands	Robinson	Smith, S. C.
Fletcher	Overman	Sheppard	Thornton
Gore	Owen	Shields	Vardaman
James	Pittman	Simmons	West
Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Smith, Ariz.	Williams

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 19, 1914, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 18, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, infinite spirit, our heavenly Father, for all the great and good men and women who, with unselfish devotion, guided by the light of heaven, have lived and wrought for the betterment of mankind and have stamped their characters upon the pillars of their respective ages.

Rich are we by inheritance, but we shall prove recreant to our trust if we do not increase and multiply our possessions in all that makes for righteousness, truth, and justice. Thus may we hear and obey the better angels of our nature and leave behind us something noble, something great, something that will live to bless mankind. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4377) to provide for the construction of four revenue cutters.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, had disagreed to amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 67, had agreed to a further conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PERKINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to bill of the following title:

S. 4053. An act for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12826. An act to reinstate Francis Graves Bonham as a cadet at the United States Military Academy; and

H. R. 15280. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 4053. An act for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.;

S. 533. An act to consolidate certain forest lands in the Ochoco National Forest, Oreg.; and

S. 5147. An act to authorize and direct Col. George W. Goethals, governor of the Canal Zone, and formerly chairman and chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to investigate certain claims of the McClintic-Marshall Construction Co.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 12826. An act to reinstate Francis Graves Bonham as a cadet at the United States Military Academy; and

H. R. 15280. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are certain amendments to this bill which I think ought not to be agreed to without giving the House an opportunity to vote upon them if the Senate should insist upon them. They are: Amendment No. 1, which relates to mileage; amendment No. 20, which relates to purchase of automobiles; amendment 30, which relates to mileage; also amendment 43, which relates to an assistant to the Secretary of State——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, is it not?

Mr. MANN. To the Secretary of State; and amendment No. 48, which relates to an assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury. Amendment No. 78, which relates to increase of pay of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; amendments 212, 220, and 234, relating to different matters, which I think ought not to be agreed to unless the House has an opportunity to vote upon them; and then there are certain amendments, Nos. 107 to 124, inclusive, as to assay offices, in which I am not specially interested, but I think certain gentlemen would like to have opportunity at some time to move to agree to those amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the Children's Bureau?

Mr. MANN. No; that is the assay offices.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in response to the gentleman from Illinois that the House conferees would not feel justified in yielding to the Senate amendments with respect to mileage or to automobiles or to the new places created in the two departments, and the assay offices; but upon the amendments made by the Senate to the bill with respect to the Children's Bureau, I think that the judgment of the House was so clearly demonstrated in the passage of the bill through the House that it would be better to accept the Senate amendment, because it puts it in better shape than the House left it.

Mr. MANN. I entirely agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And I will take this occasion to say that the Committee on Appropriations was governed by the law in bringing in the bill in the first instance and had no feeling about the matter and was not disposed to be niggardly toward the Children's Bureau; it was simply a construction of the law.

Mr. MANN. Well, among these amendments which I named by number, without describing what they were, was the one concerning commercial attachés to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, amendment No. 212, and the amendment increasing the rate of compensation for the annual rental for the building for the Department of Commerce. I think I would want to have a vote in the House on that if the Senate amendments were to be agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to say for the House conferees that it would not be our purpose to do otherwise than to carry out the wishes of the House on material amendments, but I do not want to bring back into the House every little difference between the two Houses, but where the matter is material, I think that we would like to have the judgment of the House.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, we could get a vote on these amendments before going to conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. But I have no desire to obstruct the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say that the item for commercial attachés was in the bill when it was first reported to the House, but it went out on a point of order. I think if there is any objection to the amendment at all, it is to that part of it which takes it out of the civil service and not to the provision making the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly, I think that would be the point.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman does not understand the sentiment of the House is against this item of commercial attachés?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think the House is in favor of the appropriation, but there are Members who are opposed to taking the employees out of the civil service.

Mr. GARNER. We who are opposed to taking these people through the civil service were at first perfectly willing to have a vote on that proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think I would like to have the judgment of the House on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to have the judgment of the House on amendment numbered 234, section 5, which is one of the amendments I named.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is in regard to the maintenance and upkeep of automobiles.

Mr. MANN. Well, automobiles or horse-drawn vehicles or anything else, except walking.

Mr. FOSTER. What number is that?

Mr. MANN. Two hundred and thirty-four; it is next to the last page.

Mr. GARNER. Is the gentleman from Illinois alarmed as to the ability of the present officials to get around over the District and take care of affairs without having automobiles or conveyances of any kind?

Mr. MANN. Well, this does not relate to District officials; it relates to everybody in the Government service and involves the question of the form of appropriation hereafter.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we ought to have a vote on that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Those are all the matters the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] referred to, I believe, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is an amendment, No. 176, which puts back into the bill an office that went out on a point of order, and a very useless office, too. It is that of Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who shall act as chief clerk.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Do you want a separate vote on that?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois mentioned one amendment, to which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] did not respond, and that is as to the increase of the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I take it, however, you would give the House an opportunity to vote on it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I did not notice that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] referred to that particular amendment.

Mr. MANN. I did.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to say, and I did say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I do not want to bring all the amendments back here. I want the conferees to make some progress, but wherever a matter is material I want the Members of the House to vote on them.

Mr. MANN. There are 235 amendments, and we have not enumerated many. We leave without question nearly everything to settle in the conference, if the conferees are able to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Anything that I find out the Members generally want to vote on I will bring back.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GOOD.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—MICHAEL J. GILL AGAINST L. C. DYER.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 3 and agreeable to the announcement made by the Speaker some time ago, I call up the privileged report on the contested election case of Michael J. Gill against L. C. Dyer.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Calendar No. 117, Michael J. Gill v. L. C. Dyer.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-one gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House is ordered. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this vote 263 Members—a quorum—have responded to their names.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, the resolution has not been read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8 of the report, the committee recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

House resolution 548.

"Resolved, That L. C. Dyer was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-third Congress from the twelfth district of the State of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

"Resolved, That Michael J. Gill was duly elected a Representative in the Sixty-third Congress of the United States as a Representative from the twelfth district of the State of Missouri, and is entitled to a seat therein."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution submitted by the minority of the committee be read as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17 of the report, the minority of the committee recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3, or a subcommittee thereof, be instructed to take additional testimony in the contested-election case of Michael J. Gill v. Hon. L. C. Dyer, touching the election of November 5, 1912, in precincts 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 14, and 17, of the fifth ward of the city of St. Louis, with particular reference as to whether or not the Democratic ballots in those precincts which had Michael J. Gill's name scratched were the correct votes of the voters in question, or whether some person or persons had fraudulently scratched the name of the said Gill without the knowledge and consent of the said voters; and that the said committee, after it has taken and considered this additional evidence in connection with testimony heretofore taken, makes its report to the House, with its recommendations, within 30 days after the adoption of this resolution."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] is recognized.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, this contest arises——

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ascertain whether or not we can agree upon time for debate of the resolutions.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What does the gentleman from Illinois suggest?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, we would like to have five hours on this side.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Of course we on this side should not wish to have less. That would carry us to when?

Mr. McKENZIE. We could go on to-morrow. There are a number of gentlemen who desire to be heard on this matter. It is a very important case. There are quite a number of Members who want to be heard on it, and I think they ought to have an opportunity.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, I should imagine if the gentleman would take three hours he would probably have enough.

Mr. MANN. No; that is not enough.

Mr. McKENZIE. That would carry it over until to-morrow, and we might just as well take up the day.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, suppose we say four hours to a side.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I can not consent to that. If we have five hours to a side, we will reach a vote to-morrow, and these two days have been set aside to consider this matter.

Mr. MANN. Suppose you make it five hours' debate to a side, and ask unanimous consent to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I shall not oppose meeting to-morrow at 11 o'clock, if that is agreeable to the membership of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. We ought to be able to vote on this resolution to-day. If you fix a reasonable time for debate, we could have a vote by 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Suppose the gentleman from New York make a request to that effect, that the debate be limited to 10 hours, 5 hours to be controlled by himself and 5 hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], and that the House meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am inclined to think if it were 4 hours to a side we would get along better, and I make that request.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman agrees to even 4 hours to a side, that would make it 8 hours. As soon as the agreement is entered into gentlemen will leave the Hall. A great many Members will not stay here for the debate, and if anyone, from time to time, wants to make a point of no quorum, it would add 3 or 4 hours to the time consumed; so that about 14 hours would be consumed in securing 10 hours' debate, and that would run us over until day after to-morrow. I am opposed to that. I want it understood, if there is an agreement upon a certain time, that we should come to a vote not later than a certain hour to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise? Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; for a question.

Mr. DICKINSON. Why can you not conclude this contest and debate to-day, instead of putting it over for two days? There is no good reason, in my judgment, why this contest should not be concluded to-day. It ought to be ended. It does not need four hours to a side.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will answer the gentleman from Missouri. The testimony in this case comprises two large volumes of closely printed matter. The briefs submitted to the committee, which were carefully considered, are voluminous. I can readily understand that considerable time must necessarily be occupied in the debate, if we intend to consider the evidence and the points of law in connection therewith. While, of course, I have my opinion, and every member of the Committee on Elections has his opinion, yet, in view of the fact that this large mass of testimony could not possibly have been read by the general membership of the House, I think it is but fair, if we are to consider the case in the judicial way in which contests ought to be considered, that reasonable debate on this side and on the other ought to be accorded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York permit me to suggest that in my experience in the House I do not recall any case where there was less than five hours' debate on a side, and in a number of cases, in addition, the question of consideration was raised, which took an additional length of time. We did not raise the question of consideration on this matter, because we thought we should thereby get more time for debate.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that my recollection agrees with that of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire if the gentleman from New York has any requests to make?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to four hours on a side, the time on one side to be controlled by myself and on the other by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman if he will not make it five hours on a side?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. With pleasure.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is this contest so unusual that it requires a longer time than other contests, to the extent that it should last for two days instead of one?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Missouri, if he was listening, undoubtedly understood that the recollection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the recollection of myself were in perfect accord. I recall the contests of years ago. I remember contests arising from congressional districts in St. Louis and, I think, from this particular district in St. Louis, and each of them took two days.

Mr. DICKINSON. And the gentleman thinks this ought to take two days?

Mr. MANN. I think there has never been a case where they had less than five hours on a side.

Mr. PALMER. McLean against Bowman took a good deal less than that.

Mr. BRYAN. And the MacDonald case.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I desire to modify my request. I ask that the debate be limited to nine hours, one half the time to be controlled by myself, the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], and that when this House adjourns this afternoon it adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the debate on this question be limited to nine hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], and that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, can we not have a gentleman's agreement that there will be no question raised as to a quorum during the debate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we did not make the point of no quorum this morning. No one can tell what may arise. We have no desire to be obstreperous about the matter. We are perfectly willing to have the debate go ahead.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will yield.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman couple with that a request that the final vote come upon these resolutions before we adjourn to-morrow, so that this case may not go over until Saturday?

Mr. MANN. I do not think that would be proper. The House might want to adjourn for some reason. Some Member might die, or something.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody would object under those circumstances.

Mr. MANN. You can not tell.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from New York say to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I am quite anxious that this case close to-morrow, and I am inclined to think from what I have heard that the other side are agreeable to that; but I do not know what may transpire, and do not like to bind myself.

Mr. FOSTER. If anything unusual should occur before that time comes to-morrow, there would be no trouble in arranging it.

Mr. MANN. But the House is quite able to sit here. It does not have to adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois remembers that it is sometimes difficult to get a quorum and keep it here at night.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleague will not insist on his suggestion. I can assure him that those of us on this side who have charge of this matter will not make points of no quorum and we will not obstruct the progress of this discussion in any way, and we will do our very best to bring this vote to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. FOSTER. With that understanding I shall not insist.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, this debate not to exceed nine hours, one half the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] is recognized for four and one-half hours.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, the contest in this case arises in the twelfth congressional district of the State of Missouri. That district is located in the city of St. Louis. It is composed of the fifth, sixth, seventh, sixteenth, and seventeenth wards and part of the fifteenth and twenty-third wards of that city.

There are no questions arising with regard to votes cast in the congressional district except only those in the fifth ward, and so we shall not be called upon to deal with any matter that relates to the congressional district outside of that ward.

At the election held in 1912 the returns from the entire congressional district gave to the contestee, Mr. Dyer, 11,981 votes and to the contestant, Michael J. Gill, 11,249 votes.

There are 17 election precincts in the fifth ward, and the conceded plurality for Gill in the territory outside of that ward was 666.

In those 17 precincts of the fifth ward the original returns gave to Mr. Dyer 2,213 and to Mr. Gill 815.

Some time after the returns were filed an application was made for a recount, and under the laws of Missouri a recount was had. That recount showed figures which indicated practically that the returns from at least seven precincts in the fifth ward were fraudulently made up. The recount gave Dyer a total of 2,009 and Gill a total of 994.

In the report of the committee, which I trust the Members have read, will be found a table showing the number of votes credited to the respective parties by the original returns and the number of votes credited to the respective parties by the recount in the several precincts. I propose now to confine my attention to the seven precincts that the committee, by a majority vote, found were tainted with fraud.

The second precinct gave to Dyer by the original return 199 and to Gill 5. On the recount it was ascertained that Dyer had only 106, while Gill had 73.

In the third precinct Dyer was credited with 67 and Gill with 49, while the recount showed that Dyer had 72 and Gill 82.

In the fourth precinct the original returns credited Dyer with 122 and Gill with 49, while the recount showed that Dyer had 110 and Gill 68.

Mr. BROCKSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Unless the gentleman has some very important question with reference to the precinct returns, I should prefer to continue stating the discrepancies between the original returns and the recount in these seven precincts.

Mr. BROCKSON. I consider it important; I do not know how the gentleman may consider it. I want to know if it appears in the hearings how these discrepancies occurred? For instance, the gentleman says one return showed 132, and on the recount it showed a little over 100.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I shall endeavor to discuss that phase at the proper time. In the fifth precinct the original returns gave Dyer 186 and Gill 23, while on the recount Dyer had 148 and Gill 57.

In the ninth precinct the returns gave Dyer 183 and Gill 3, while the recount gave to Dyer 139 and Gill 14.

In the fourteenth precinct the original returns show Dyer to have 148 votes and Gill 68, while the recount discloses that Dyer had only 128 and Gill 71.

So far as the seventeenth precinct is concerned, there was slight discrepancy, and I prefer to treat the seventeenth precinct by itself a little later on. Now, the great discrepancy in the figures, this great difference between the votes credited to the parties on the returns and on the recount, justified in connection with the other evidence, under the authorities applying to election cases, the rejection of the returns from these seven precincts. We find that all the Democratic and Republican judges of elections in the second precinct voted for Dyer. In the fourth precinct all the judges and clerks voted for Dyer. In the fifth precinct five judges and clerks voted for Dyer, and so in the ninth precinct. In the fourteenth district all the judges and clerks voted for Dyer, and in the seventeenth five of the judges and clerks voted for Dyer.

So that the committee find that in the precincts in which the committee found fraud to exist there was a combination between the Republican and the Democratic judges to make up the returns, as I have already stated to the House.

That is not all. The testimony shows that voters in these precincts, and the report mentions these voters by name, cast straight Democratic ballots, and when on the recount their ballots were examined, lo and behold, the name of Gill appears scratched and the name of Dyer inserted!

Now, that occurred in most of these precincts to which I have had reference. Picture, gentlemen, the Democratic and Republican judges combining and voting for the Republican candidate, making returns which on a recount were clearly shown to be false, and then, in connection with that, take the testimony that the committee found worthy of credence, showing that ballots cast for all the Democratic candidates were found on examination to have been tampered with and altered.

Then the committee found other circumstances to establish fraud. We find, for instance, in the seventeenth precinct that the challengers and watchers, who were lawfully in the polling place, were, without rhyme or reason, excluded from that polling place and not readmitted until the commissioners of election, who had been sent for, ordered their readmittance. That, of course, is a most suspicious circumstance taken in connection with all the other testimony in the case.

In that seventeenth precinct, Albert C. Ross, a voter, cast a straight Democratic ticket. His testimony is positive and unqualified that he voted for Gill, yet when you come to examine his ballot you find that Gill's name is scratched from it.

Charles Phillips voted a scratched ticket, but while he did that, he is positive he voted for Gill. He had scratched other Democratic candidates on the Democratic ticket, but he is positive that he voted for Gill. When you come to examine his ballot you discover that Gill's name has been scratched. So in the case of a voter named Stahl, who voted a straight Democratic ticket, and the testimony shows that Gill's name was scratched on it.

Another significant fact in connection with the conditions existing in the seventeenth precinct is that one of the Democratic judges of election wrote Dyer's name on 37 of the scratched ballots, and although 4 of that number were illiterates there is not a scintilla of proof in the case to show that the other 33 voters needed assistance either as illiterates or as physically disabled.

The law of Missouri permits a voter, if illiterate or physically disabled, to have the assistance of the judges of election, and to have one of the judges in the presence of the others write in the ballot the name of the candidate the voter desires to vote for. There is evidence in the case to show that men who were not illiterates came there, yet their ballots are scratched and names written on the ballot for these men.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. What does the Missouri law provide as to such ballots; that is, where they are written by the judge at the request of the voter, although the man may not be in the excepted class? As I understand, there were 37 scratched ballots.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In the seventeenth precinct.

Mr. BARTLETT. And Dyer's name was written on 37 ballots and only 4 of them were illiterate.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The evidence shows 4 were illiterate, and the evidence as to illiteracy or physical disability is lacking as to the other 33.

Mr. BARTLETT. And so you throw out the 37 votes?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The committee threw out the entire precinct, but what the gentleman from Georgia refers to is only one piece of the evidence on which the finding of fraud is predicated.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think there should be some evidence as to the other 33 ballots? You have 4 illiterates, but you have no evidence as to the other 33.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There is no evidence on that point.

Mr. RUPLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. RUPLEY. In answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] the gentleman from New York failed to state that the officers failed to subscribe to the affidavits.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; the evidence is complete on that subject, not only in these seven precincts that the committee threw out but in other precincts, too, the condition to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania alludes existed, namely, men went into the polling places and the judges wrote the names of candidates upon the ballot, and they scratched the names from the ballot regardless of the statute which provides that the voter, in order to have assistance, shall make oath that he is illiterate or physically disabled. I think that answers the question. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that, under the laws of the State of Missouri, it is possible to ascertain how a particular elector voted by examining the ballots afterwards?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes. I am glad the gentleman from Michigan asked that question. The ballot, as given to the voter when he goes into the polling place, has the names of the candidates for the respective offices printed on it. There is a line underneath the printed name. The ballots are numbered, and the numbers are preserved on the stubs——

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I meant to say the number is recorded on the poll books. When a recount takes place, you can, by comparing the number of the ballot with the number recorded in the book ascertain who cast that ballot. In other words, there is not that secrecy preserved that would be preserved, in my State, the State of New York, where there is an absolute secrecy of the ballot, as I think there ought to be; but in Missouri it will be observed that when you come to open the ballots you can identify the voters with their ballots and ascertain by evidence whether the ballot was scratched by the voter or whether it was written on by some one else.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman said there was not absolute secrecy of the ballot in Missouri.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There is not.

Mr. BOOHER. It is absolutely a secret ballot. After the judges of the election have examined and counted the votes the ballots are put into the ballot boxes and the ballot boxes are locked and sealed and deposited in the city of St. Louis with the election commissioners. The ballots are then kept for one year, and if no contest has been brought they are destroyed, and the ballot box can not be opened under any circumstances, except under an order of the court or where a committee of Congress opens them in a contested-election case.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman is right so far as he has gone, and I am also right. We are both right. In other words, when the ballots are opened, either by direction of the commissioners or the court, or whoever has authority to direct a recount, or if they are opened by direction of this House, the secrecy of the ballot is destroyed, for you can identify that ballot with the voter, tell who voted it, and ascertain on investigation whether it was properly or improperly scratched.

Mr. BOOHER. There is no question about that.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman has referred to ballots on which the name of Mr. Gill was scratched. I will ask him how, under the law of Missouri, a voter may scratch his ballot. How is it done?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The voter may draw a line through the name of the candidate, and then, if he chooses to vote for some one else, write underneath the printed name so scratched the name of the one for whom he desires to vote.

Mr. PALMER. Can he do it by marking a cross opposite the printed name of the other candidate?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is not the way it is done.

Mr. PALMER. It was done by writing in the name?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It was done by writing in the name.

Mr. PALMER. In these precincts in which there were a large number of scratched ballots, Mr. Gill's name having been scratched, was there any evidence to show any similarity of handwriting in the name of Mr. Dyer being written on the ballot?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There was.

Mr. PALMER. Was it shown that there was similarity?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; that was attempted to be accounted for, however.

Mr. PALMER. Were the voters themselves examined as to whether they had written the name of Mr. Dyer?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Some of them were, but not all.

Mr. PALMER. And there is evidence on that subject?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There is some evidence on that subject.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I have read the report of the committee and the views of the minority, in addition to listening to what has been said by the gentleman in regard to the secrecy of the ballot in Missouri, as far as it goes, and as it is in his State. Take the Missouri ballot, with the stub and the man's name on the stub and his name on the ballot——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. His name is not on a stub. It is in a book, and the number is recorded in the poll book.

Mr. RAKER. Very well. There is a record to show the ballot the man cast.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. When that ballot is taken out upon a contest in the courts of Missouri or here in Congress, is the man who cast the ballot competent to testify or permitted to testify in regard to how he voted that ballot? That is not so in our State, and I do not think it ought to be so. I want to know how it is in Missouri.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. We are not fully advised what the courts of Missouri have decided with reference to the right to call for the statement of the voter as to how he voted, but there is authority to justify the reception of evidence of the voter who is willing to testify for whom he voted.

Mr. RAKER. Was the question raised before the committee, or is there any question about it, that when the voter is brought before the committee or the court, and this ballot is handed to him as his ballot, he may testify that that is his ballot, and may also testify as to the method and mode and condition in which it was in when he cast it?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In the hearings before the committee there no question was raised as to that. Had such question been raised I think the committee would have considered it and passed on it, but no question was raised before our committee with reference to that.

Mr. RAKER. I understood 12 of these men were brought before the committee and testified—or at least I so take it from the report—as to the condition of the ballot when they deposited it in the box. I want to know whether your committee considered that testimony of those voters after they had marked their ballot and put it in the box and then came before the notary when the evidence was taken?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman mean whether our committee considered the admissibility of that testimony?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; and whether the committee considered it in rendering its report?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No question was raised by counsel as to that, and of course we were not called upon to pass upon it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is no question of the right of the party whose ballot is in question to testify in that particular under the laws of the State of Missouri?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. As to whether he can be compelled to testify, that is quite another question.

Mr. RAKER. That is what I am asking.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Where he is brought as a witness and asked to testify as to whether or not his ballot, at the time it is accepted in the contest, is in the same condition it was when he cast it, he is qualified to testify as to the facts.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, is he, under the law of Missouri, compelled to testify if he is brought before the court?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not recall that question has ever been raised.

Mr. WATSON. Might I be permitted to state this——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. I would say to the gentleman from California that the Missouri courts have passed incidently upon that question, but without having the exact point before it. If I may so express it, they have expounded it obiter dicta, and have settled the question in that way.

Mr. RAKER. Which way?

Mr. WATSON. In the case of The State v. Taylor (220 Mo., 618), decided in 1909, a case in which election officers were attempted to be prosecuted for their fraudulent acts in an election, the Supreme Court of Missouri held that while the ballot boxes were permitted to be opened and ballots inspected only in case of a contested election; and if it was desired to open the boxes and inspect the ballots in aid of a prosecution for frauds committed by election officers, in making false and fraudulent returns, it could be done only by amending the constitution. In Two hundred and thirty-eighth Missouri, page 561, in the case of Gant against Brown, decided in 1911, the court held, overruling a long line of decisions which guaranteed the secrecy of the ballot, that—

> Not only are the ballots and poll books competent, but a witness may testify as to how he voted, as tending to show fraud or no fraud.

The court declined to say that a witness was compellable to testify, but simply said that he was competent to testify.

Mr. DICKINSON. May I ask the gentleman from New York——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will not the gentleman permit me——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman from Missouri will kindly allow me to complete my statement of facts. I do not want to take up too much time, lest I deprive others of the opportunity they desire to speak.

Mr. DICKINSON. But in the interest of——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman will pardon me until I finish. I do not like to take up too much time myself. I want to yield time to other gentlemen, and if I am so frequently interrupted with reference to what the decisions of Missouri are, that do not play much part in this case, I am afraid that the gentlemen to whom I would like to yield will not get as much time as I would like to yield them.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit a question as bearing on the facts in the case?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understood the gentleman to say in the seventeenth precinct five of the judges and clerks voted for Dyer——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. So in every precinct.

Mr. BARTLETT. Five of them were shown to have voted for Dyer—three Republicans and two Democrats—and one Democrat not voting at all; is that right?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is not clear in my mind. The fact is that five voted; the gentleman is right so far.

Mr. BARTLETT. Who appointed these judges of election and how were they divided up? Who were the Democrats suggested to the judges—who suggested them? Did not the candidate of the Democratic Party have the right to suggest——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman means the candidate for Congress?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; the candidate does not suggest, so far as we know. The respective political parties through their representatives suggest names and the election authorities appoint so that the respective political parties have equal representation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not the candidate on the Democratic ticket, but those judges were suggested by the organization of the party to which he belonged.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question as to fact?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. In the summing up of these districts, in this particular fifth ward, in the fourth precinct, the official returns showed 181 votes for both Dyer and Gill?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In the fourth ward, the gentleman says?

Mr. HOWARD. In the fourth precinct—132 for Dyer and 49 for Gill. The recount showed 110 for Dyer and 68 for Gill?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. There were two other candidates, and a recount of the official returns showed no difference in the ballots cast for those two candidates.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman has reference to the labor and socialistic candidates?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes. Now, the difference between the official returns and the recount showed a difference between 172 and 181 ballots, or 9 ballots. Were there ballots thrown out or not counted to account for this discrepancy of nine between the recount and the official returns?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The thing that we found on that point is the wide discrepancy, namely, that this abnormal discrepancy exists which you can not account for except on the theory, when you consider the entire testimony in the case and the peculiar conditions existing in those six precincts, that there a combination was formed for the purpose of making up these inaccurate and fraudulent returns.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for one question for information I desire to get?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. I understand from the statement made and from the record that the election officers are appointed by a competent qualified authority under the laws of the State of Missouri. That is right, is it not?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. They are appointed by due authority.

Mr. RAKER. Now, they appointed so many Democrats and so many Republicans.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; three Democrats and three Republicans.

Mr. RAKER. Now, does the gentleman in his report here contend or hold it as a legal proposition that because all of the Republicans and all of the Democrats voted for the Republican nominee that that is evidence of fraud or collusion?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Decidedly not.

Mr. RAKER. All right, then.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Decidedly not; but the fact was stated by me for the committee in order that later on I may make clear just how that combination or why the combination was probably formed. The gentleman will pardon me for not yielding further until——

Mr. LINTHICUM. May I ask a question?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I can not resist the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I notice you say that Vortriede wrote Dyer's name on 37 ballots of the seventeenth precinct, and that 4 of those were found to be illiterate, but that the other 33 you did not find were illiterate or physically disabled? Is that correct

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; in an absence of testimony on that point.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The question I had in mind was this: If you found 4 of them to be illiterate and went into it that deep, why did you not go into it deep enough to find whether the other 33 were illiterate or physically disabled?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I said when we opened the case that the testimony was exceedingly voluminous, and I apprehend that the taking of that mass of testimony comprising two thousand and odd pages, must have consumed all the time that the statute provides for the taking of testimony in the preliminary stages of a contest.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But in your report you presume 33 to be illegally cast, because you threw them out. Why would not you conclude they were legally cast? Why would not that be the presumption?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If there is any presumption that follows, it would rather be the presumption of illegality, for the reason that the statute of Missouri providing that in order for the voter to be assisted he shall make oath to the fact that he is illiterate or is so physically disabled as to require assistance was uniformly disregarded and violated. The committee found from the testimony that in these seven precincts, as in some other precincts of the fifth ward, there was a general disregard of the statute.

Now, the gentlemen have asked as to how this combination between the judges and the clerks of election on both the political sides came about. The conclusion at which the committee arrived, that there was this, which by some has been called "unholy alliance," and by the majority of the committee called a fraudulent combination, is strengthened when the motive is considered that was behind the making of the false returns.

In 1910 Mr. Dyer and one Thomas Kinney were candidates for Representative in Congress. Mr. Gill was a voter in the congressional district, and he voted at the election in 1910. Now, Thomas Kinney was an influential Democratic leader in the fifth ward, and when Mr. Dyer was declared elected Kinney entered a contest, and pending that a recount of the ballots was had. Kinney evidently concluded that he would not again be a candidate for Congress, and Mr. Gill was nominated at the primaries. There were two candidates for the Democratic nomination—one Judge Arnold and Mr. Gill—and Gill appealed, as the evidence shows, to his friends and others, among them Thomas Kinney——

Mr. ELDER. Just a question there. Was it Thomas Kinney or his brother?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It was Thomas Kinney.

Mr. ELDER. As I understand, the Kinney who was a candidate at the previous election died.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Thomas Kinney was a candidate at the election in 1910.

Mr. ELDER. Did he not die?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman will allow me to continue the statement——

Mr. ELDER. I do not want to interrupt you.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If I am constantly interrupted I can not get at the facts.

Mr. ELDER. I do not want to interrupt you, but I absolutely understood a different condition of facts.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. So Gill was nominated. Thomas Kinney died. Michael Kinney succeeded him, and Thomas Egan, the brother-in-law of Michael Kinney, became the Democratic committeeman of the ward. Rumor had it that Gill had scratched Kinney in the 1910 election and voted for Dyer. Some question arose as to that. Michael Kinney at first doubted the truth of the rumor, but became convinced of the fact afterwards. A recount of the ballot had been had. The ballot of Mr. Gill was identified in the way that I have already indicated that ballots could be identified, and it was found that Thomas Kinney's name was scratched and the name of Mr. Dyer had been inserted.

Now, then, Gill was requested to appear at a committee meeting in the fifth ward and explain that circumstance, and the committee not feeling that his explanation was satisfactory, Michael Kinney and his brother-in-law, Egan—Michael Kinney was then occupying a seat in the State senate, and Egan then a committeeman—went about actively to secure the defeat of Gill.

Mr. McCOY. Will the gentleman yield, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. In a moment, if the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. McCOY. I just want to ask a question in that connection. At that meeting at which Gill appeared and explained that ballot, was he not asked to retire and let some one else be nominated on the ticket?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There is evidence on that point.

Mr. McCOY. Is not the evidence to that effect?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not recall that the evidence is precisely to that effect, but there is evidence to indicate that that fact is so.

Mr. McCOY. Was it not stated at the summing up by Mr. Dyer before your committee that that was the fact, and that his statement was not in any way controverted by the attorney for Mr. Gill?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from New Jersey is right.

Now, there is no denial that Kinney and Egan passed the word along to do everything that lay in man's power to secure the defeat of Gill. Naturally, of course, Michael, the surviving brother of "Tom," felt vengeful against Gill.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. And the inspectors of election doubtless concluded that they were going to please Kinney and Egan.

Mr. McCOY. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. They were going to please them, even if they had to falsify the reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. McCOY. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCOY. On the statement of fact I would just like to ask a question. Did not Mr. Dyer state in summing up before the committee, and did not his statement go unchallenged to the effect that Michael Kinney stated he disliked to take any part in the matter, because it affected his brother, and that he did not take any part in it, and that it was Egan only that passed the word along that Gill should be defeated?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, reading through the testimony and carefully considering it, the committee concluded that both of these men combined—and they do not deny it—to bring about Gill's defeat. I repeat that it was in consequence of this factional strife and the activity that was manifested by both Egan and Kinney that the inspectors—and I regret that I have to so severely criticize the Democratic inspectors, but it is nevertheless the fact—the Democratic inspectors concluded one way to bring about the defeat of Gill was to make up the returns in the way already stated, and the Republican inspectors, of course, concluded it was a good thing to accept the fruits of that fraud. So evidently both combined and made up these fraudulent returns.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield first to my colleague on the committee [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask my colleague if there is anything in the record of this case that would warrant the last statement that he has made, that the Republican and Democratic inspectors had anything to do with the making up of these returns?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, I would not like to say they did an affirmative act. It may be that they simply closed their eyes when their eyes should have been opened, and with closed eyes and open hands accepted what the Democrats tendered.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield to one other question while he is on that point?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is there any evidence in the record anywhere by any witness tending to show that there was a combination between the Republican judges and the Democratic judges?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Not in express direct testimony. Of course the gentleman from Illinois, being an excellent lawyer, with a long experience at the bar, will bear me out in the proposition that it does not necessarily require positive direct testimony to establish a fact. Circumstances linked unto circumstances strong enough to warrant a reasonable and a prudent man to conclude that a thing existed will establish the fact. I think my colleague from Illinois will grant that that proposition is correct.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Has the contestant, Mr. Gill, in any place in the testimony, under oath denied that he voted against the Democratic nominee, Thomas Kinney, in 1910? Has he denied that under oath?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will speak of the facts called for by the gentleman's inquiry. When Gill was before the committee—at any rate, at some time while the question was being raised as to whether Gill scratched Kinney and voted for Dyer—Gill said when his ballot was examined that there must be some mistake.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. But that was not under oath?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; there was no express denial.

Mr. CARLIN and Mr. HOWARD rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will yield to the one who was formerly on my committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN].

Mr. CARLIN. What is the political history of this district? Is it a Republican district or a Democratic district?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The history of that district, I think, will be found in a number of cases that have come before this House. That district has always given a lot of trouble to the House—Republican and Democratic.

Mr. CARLIN. But that does not answer my question. I was trying to ascertain whether or not the district is Republican or Democratic; whether the record discloses that fact.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The district, I think it fair to say, is normally Democratic.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if there is any testimony before the committee as to who called these ballots? Was it the Democratic manager or the Republican manager?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The Democratic ballots were passed over to the Democratic judges.

Mr. HOWARD. And the Republican ballots were passed over to the Republican managers?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I presume that is the way it was done.

Mr. HOWARD. There was no such thing as one man calling the ballot and laying it aside and the talesman recording it?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I can not answer as to that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Senator Kinney, the candidate for Congress, died. His brother and Egan were interested in defeating Gill and electing Dyer. Is that right?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is right.

Mr. RAKER. Now, is there any evidence before the committee showing that these men—Egan and Kinney—had any influence in those precincts over the voters there?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Oh, undoubtedly. They had considerable influence. Tom Kinney—that is conceded by both contestant and contestee—was a great power in the fifth ward. He had been in close touch with the people of the district, a district made up of a very much mixed population, and Michael Kinney presumably had more or less of that kind of influence after his brother's death.

Mr. RAKER. One more question, and then I shall be through. Is there any evidence before the committee that Kinney, the brother of the deceased candidate, and Egan brought this to the notice of the voters of that district?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. They say that they did. That is the evidence. They say that they went from house to house and informed different people that the conditions I referred to existed.

Mr. RAKER. And asked them to vote against Gill?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; and asked them to vote against Gill. There is also evidence that they informed the judges of election. The judges of election knew of this, and there must be something to account for this remarkable discrepancy that you notice—not in one precinct, not in two, but in six precincts, at least, of the fifth ward. For instance, we note a remarkable discrepancy in the second precinct. We may say that is a mistake, or that only those judges in the second precinct had concluded to make an inaccurate return. But when you find six precincts all exhibiting the same kind of discrepancies, and when you find that those returns had been made up without regard to truth, then what conclusion will you reach in regard to the proposition that an unlawful combination existed? These many judges in these six precincts must have had one mind, and that one mind in all human probability was controlled by some master mind.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman kindly state if he has any evidence as to who had the election officers appointed in that particular ward?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have already said that the representatives of the organization had them appointed.

Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania. Who were the representatives of the organization?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, in the fifth ward, I presume, it was Egan, because he was the committeeman. If it was not Egan, it was Kinney. I am not certain which. But the organization, controlled by Kinney and Egan, had the Democratic judges and clerks no doubt appointed.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. Is there anything in the record to show that there were any other candidates on the Democratic ticket considerably scratched?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There were other candidates upon the ticket here, and in some instances they were scratched. I have already stated, if the gentleman took note, that some witnesses testified that although they scratched others on the Democratic ticket they did not scratch Gill, and then the ballots of those men disclose the scratching of Gill, and in some instances the writing in of the name of Dyer.

Mr. ALLEN. As to a great many of these ballots upon which Gill's name was scratched, was not the name of the Democratic candidate for sheriff also scratched?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Oh, there were names of candidates for judges and sheriffs and others scratched.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I know my colleague wants to be absolutely fair.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Absolutely fair; and I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I believe this case, as all election cases, ought to be decided in a calm, deliberate, judicial way and not in any partisan spirit, and to that end I willingly yield for the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. McKENZIE. I agree with the gentleman from New York fully; but in regard to the gentleman's statement about the judges of election having been influenced by the committeemen, Mr. Egan and Mr. Michael Kinney, is there any testimony in the record that would warrant the statement that Mr. Egan or Mr. Kinney had instructed these judges, or talked with them about what they should do with the ballots in making up the returns?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The conclusion is deducible from all the proven facts.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the record show it?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The conclusion is deducible from the facts and circumstances that either they had been instructed, or else they were doing a thing which they conceived would be very pleasing to the powers that were, namely, the Kinney organization, to bring about Gill's defeat. My colleague on the committee, Judge WATSON, points out to me testimony at page 1166 of the record. It is said in the reply brief of the contestant:

> Egan, in his testimony, said that he did not have to instruct the judges and clerks of election in the fifth ward; that—
>
> And now I quote from words in the record—> they understood anyhow what to do—to vote against him and help any of the parties that did not know how.
> That is the testimony.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. At page 1189, Egan, in his testimony, says:

> Q. How many of the judges and clerks did you invite to that meeting?
>
> A. Never invited any of the judges and clerks. We never bothered with the judges and clerks at all. They knew what to do themselves.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman inadvertently made a statement that is incorrect, although I may be mistaken in regard to it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If I am in error I will be only too well pleased to withdraw my statement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understood the gentleman to state that the election judges were appointed by the committeemen. Under the laws of Missouri are they not appointed by the election commissioners?

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no; I will tell the gentleman how it is. We do not have election commissioners in any place except Kansas City and St. Louis. The chairmen of the various committees hand in the names. The Republican committee select a certain number of names and give them to the election commission. The Democratic committee do the same, and from the two major parties the judges of election may be selected by the election commission.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then the commissioners, in fact, appoint them?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes; they select them on the recommendation of the committeemen of the political parties.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are not obliged to do anything of the sort?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The election commissioners of the city of St. Louis, the bipartisan board, have the selection of the judges and clerks of election for the city of St. Louis. The Democratic commissioners select the Democratic judges and clerks of election and the Republicans select theirs, and no one can compel them to select anybody else. They receive recommendations from the committees, but they do not always follow those recommendations by any means.

Mr. BOOHER. After an examination of the statute governing elections in the city of St. Louis, I find the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] has stated correctly the manner in which the appointment of election officers is made.

Does not the State law of Missouri say that these committees in the city of St. Louis shall select the names and send them to the election commissioners?

Mr. DYER. Absolutely not, I will say to my colleague.

Mr. BOOHER. And from that list the judges are appointed? They may for good cause reject any of those names, but there must be a hearing, and they must be rejected for good cause.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BOOHER. I will get the law.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Not now. I want to say something at this point without being interrupted.

When the committee concluded the returns were false and fraudulent—and that conclusion was arrived at only after reading the testimony and giving very careful consideration to the briefs—when the committee concluded that the law required the elimination of the returns from the seven precincts, somehow it was given out that the committee had taken, as they really did take, a tentative vote on the question of the elimination of the returns. When I said that the committee had concluded, I meant they had tentatively only reached a conclusion. Then an application was immediately made by the contestee for leave to take testimony to show the true state of the vote in the precincts that the committee by tentative vote indicated should be excluded. The application was heard and considered, and the committee by a majority vote denied the application of the contestee.

I am here only as the organ of the committee. As its chairman I represent it to bring the views of the majority to the House; but following the statement in the report I want to say that there was a difference of opinion as to whether the application should have been granted or not. The committee's report states the facts with reference to that division of opinion. I was one who dissented from the action of the majority of the committee. I took the view that inasmuch as the burden of proof shifted to the contestee when the returns were eliminated, it was but proper to give the contestee the privilege and opportunity within limited time to present evidence with respect to the votes cast for him and for the contestant. But the majority of the committee differed with me and my two colleagues, Messrs. MCKENZIE and SHREVE, and so I am here as the organ of the committee to present their views.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. With pleasure.

Mr. WATSON. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether he would be willing to sign a report stating that the incumbent was not entitled to his seat on this floor, and that the contestant was entitled to his seat, simply because a majority of the committee asked him to do it?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly not; but the chairman of the committee would abide the judgment of the House respecting the action of the committee in denying the motion of the contestee. If that decision is affirmed by the House, then there will be only one thing to pass on, and that is on the vote in the congressional district eliminating the rejected precincts. In other words, if the House affirms the action of the committee, notwithstanding my dissent, to which I have referred, then it would appear Gill is entitled to the seat and not Mr. Dyer.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman were the contestee in this case, would he think, on the facts and the law as he understands the law applicable to the facts, that the House would do justice if it should declare that the gentleman from New York was not entitled to his seat?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am stating the facts in as fair a way as I think it possible to state them. The gentleman from Wisconsin, who served with me on the Committee on Elections, is thoroughly competent to judge for himself what the law is and what the facts are in the case.

Mr. COOPER. I am competent to judge from what I know of the gentleman's character and the way he answers my question that he thinks Mr. Dyer ought to keep his seat.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Wisconsin ought not to credit me with statements I have not made. I want to pay the gentleman the compliment of saying that his skill as a lawyer and his ability exhibited here and in the Committee on Elections heretofore convince me he does not need instruction from anyone as to what the law requires. I do mean to say distinctly, and I wish to repeat it, that in my mind there is not a question about the fraudulent character of the returns, and there is not a question in my mind that under the law as it obtained in election cases these returns had to be eliminated. The question that was passed on in the committee on the motion of Mr. Dyer and on my motion, as stated in the committee report, is for this House fairly to determine.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. With pleasure.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I take it from what the gentleman from New York has said that in his judgment the House should adopt the resolution presented by the minority.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Michigan is in error; I said no such thing.

Mr. BRYAN. Which resolution does the gentleman believe ought to be adopted?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the gentleman will allow me to go on, I think he will have no difficulty in determining.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is fair to interrogate a member of the committee in this way.

Mr. MCCOY. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MCCOY. Does the gentleman propose to argue the legal proposition of throwing out all the votes of the precincts, or has he in his argument said all that he wants to say upon that point?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I may want to say something in regard to it later. In my mind, after examining the authorities, I concluded that the facts in connection with these returns justified the majority of the committee in eliminating the precincts.

Mr. MCCOY. Eliminating all the votes in the seven precincts. On that point I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is there any precedent covering a case in which it appears that the contestant in the previous congressional election voted against his party ticket?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not know of any.

Mr. MCCOY. In other words, does not the fact in this particular case that it was discovered that the contestant had at a previous election voted against his party ticket make this case entirely different from any case that has come before the House or been reported at any time?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not recall any case that showed that peculiar phase.

Mr. MCCOY. Is not that the difference between this case and others, so that on the question of throwing out all the votes of the precincts it ought to be taken into consideration that these votes that were counted for Mr. Dyer were probably honestly cast and honestly counted because there was a good reason why Democrats from that district should vote for a Republican?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. They could not have been honestly counted. The gentleman from New Jersey, I think, will realize the fact that if on opening the ballots and finding they were tampered with, and fraudulently altered, and finds such a wonderful discrepancy as is disclosed by the table printed in the report, would not the gentleman say these returns are so inaccurate and unreliable that under the authorities they should be rejected?

Mr. McCOY. I am asking if this case is not differentiated from the others by the one fact that exists in this case, and, so far as I know, did not exist in any of the other cases—that the contestant had voted against his party ticket the year before, and therefore it made a different situation, at any rate so far as making it perfectly proper to grant the request of Mr. Dyer that he be permitted to show by actual examination of the other ballots what the fact was?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman must judge for himself, if he differs with the majority of the committee.

Mr. McCOY. I was asking whether there is any real precedent for this case based on the facts?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have already answered that that particular phase does not appear in any other reported case I have found, but the gentleman from New Jersey will realize that each case must stand on its own bottom, and we do not always have two cases exactly alike.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I would like to ask a question on the facts. As I understand it, there is not what we call a secret ballot under the Missouri law.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That has been fully stated here.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. If it was permitted to take further testimony as to these precincts in controversy it would be possible to subpœna every voter there and compare his testimony as he might give it with his ballot, and in that respect is this case not vitally different from any of the cases that were referred to by the chairman of the committee a few minutes ago as precedents?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman asks the same question as did the gentleman from New Jersey, and of course I should make the same reply.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Just one moment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me, I desire to conclude very soon, because if I do not I shall do injustice to others who desire to speak.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. But I ask a question of facts, whether any of those precedents have that feature present?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have already said that there were none that we could find. There may be some in the books, but we have not found any.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I take it from the reply which the gentleman from New York made to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] that it is admitted in this case that the contestant, Mr. Gill, a year ago or more, voted against the Democratic nominee?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The facts have already been stated in regard to the statement made by Egan and by Kinney and their followers.

Mr. COOPER. And that was generally known by the Democratic electors in that district?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It was stated to them.

Mr. COOPER. Would the gentleman, then, think it surprising under all the circumstances that a considerable number of Democrats would not vote for a Democrat that bolted his own party ticket the year before?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Looking over the history of the contests that have come from that portion of St. Louis, nothing would surprise me.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to page 3 of his report. It there says:

> In the second precinct all the judges and clerks of election voted for Dyer. They returned 199 votes for Dyer and 5 votes for Gill, while the ballots on the recount disclosed that Dyer only had 106 votes and Gill had 73 votes.

I think that is a very important statement.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But it is a fact.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to have the gentleman elaborate more upon that.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What more can I elaborate than that we found this abnormal discrepancy that could not possibly have foundation in sincerity or truth.

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree with the gentleman, but was it a Democratic precinct?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not know. I think it was.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly.

Mr. McCOY. Then, was not the fraud, whatever it was, corrected by the recount?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No. I am very glad the gentleman from New Jersey asked that question, because that question really was one the committee was called upon carefully to consider. If that had been all, if there had been only these discrepancies, the committee would probably not have reached the conclusion it did, and perhaps the committee, from whose decision I dissented, might not have reached the conclusion to deny the application of the contestee to give further evidence; but do you not see there were other facts in connection with the votes in those seven precincts? There is the case of tampering with the ballots; there is the case of manipulation of the ballots; there is the case of the seventeenth precinct, where, though there is not much discrepancy between the return and the recount, there is the exclusion of the judges and the clerks from the polling places, without the slightest reason; and there is the evidence of men who say that they cast straight ballots, and these ballots are found to be scratched. In this combination of facts and circumstances you find evidence of fraud, and you can not get away from the fact that these returns are, within the language of the authorities, so utterly unreliable that they must be excluded.

Mr. McCOY. Is it not a fact that testimony was taken in regard to 54 ballots, as to whether the voter had really voted the particular ballot, and that in only 18 of them out of 54 did the voter stand up and testify that his ballot had been manipulated or tampered with, or that he had not voted it?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Just the exact number I do not recall. The committee's report, which the gentleman from New Jersey has, I believe, carefully read, states the names of the witnesses who proved that their ballots had been tampered with and altered. I desire to add before I conclude that it is not claimed or charged that Mr. Dyer in any way, personally, participated in the fraud. No charge of personal misconduct attaches to him. But though he had no knowledge of the fraud, yet if fraud was committed and the returns tainted with it, the duty of the committee was plain, and in pursuance of that duty it rejected the returns and submits the matter to the House for the dispassionate judgment of its Members.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman from New York in regard to his statement that the challengers and watchers were excluded from the polls, and so forth.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That is so, is it not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that the evidence in the record discloses that in only one precinct did that occur, and that the commissioners of election were immediately notified and that they came to the polling place and instructed the judges they must permit those men to remain in there, and the men were permitted to come in and remain there until the polls were closed?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I said nearly half an hour ago that these challengers and watchers were only readmitted when the commissioners of election came and ordered their readmission.

Mr. McKENZIE. But that occurred in only one precinct?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I think that is so.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Just for a question.

Mr. FALCONER. At whose solicitation were these 56 witnesses referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY] brought before the committee? In other words, were they supposed to be Dyer witnesses or Gill witnesses?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, Gill introduced witnesses to show fraud.

Mr. FALCONER. As I understand, out of 54 only 18 swore to fraud.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Oh, I think there are more; those that we state in our report had their ballots manipulated. I do not know that, but the gentleman can figure it out from the report. I think I have taken longer than I intended.

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For a question.

Mr. HULINGS. Is there no way to purge this ballot except by throwing out the whole affair? Are not the circumstances such and the law such in the State of Missouri that it would be possible by an examination there to discover who did cast legal ballots and who did not?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I think I have answered that question. I have told the gentleman that, in the judgment of a majority of the committee, the application of the contestee was refused. I have told the gentleman so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned he dissented and that two others dissented, but that the committee thought, for reasons that appear in the report, as well as for other reasons some members of the committee may wish to state, that the application made by Mr. Dyer should be denied, and hence the application being denied the only thing left for the committee to determine was what the vote would be with the seven precincts eliminated, and it would stand as follows in the fifth ward:

For Dyer	1,185
For Gill	586
Dyer over Gill in the fifth ward	599
Gill's plurality in district outside of fifth ward	666
Deducting Dyer's plurality in the fifth ward with the 7 precincts eliminated leaves Gill in the congressional district a plurality of	67

In consequence of which the committee reported the resolutions now before the House. I now yield——

Mr. HULINGS. Will the gentleman permit——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Not now.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I prefer to yield to my colleague on the committee, and I now yield——

Mr. CRAMTON. It is very brief.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE (continuing). Twenty minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I desire to state I did not expect the gentleman to yield to me until some one had spoken on the other side.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the yielding. I think the gentleman from Virginia is right, because I think the other side ought to have the opportunity to be now heard.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question? The gentleman has just said——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I shall take the floor again perhaps for a very few moments at the close, and then the gentleman can ask his question.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is just a question of fact.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is my purpose to discuss this matter calmly and to try to convince you of the justice of the request of the contestee to be permitted to take the testimony in question.

The matter of determining the right of a Member to hold his seat in the House of Representatives is one of such vital importance to the Member whose privilege is questioned that we ought, in passing upon the case, to give it our most earnest and careful consideration, far removing from us all partisan predjudice and bias, having but one purpose in view—that being the doing of justice.

For myself I am sure, in the consideration of this case before our committee and at this time, I have no partisan feeling and bear no ill will toward the contestant. We have been unable to bring in a unanimous report in this case, due to the fact that we reason from different premises, and therefore are unable to agree upon the law as applied to the facts in the case, upon which there is but little dispute.

It must be conceded at the outset that this is a unique case and perhaps has no parallel in all the contested cases presented to this body in that the contestee, Mr. Dyer, is not charged with any wrongdoing, and that if the conduct of the voters and election officials complained of by the contestant were reprehensible such acts complained of were not in any way chargeable to Mr. Dyer or his political friends in the Republican Party, but that the wrongs and frauds, if wrongs and frauds there were, in the conduct of this election are chargeable wholly to the men in Mr. Gill's own party, and which fact is frankly and freely admitted by the leading men in the Democratic Party, against whom contestant makes the charge of defeating him.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the contention of the majority of the committee in this case is that in a territory nominally Democratic, but which gave an overwhelming majority for the Republican candidate, Mr. Dyer, coupled with the conduct of some of the election officials, as shown by the testimony, at once raises the presumption of conspiracy and fraud.

We of the minority of the committee, in the light of the facts as shown by the testimony, are forced to the conclusion that any return from the disputed territory which did not carry with it a repudiation of the contestant would have been contrary to reason and the usual conduct of human affairs and would have at once raised the presumption that the will of the voters had been frustrated and that fraud must have been practiced. Thus we widely differ. To our mind many of the instances cited simply show the real intention of the voters and the customary conduct of election officials and which do not per se indicate fraud and criminal conspiracy. The majority of the committee have construed such conduct as being evidence of criminal and fraudulent intent on the part of the voters and election officials.

We of the minority emphatically hold that the contestant has failed to make out such a case as would justify the House in unseating the contestee. We concede he has shown that certain election officials were guilty of conduct not warranted by law; but that such conduct was of a character that would change the result of the election as expressed by the returns is not borne out by the evidence. We of the minority have maintained that it was incumbent upon the contestant to prove his contention that he was elected and that it is not the province of the committee or the House to supply by assumption that which the contestant could have proven beyond any question if his contentions are sound.

Mr. Speaker, in order that the contentions of the minority of the committee may be fully understood, I purpose to discuss at some length the law and the facts pertinent to this case, and, first, I wish to call attention to some of the provisions of the law in the State of Missouri relative to the holding of elections. Under the law of Missouri a general registration of the voters is required before an election. In the city of St. Louis the election officials are appointed by the election commissioners, a bipartisan board, an equal number in each precinct being selected from the two leading political parties, and these judges and clerks must be residents of the precincts in which they serve. The law further provides that the judges of election may assist illiterate voters, but in such cases the law provides that an oath shall be administered to the voter as to his illiteracy or inability to mark his ballot. It further provides that in counting the ballots each judge shall count them. Each party ballot is printed on a separate sheet of paper, as is also each proposition submitted to be voted on amending the constitution. The voter is handed a bundle containing one of each of the different party ballots and also one of each of the propositions submitted at that election, from which to make his selection. The ballot is numbered and the corresponding number placed opposite the voter's name on the poll book, thereby identifying each voter's ballot. I make this statement of the law in order that you may keep the provisions in mind as we proceed with the argument.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand, the ballot has to correspond with the number in the poll book in the voter's name?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is that number written on the ballot?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINGO. So that on a subsequent recount those who are making the recount can take the number on the ballot and refer to the poll book and see how any particular man voted?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINGO. That is the fact.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If the gentleman will permit, did I understand the gentleman to say one of the election managers is required to count each ballot?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the law; each judge shall count the ballot.

I now desire to call your attention to the geographical location of this particular congressional district. This district lies wholly within the city of St. Louis, and is composed of the fifth, sixth, seventh, sixteenth, seventeenth, and parts of the fifteenth and twenty-third wards. The controversy in this case is confined to the fifth ward, and, as we set out in the minority report, it is one of the "river wards." It is a compact territory, lying in the most congested part of the city, containing within its limits, on the one hand, practically all the large office and public buildings, hotels, stores, and many factories and warehouses, in which very few voters live, and, on the other hand, practically all the cheap hotels, rooming or lodging houses—such as are found in every large city—and many tenement houses, boarding houses, and unpretentious homes, including the so-called "levee district," with its colored population. This ward is divided into 17 precincts; and of the votes returned by the election officials in this ward at the election of 1912 Mr. Dyer received 2,213 and Mr. Gill 815, and on a recount had of the ballots Mr. Dyer received 2,009 votes and Mr. Gill 994. The vote on all the other candidates at this election in the ward was approximately two to one in favor of the Democratic candidates.

Why did Gill meet with such disastrous defeat in this ward? There must have been a reason for this. What was that reason, and how was the result accomplished? Was it a natural result or was the result brought about by conspiracy and fraud?

Every effect has its cause; this case is no exception. Let us investigate.

In this ward, with its majestic office buildings and princely hotels, where the transient visitor abides, overshadowing the squalid and dingy tenement houses where dwell the lowly; with its warehouses, saloons, and sporting resorts; with a population made up of all races and nationalities, a great number of whom were illiterate; in this ward, with its striking contrasts of wealth and poverty, with its unbroken tumult of commerce and the never-ending struggle of the poor, Thomas E. Kinney was born. His origin was from among the poor and lowly. From boyhood he was acquainted with the struggles of the unfortunate of a great city. An active, intelligent boy, but without the advantages of wealth and education, he early became interested in politics, and by untiring effort he was instrumental in building up in his home ward a strong Democratic political organization, of which he became the leader. As the years came and went his power and influence grew. He was elected a number of times to the St. Louis House of Delegates, and later twice elected to the State senate, in which body he was instrumental in having enacted a number of laws tending to ameliorate the condition of the laboring classes whom he represented. In 1910 he was the Democratic nominee for Congress against the contestee, but was defeated. He contested the election and soon thereafter died. His brother, Michael Kinney, who had been committeeman for 14 years, succeeded him as ward leader, and Thomas Eagan was elected committeeman for the ward. At the 1912 primary Michael Kinney was nominated for the State senate, and the contestant, Mr. Gill, received the nomination to Congress, being very materially aided in this contest by the Democratic organization in this ward on the ground that he had been a friend of Thomas E. Kinney in his contest for Congress with Mr. Dyer in 1910.

In the contest of Kinney against Dyer there was a recount of the ballots, and, as I have stated, the law of the State of Missouri is such that each voter's ballot can be identified, and the ballot cast by the contestant, Michael J. Gill, at that election was no exception, and as another evidence that he who practices duplicity or deception will sooner or later pay the penalty of his perfidy, Mr. Gill was confronted with the charge that he, while pretending to be the friend of Tom Kinney, had in fact been a traitor to him and had voted against him and for Mr. Dyer, as evidenced by his ballot. When this fact became known in the fifth ward a short time before election, and the friends of Thomas Kinney realized that their champion and idol had been knifed by Mr. Gill, they at once determined that steps should be taken to establish the truth or falsity of the charge.

Let us see how these fifth-ward Democrats proceeded in this matter. Did they emulate the example of Mr. Gill, who had smiled upon the candidacy of Tom Kinney while in the presence of he or his friends, only to stab him in the seclusion of the voting booth, where he felt assured his infidelity would never be discovered? Did they decide simply upon rumor to attempt stealthily and fraudulently to overthrow Gill? Did they resort to ways that are dark and means that are corrupt to accomplish their purpose? Far from it; and be it said to the eternal credit of those plain fifth-ward Democrats, they proceeded in an orderly and honorable way.

When the charge became known that Gill had knifed Kinney and voted for Dyer—and, bear in mind, this charge was not made by Mr. Dyer or his Republican friends, but by a Democrat who claimed to know the facts—a meeting of the congressional committee was called, at which meeting Mr. Gill was confronted with the charge. He did not squarely deny the charge, but said that there must be some mistake in the record, a copy of which was presented to him. In view of the disclosure he was asked by some to resign from the ticket. This he declined to do.

The friends of Kinney in the fifth ward, who included practically all of the organization, were by this time thoroughly aroused, firmly believing that Gill was guilty of treachery; and it is a matter of no consequence whether he was or was not guilty; they thought him guilty and determined to fight and defeat him at the polls.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will.

Mr. BOOHER. Suppose that statement is correct; did that justify, and does the gentleman assume to justify, the action of the election board in returning for Mr. Dyer in one precinct 199 votes and for Mr. Gill 5 votes, when on the recount Mr. Dyer received 106 votes and Mr. Gill 73?

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir; it did not justify that, and the gentleman from Missouri can not lead me into any conflict on that.

Mr. BOOHER. No; I would not attempt to.

Mr. McKENZIE. Because, if that were done, certainly those men should be punished.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman does not think they made that mistake innocently, does he?

Mr. McKENZIE. It might be.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman permit one more question——

Mr. McKENZIE. Remember, they lived in St. Louis. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOOHER. And it is a Republican city. Now will the gentleman permit me to just read him one statement?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not do that.

Mr. BOOHER. In answer to the——

Mr. McKENZIE. Read it in your own time.

Mr. BOOHER. I have not got any.

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not allow the gentleman to read.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for my own information. Is it a fact these managers to which the gentleman from Missouri refers have been indicted by the courts?

Mr. BOOHER. They are indicted, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I ask if they have been tried?

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say in reply to that, that one of the outfit, as I understand it, to which he refers, was indicted, I presume, as a part of the propaganda to unseat Mr. Dyer, and that he had his trial a few days ago. He was prosecuted by a Democratic prosecuting attorney before a Democratic judge, and I assume before a Democratic jury, and was acquitted.

Mr. BOOHER. Now, will not the gentleman say there that he was acquitted because the court said they could not in a trial open the ballot boxes and exhibit the ballots?

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to yield to the gentleman, but I can not take the time.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say to the gentleman that I believe he is mistaken as to the politics of the court and of the sheriff who summoned the jury. But in that connection will not the gentleman tell us where those three or four judges and clerks of election are that went into hiding immediately after the election, and who have not yet been arrested?

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri I think that that is an unfair interrogatory, because there is not a scintilla of evidence in the record showing that any of these judges or voters are in hiding.

Mr. RUCKER. I supposed the gentleman had gone outside the record to make the statement he made a while ago. I do not know that that was in the record, but I say it is a fact.

Mr. McKENZIE. I saw that his colleague went outside of the record, and I had to go outside of the record.

Mr. BOOHER. It was the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] who made the inquiry.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Since the gentleman refers to me, I would like to say to the gentleman from Missouri that I think everything material should be brought out in this case. There is an allegation here by the gentleman from Missouri, who brought this issue before the House, and I simply ask for information, if these men had fraudulently made returns, and, if that was so, I wanted to know whether or not they had been indicted. I did not know. The gentleman on the floor responded by saying they had been indicted and had been acquitted. It seems to me it is material. I am anxious to do right by both parties, and I want the facts.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, let us observe the mode of procedure to bring about the defeat of Gill. A meeting was held of the workers and the word given out—not on the quiet but openly—to go out and defeat Gill; and in support of this fact I quote from the testimony of the ward committeeman (p. 1194, record):

> The man that would scratch Tom Kinney would have a hell of a lot of nerve to try to run on the Democratic ticket. I don't know how he (Gill) got as many votes as he did.

And again (p. 1192, record):

> Q. You testified that you had a hundred or more people at your meeting when you gave out the word to defeat Mr. Gill?
> A. We did; we had more than that; we had one that went about 500, after we gave the same order out at one of our regular meetings.

The committeeman further testified that he instructed the precinct committeemen and workers to direct the voters to scratch Gill on election day. Thus in this open manner was the fight made in the fifth ward—not in the dark, not by corrupt means, not in underhand conspiracy, but by a determined and aboveboard conflict by men who had been life-long Democrats, they being convinced of the righteousness of an effort to defeat one whom they believed had wronged their best friend.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, may I make an inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to consume very much time. It will take me——

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not yield to the gentleman at this time.

Mr. DICKINSON. Just one question.

Mr. McKENZIE. Very well, sir.

Mr. DICKINSON. You refer to the instructions to the voters to scratch the man who had voted against "Tom" Kinney. "Tom" Kinney and I were in the Missouri Senate together, and he is all right. So far as the result is concerned, practically, they deliberately scratched him when they cast the vote. But is not there abundance of evidence that the ballots were scratched and changed after the votes were cast?

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir; you have not read the record.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have read it, and that is the fact.

Mr. McKENZIE. To further illustrate the sentiment of the voters, I quote further from the testimony of Committeeman Eagan (p. 1192, record):

Q. Did you vote at that election, Mr. Eagan?—A. Sure; I voted at that election.

Q. I believe you stated that you voted against Mr. Gill and Mr. Dickmann?—A. I did.

Q. And you are the principal officer of the Democratic Party within your ward?—A. I am; I am the committeeman of the ward.

Q. And one of the several members of the congressional committee of the twelfth congressional district?—A. Yes, sir. I didn't figure myself voting against a Democrat when I voted against them two.

Q. You consider a man, then, who scratches a Democratic candidate for Congressman is not a Democrat?—A. He isn't a Democrat.

The record is full of evidence tending to show the resentment of the organization in the ward against Gill and the efforts made by the members of the organization to defeat him at the polls. In this connection I wish to say that it is difficult for one not familiar with political organiations in a large city to understand the power of the organization in a matter of this character, but to one at all familiar with political organization and organization methods it is a simple matter. An organization such as the one in question extends down from the ward leader to the precinct captains or committeemen, and through them to those known as the workers, whose business it is to keep in touch with the voters. So it can be readily understood in this case that after the meetings were held and the organization men told by the leaders to pass the word along the line to vote against Gill for the reason alleged, the great mass of the Democratic voters, or at least those considered as organization Democrats, received the "tip" and, like good organization Democrats, were ready when election day came to carry out the program, and the result demonstrated the truth of the testimony of one witness who testified that practically all in the ward were organization men.

Thus far, at least, even Mr. Gill could not charge these men with doing anything not warranted by law. They were simply exercising their rights as American citizens.

Now, let us see what was done on election day in this ward. In accordance with the law, the polls were manned in each precinct by two Democratic and two Republican judges, one Republican clerk, and one Democratic clerk, besides challengers and watchers. The evidence discloses no disturbance of any consequence at any of the polling places on that day.

After a somewhat elaborate argument of this case before the committee, the majority of the committee decided to disregard the returns from the following precincts in said ward, to wit, the second, third, fourth, fifth, ninth, fourteenth, and seventeenth, which action would give Mr. Gill a plurality of 67 votes.

This action was taken by the majority of the committee on the ground that the election officers in these precincts had been guilty of illegal conduct and that their actions were sufficient to warrant the committee in presuming that the result attained could only have been brought about by conspiracy and fraud, and that the returns, on account of such presumption, were unworthy of credit, and therefore it was impossible to determine the number of legal votes cast, and, on the theory that when the result has been shown to be so tainted with fraud that the truth can not be deducible therefrom, then it should never be permitted to form a part of the canvass, and which is in accordance with the claims of the contestant's counsel that he was defeated by fraud, notwithstanding no specific charge as to the election officials or those particular precincts is set forth in contestant's complaint. In this conclusion the minority refused to concur, maintaining what we believe to be the true legal theory in cases where fraud is charged and that the returns made by the election officials are unreliable, that it is incumbent upon the party questioning the result to call in the body of the voters in at least a part of the precincts in question to establish his claim of fraud, if fraud existed, unless specific acts are particularly pleaded. The minority at the time such action was taken by the majority contended that inasmuch as their decision to disregard the returns from these seven precincts thereby relieved the contestant of a plain requirement under the law in establishing his case under the complaint and throwing the burden upon the contestee, that he, the contestee, therefore should have an opportunity to take the testimony of the body of the voters in these precincts; and it may be well to say at this point that the contestee appeared before the committee and volunteered to have this testimony taken at his own expense; and in this contention the members of the minority were joined by the chairman of the committee, Judge GOLDFOGLE, who offered a resolution directing the committee to take this further testimony, which would have settled this case beyond any dispute.

Mr. DICKINSON. May I ask a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. McKENZIE. Just for a short question.

Mr. DICKINSON. I notice this suggestion that you take from their testimony. Let me ask whether it appeared in the testimony before the committee that on behalf of Mr. Gill postal cards were sent to 800 supposed voters and were returned "Not found"? Now, do you purpose to take the testimony of those 800 who were supposed to have voted for Mr. Dyer, or were supposed to have voted at that election; and if you could not find them then, can you find them in order to take their testimony if you postpone this case?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir; I think that we would have no trouble about that. Mr. Gill would not be looking for them, but we would be looking for them, and the officers would be looking for them. I think they would be ready to come in and tell the truth.

That you may understand that the contention of the minority in this respect was not an unreasonable one, I simply wish to say, in passing, at this time that the votes of only a little more than 400 voters were involved, and the names of these voters are all known, a fact made possible by the peculiar law in force in the State of Missouri for the identification of the vote of each individual voter.

Returning to the question of fraud and conspiracy on the part of the election officials in these seven precincts, alleged by counsel for contestant, let us examine the particular acts and conduct of these officials which is held by the majority to amount to fraud and conspiracy. What are the charges? They are: That illiterate voters were assisted by the judges without being first sworn as to their inability to mark their ballots; that voters were assisted who were not illiterates; that only Democratic judges assisted Democrats and Republican judges assisted Republicans; that the Democratic ballots were counted only by Democratic judges and the Republican ballots by Republican judges; that some ballots were marked in the booth by the judges instead of in the presence of the other officials; that a large number of ballots in certain precincts were scratched by the same hand; that the count of the ballots in some of the precincts was so far from correct that it could not have been a mistake, but was done wrongfully and willfully.

Let us analyze these various charges in the light of the testimony and the facts and see how serious they are, keeping in mind that these election officials were not educated and skilled in the character of the work they were required to perform, but were men selected from the respective wards in which they lived, and in many cases were laboring men.

First, as to the charge that illiterate voters were aided in marking their ballots without first having been sworn as to their illiteracy. This charge is true; but it is evident from the testimony in this case that such has been the custom in this ward, many of the election officials seeming to be under the impression that the affidavit required by law was only administered for the purpose of registration. But whether or not that is true, it has been held by the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri that this statute is directory and does not void the election. (See case of Hope v. Flentge, 140 Mo., 1, c. 403.)

Next, as to the charges that voters were assisted in marking their ballots who were not illiterates and that invariably Democratic judges rendered such assistance to Democratic voters and Republican judges to Republican voters. These charges are also true; but, in our judgment, the services rendered by the judges was in good faith and only in such cases where requests for assistance were made by the voters. We feel, however, that further explanation of this conduct on the part of the judges and the voters should be made in order to meet the charge that such conduct was fraudulent and tended to defeat the contestant.

By common consent of the judges it was understood that when a Republican voter desired assistance he should be assisted by a judge of his own party, and in case of a Democratic voter he should have assistance from a Democratic judge, the failure to administer the oath in all such cases being founded on the same reason mentioned in our reference to illiterate voters.

It is true that in these precincts many voters who had signed their names to the registration lists prior to the election were assisted in voting, and this, contestant alleges, was a violation of the law and was done for the purpose of fraudulently defeating him. Now, let us apply the rule of everyday common sense to the situation in these precincts and see whether or not any real wrong was perpetrated, keeping in mind that in these precincts the body of the voters were common laboring people of different nationalities, many of them colored.

Every man in this House knows from practical experience that many men can with difficulty sign their names when it is required, but it takes a long stretch of the imagination to come to the conclusion that every man who can sign his name could vote a scratched ballot. To vote the straight ticket of any party in the State of Missouri is a very simple performance. All that is required is to be able to select the party ticket from the bundle of ballots handed the voter by the judges, and this he could perhaps do by being able to designate the words in large letters at the top of the ballot, "Democratic ticket," then fold up the ballot and return it to the judges. But in the case of the voter wishing to vote a scratched ballot, as the majority of the Democratic voters in these precincts evidently desired to do at the time in question, it was a very different proposition. He would be compelled to distinguish the name of the candidate on the ballot whom he wished to scratch, scratch the name, and write in the name below of the candidate for whom he desired to vote.

For instance, there is a Democratic ballot [exhibiting]. He would have to look down along the ballot until he found the man's name, and scratch that out, and on the line write the name of the man for whom he wished to vote.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, the name of the Republican candidate for Congress did not appear on the Democratic ticket, then?

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir. You have the blanket ballot in your State.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You have to scratch the man's name out there and write the other man's name in with pen or pencil for whom you want to vote?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir. I might say that in the State of Missouri they do not have the blanket ballot. Each party ticket is printed on a separate sheet of paper.

When we consider these facts and then the further fact that these voters had been asked to scratch Gill and vote for Dyer, there is nothing strange that so many of them, wishing to vote for the Republican, unhesitatingly asked assistance from the judges to be certain of making no mistakes, and it is no reflection upon these laboring men, for it is a well-known fact that many people fairly well educated in a general way hesitate to attempt to scratch a ballot at an election, and very frequently when they do attempt it make such mistakes as to invalidate their ballots.

The foregoing statements explain in themselves the reason why such a large number of ballots in certain of these precincts show Gill's name scratched and Dyer's written in by the same hands, the result being simply due to the fact that under the custom of Democratic judges aiding Democratic voters and the further custom that election officials usually divide up the work, one judge looking after a certain part of the work exclusively, and so forth.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield on that question? Will the gentleman tell me about how many names appeared on each one of those tickets?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I can not.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Was it a long ticket or a short ticket?

Mr. McKENZIE. The one that I have here is a sample.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Is that the ticket there?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes, sir; that is a sample.

The charge that the ballots in these several precincts were not counted by all of the judges, but that the Democratic ballots were counted only by Democratic judges, which action was not in strict compliance with the law, worked to the disadvantage of the contestant is without much force in my judgment. I have no doubt in my mind that this provision of the election law of the State of Missouri was violated in every precinct, if the fact were known, and that such violation worked no hardship upon anyone, for it is not reasonable to presume that each one of the four judges in a precinct should examine and count every ballot cast. Certainly we have a right to presume something upon the integrity and fidelity of the election officials.

It is true that the recount in some of these precincts showed grave errors in the count made by some of the judges, but whether or not those were honest errors or the result of a deliberate intent to defraud cuts but little figure in this case, for the contestant has been given the benefit of all votes to which he was entitled by the recount; and it certainly would be an injustice to Mr. Dyer and an imposition upon the honest voters of these precincts to disregard the entire return on account of the carelessness or even criminal negligence of two or three judges of the election.

It must be borne in mind that the marking of the ballots by the judges and the counting of the ballots by them was done in the open and in the presence of all the judges and clerks, besides the watchers and challengers of the respective parties. These facts are substantiated by practically all of the witnesses, and certainly no complaint was made at any of the voting precincts except by one man by the name of Vaughn, who made the statement that at the precinct where he voted one of the Democratic judges was wrongfully directing voters and marking their ballots. At this point I want to call your attention specifically to the fact that when a ballot is scratched by one of the election officials in aiding a voter, the scratching must be done not in the voting booth, but on the table in the presence of all the officials.

So much for the charges of fraud and conspiracy in these precincts, argued by counsel, but not pleaded by contestant. Now let us briefly consider the result.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do.

Mr. MOORE. Does the voter have an opportunity to see a sample ballot before he asks for the ballot he votes?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, I presume he would not see it in a polling place, but I presume they have them on the outside.

Mr. MOORE. The ordinary voter coming in the way the gentleman indicates, seeking assistance in marking his ballot, would have handed to him for the first time by the judge the ballot he desired?

Mr. McKENZIE. He would have six ballots handed him in this instance.

Mr. MOORE. All containing a long line of names, and in the event he desired to make a change such as he might have desired in this instance, he would not have seen anything previously from which he could quickly designate the name he wanted to strike off, and therefore would have to ask assistance?

Mr. McKENZIE. I imagine it would be very confusing.

Mr. MOORE. Would not that count very much for the desire of a man who wanted to change his vote, to seek assistance?

Mr. McKENZIE. There is no doubt in my mind about it.

Mr. RUCKER. Under the law of Missouri, before the election the official ballot is published in every county and city in the State for some days, so that everybody can familiarize themselves with it.

Mr. MOORE. In a ward like this fifth ward, I assume, very many of the voters would not follow that matter very closely.

Mr. RUCKER. I rather think, from the returns from that ward, that the voters did not have very much opportunity to look into it.

Mr. MOORE. That is permissible, I assume.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman said, as I understood him, that the scratches on the ballot had to be made in the open, before the judges at the table, and the ballots can not be altered in secret.

Mr. McKENZIE. The voter himself can do that.

Mr. BRYAN. It is only in the case of illiterate voters that the ballot can be altered by the judges?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. All told there were cast 1,537 ballots in these seven precincts, and an analysis of these ballots show that of the election officers in the second precinct all voted for Dyer; in the third, four voted for Dyer; in the fourth, all; in the fifth, five; in the ninth, five; in the fourteenth, all; in the seventeenth, five. Surely no one will contend that the three Republican officials in each of these precincts were guilty of any wrongdoing in voting for the Republican candidates, including Mr. Dyer; and is there anything strange in the fact, in the light of the testimony, that many of the Democratic judges voted against Mr. Gill and for Mr. Dyer? They freely and frankly admitted on the witness stand that they did so, testifying as frankly in regard to this as they did to all their other acts connected with this election, claiming no exemptions under the rules of evidence, fully convinced that in scratching Mr. Gill they were simply exercising their privilege as American citizens.

I shall now quote from the minority report in giving an analysis of the body of the vote cast in these precincts:

The official recount of these seven precincts by the board of election commissioners of the city of St. Louis shows that Dyer received 825; Gill, 406; Progressive, Socialist, and scattering, 231; and no vote, 75. There is no complaint as to these 231 for the Progressive, Socialist, etc., so we can take those off the total vote of these seven precincts—1,537—which leaves 1,306. Of this 1,306 the contestant received 406, which, of course, he claims belongs to him, so let us take this 406 off of the 1,306 as votes not questioned by the majority report nor by the contestant himself. This makes 637 of these 1,537 correct according to the contestant himself. We have left 900 of these 1,537 votes to further analyze.

Now, the contestant complained only of Democratic ballots cast in these seven precincts. There were 388 straight Republican ballots cast in these seven precincts, and on which Dyer was voted for as per official recount and set out in detail in the record. Add these 388 votes to the 637 already shown to be undisputed and we have a total of 1,025 that are admitted by the contestant to be correct. This leaves a balance of 512 votes to explain in these seven precincts—the difference between 1,025 undisputed by contestant and 1,537, the total vote in these precincts. These 512 constitute the entire number of Democratic ballots in these precincts that had Gill's name scratched. Of these 512, 437 had Gill's name scratched and Dyer's name written underneath. The balance of these 512 ballots, 75, had Gill's name scratched but no name was written underneath. So we get down to the crux of the situation. It is as to the reliability of these 512 Democratic ballots, 437 of which are credited to Dyer and the other 75 to no one put down in the "no vote" column by the election commissioners in the official recount. What evidence have we in the record as to these 512 votes? The contestant subpœnaed a total of 56 out of these 512 to testify, and the testimony of all these 56 witnesses is set out in detail in the record. It shows that of the 56 witnesses put on the witness stand by the contestant himself more than 50 per cent confirmed their ballots. It must also be noted in this connection that the contestant knew what the ballots showed as to each of these 512, as well as to each of the 1,537, when he started out to canvass the precincts to find witnesses who would help his case. He knew this because he obtained all this information from the recount of the ballots and from the copy of the poll book. * * * He also knew from the same source what Democrats—those using Democratic ballots—had scratched him; he knew their names and addresses and could go and ask them about it. Then it should be remembered, and the record so shows, that the contestant circularized the whole ward with letters asking for information from all voters who appeared from the ballot recount to have voted against him. It is manifest, therefore, that his subpœnaing so few voters could have been for only one reason, that only these few gave him any hopes of their being dissatisfied with the returns. For the majority to think of throwing out 1,537 votes under the circumstances upon testimony questioning about 1 per cent of them seems to require a grosser fraud to be perpetrated here than any supposable at the polls.

In their report the majority named 11 voters as questioning their ballots, and it may be considered whether among 1,537 it might not be easily possible anywhere to get a dozen or more to deny some months afterwards that they had scratched their tickets.

I submit to the membership of this House whether or not under the long-established precedents in cases of this character that the contestant by presenting the testimony of the small number of witnesses mentioned is entitled to the relief sought. Is it possible that anyone can seriously contend that he has established his case by proving conclusively that he was defeated at the election in question by the so-called fraud and conspiracy of the voters and election officials in these seven precincts? We maintain that the record does not sustain his contention and that in fact the testimony furnished by the witnesses is weak to say the least.

Let us briefly notice the testimony of a few of the contestant's "star" witnesses:

Andrew Eichholz, precinct 2, who the majority say was "interfered with," testified (p. 398) "I told him (the judge) I wanted assistance." Then the witness was asked by the election judge as to his desire about voting the prohibition ticket and about the "school business"—a matter also on the ballot—and says, "He told me about that, and I signed for that; and he told me, he said 'Here, here is a man below here don't amount to anything. If you want to scratch him?' I said 'yes.' I said 'scratch him,' and he scratched him for me" (p. 400).

This may have been pernicious activity, and it may not.

Judge Bishop, precinct 2, whose ballot the majority say "was missing," testified that he voted a straight Democratic ticket, "I can't say now that I saw the number indorsed on the ballot or saw anybody write on the back of the ballot at the time" (p. 312). He saw the ballot go into the box. He was voter No. 56; no ticket No. 56 was found; but all the other numbers were found, and one straight Democratic ballot was found, unnumbered, and had been counted for Gill. This was undoubtedly Bishop's ballot.

Certainly there was no harm there, and to say that ballot 56 was "missing," without explanation, is hardly a fair presentation to the Congress as the triers of the facts.

Charles A. Hanson, precinct 3, of whom the majority say the judge folded his ballot "and put it in the box," testified (p. 784), "he handed me the ballot back and I went and dropped it into the ballot box." It is not clear whether this witness asked for assistance or not (p. 777). "Then I went to work on the end of that table, and I went and seen one of the clerks, who told me if I don't know how to fix a ballot or make a ballot one of the judges would show me how, and I went back there with the ballots and he went and took one of the ballots and marked some names out and put some other names in, I believe."

The fact that the judge told him not to let the other judges or clerks see it was perfectly proper. It certainly shows that there was no joint action or conspiracy among these officials in this precinct. And the voter took the ticket and cast the ballot himself. He is a street peddler of shoe strings and his testimony is that of a defective.

Andrew B. Walker, precinct 5, of whom the majority say he "cast a straight Democratic ticket" and testified that he was sure that he voted for Gill, yet an examination of his ballot discloses the fact that Gill's name was scratched, with no other written in, says (pp. 558, 559), "I might have scratched some of the names, but I didn't write any in—I might have erased, but I never written in anything."

"Q. You haven't paid much attention to it from that day to this, have you?—A. No; I have not. Hardly thought about it."

I wish to say before passing to another phase of the case that the testimony of Judge Bishop, and, by the way, I consider him perhaps the most distinguished witness who testified in this case, in regard to his ballot discloses no fraud, inasmuch as there was a Democratic ballot unnumbered found in the box corresponding to his, which undoubtedly was an error on the part of the election judge in not numbering it. But I wish to cite a few sentences of his testimony to confirm our contention in this case, which testimony will be found on page 318 of the record:

Q. You have been very active in the canvass, urging people to vote the straight ticket?—A. Straight ticket from top to bottom, sideways, upside down, and every way, both in the fifth and fourth wards, and particularly in the fifth.

Q. May I inquire, Judge, why particularly in the fifth?—A. That was my ward, my bailiwick, and I understood there was some dissatisfaction there with two of the candidates.

Q. What two, Judge?—A. Gill and Dieckmann.

Q. It is a fact you know there was a good deal of dissatisfaction there, don't you, Judge?—A. I heard a good deal expressed, much to my disgust.

From the testimony of this judge it is evident to all that the people of the fifth ward, especially the Democrats, were determined to vote against Mr. Gill, and knowing the class of voters in that ward it can be readily understood that a dignified judge would not be the man who could keep them in line to vote the Democratic ticket under the circumstances. And it might be said, in addition, that if these election officials were conspiring together to fraudulently defeat the will of the people, a man learned in the law, such as this judge, would be the last man on earth with whose ballot such alleged conspirators would recklessly tamper.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. McKENZIE. I regret I can not yield. I must hurry on.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I wanted to ask you about that marked ticket.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, before passing to another feature of this case, I wish to cite a few more figures to show the injustice of disregarding the entire vote in these 7 precincts. By throwing out these precincts, we find that Mr. Dyer's plurality of 350 in the district is obliterated and a plurality of 67 in favor of Mr. Gill is shown. In these 7 precincts Mr. Gill received 406 straight Democratic votes and Mr. Dyer 388 Republican votes. Standing on these votes alone, Mr. Gill would have a majority of 18 over Dyer in these 7 precincts. Disregarding all scratched ballots and scattering votes in these precincts, and considering only the straight Democratic and Republican ballots as a part of the vote of the district and adding the 18 votes to the 67 which Mr. Gill would have over Dyer, a plurality of 85 appears. Now let us reason a little further. In these 7 precincts, as we have shown before, there were 437 votes on which Mr. Gill's name was scratched and Mr. Dyer's name written in. Is it reasonable to presume that there were not at least 85 of these 437 ballots that were honestly scratched? We contend that these ballots should all be counted, but admitting that some of the voters, few in number, however, have stated that they did not scratch their ballots, the motive for so testifying we will not discuss further than to say this, that Mr. Gill, having full knowledge of every man whose ballot was scratched, and having gone over the district with a "fine-toothed comb" in search of witnesses who would bolster up his case, called in 56 to testify, out of these 7 precincts, and, as we have stated before, of these preferred witnesses, when put under oath, a majority of them confirmed their ballots. Less than 50 per cent of these selected witnesses, therefore, impeached their ballots, so it can be readily assumed, had all these voters been placed upon the stand to give testimony, Mr. Gill's 85 plurality would have been overturned and Mr. Dyer's election conclusively confirmed. The farcical character of contestant's claims in this case, and the ridiculous thing the Members of this House are asked to do in throwing out these 7 precincts, can not be better illustrated than simply stating the fact that in the second precinct, which was considered one of the worst, from contestant's standpoint, 4 votes were summoned out of a total Republican and Democratic vote of 179, and of these 4 voters 3 confirmed their ballots and 1 impeached his. Would any reasonable man contend that on this showing the entire vote in this precinct should be disregarded? Surely not. To do so would make a farce out of the election.

The evidence in the other six precincts is of a very similar character, and to disregard the precincts mentioned on the testimony furnished by contestant is, in our judgment, wholly unwarranted, the result of which would be to overthrow the will of the voters, disfranchise honest men, and perpetuate an outrage which would be a disgrace to our Government. Under such a course of procedure the certificate of election would be no protection to a Member in this body from the attack of anyone who might desire to contest his seat on the ground of fraud, claiming that he could establish the same on the testimony of a few witnesses. Thanks to the wisdom of the men who have occupied seats in this body in the past, no such course has been permitted.

This contest has been tried by the contestant on the theory that all that is necessary for a contestant to show, in order to have the entire vote of the territory in question disregarded, is to show that a few errors in the count have been made and to procure a few witnesses who would impeach their ballots, no matter what the plea in the complaint. We maintain that this ground is untenable, and especially in a case where the contestee or those representing him are in no way charged or implicated in the designated irregularities. We maintain that where fraud is not specifically charged in an election it is incumbent upon the one contesting to prove that he was defeated on account of fraud or conspiracy, and that the showing of a prima facie case is not sufficient, and whole precincts should not be disregarded on account of such charge; and that in no case shall the entire vote be disregarded if it is possible to ascertain the truth and separate the good votes from the bad, which could easily have been done in this case.

The majority of the committee, in support of its report, cites the case of Noyes v. Rockwell, Fifty-second Congresss (Rowell's Dig., 716), from which they quote the following language:

> Fraud can rarely, if ever, be proved by direct evidence; and the rule is that whenever a sufficient number of independent circumstances which point to its existence are clearly established a prima facie case of its existence is made, and if this is not met by explanation or contradiction it becomes conclusive.

There is no doubt that this is the correct rule of law, but it is not applicable to this case, for the acts mentioned have certainly been explained in detail in the record by numerous witnesses, and that the very acts charged as fraudulent were, as a matter of fact, performed in good faith in the open light of day, and therefore plainly not fraudulent.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. If it is only a short question, I will yield.

Mr. BOOHER. Has the gentleman examined the statute of the State of Missouri governing the counting of ballots in the city of St. Louis, prescribing the manner in which the counting is to be done?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not answer as to that.

Mr. BOOHER. Now, suppose the judges in these precincts wholly disobeyed the command of the statute and did not count the ballots in that way. Would that be any evidence of fraud?

Mr. McKENZIE. How is that?

Mr. BOOHER. I say, suppose the judges of election disregarded the manner of counting the ballots as prescribed by law. Would it be any evidence of fraud?

Mr. McKENZIE. If they disregarded it?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say that, standing alone, that would not be an evidence of fraud.

Mr. BOOHER. I do not want to take the gentleman's time, but——

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman can argue that in his own time. I can not yield for an argument.

They also cite the case of Washburn v. Voorhees (2 Bartlett Cont. Cases, p. 508):

> When the result in any precinct has been shown to be so tainted with fraud that the truth can not be deducible therefrom, then it should never be permitted to form a part of the canvass. The precedents, as well as the evident requirements of truth, not only sanction but call for the rejection of the entire poll when stamped with the characteristics here shown.

And in that case the Elections Committee further declared:

> Indeed, the proposition is too plain to admit of dispute. To hold as true that which is so false and fraudulent that the truth can not be deduced therefrom, is to hold to an absurdity. The rule here laid down is none other than the postulate that that which is false can not be true. In adopting this rule the committee do not lose sight of the danger which may attend its application. Wholesome and salutary, not less than necessary, in its proper use, it is extremely liable to abuse. Heated partisanship and blind prejudice, as well as indifferent investigation, may under its cover work great injustice. It is not to be adopted if it can be avoided. No investigation should be spared that would reach the truth without a resort to it. But it is not to be forgotten or omitted if the case calls for its application. If the fraud be clearly shown to exist to such an extent as to satisfy the mind that the return does not show the truth, and no evidence is furnished by either party to a contest, and no investigation of the committee enable them to deduce the truth therefrom, then no alternative is left but to reject such a return. To use it under such a state of facts, is to use as true that which is shown to be false.

We maintain that this case, like the one cited above, is not in point in this contention. Can any man contend that the truth is not deducible in all of these precincts, and that under the complaint the burden of proof was not on contestant? All that is necessary to demonstrate conclusively the truth of this poll would be to put the body of the voters on the witness stand, and in this particular case there was no difficulty in the way of this procedure on account of the fact that each voter's name and address, together with the number of his ballot, could be found on the poll book, and after the recount had the contestant knew exactly whose ballots on which the name of Gill had been scratched off and Dyer written on.

In support of this contention I desire to quote the following from contestee's brief:

> A questioned precinct should not be rejected if its illegal votes can be purged. The rule is well settled that the whole vote of a precinct should not be thrown out on account of illegal votes having been cast if it be practicable to ascertain the number of illegal votes and the person for whom cast, in order to reject them and leave the legal votes to be counted. Legal votes are not to be thrown out in order to get rid of illegal votes unless necessity requires it as the only means of preventing the consummation of a fraud upon the ballot box. (Barnes v. Adams, 41st Cong., 2 Bart., 770.) The exclusion of an entire poll is the very last resort, and it must never be done where there is any rational means by which the illegal votes can be eliminated. (LeMoyne v. Farwell, 44th Cong., Smith, 411, 422). An entire poll should never be rejected unless it is impossible to ascertain the result. The proper course is not to reject the return and allow each party to prove the legal votes but to require the parties to prove the illegal votes and reject those. (Covode v. Foster (minority report), 41st Cong., 2 Bart., 613.) The entire vote of a precinct should not be rejected simply because certain votes are shown to be corrupt by reason of bribery. (Lentz v. Tompkins, 57th Cong., 2 Hinds' Prec., 705.)

The contestant and his counsel have not contended in this case that they have shown that a sufficient number of votes were tainted to change the result, but have asserted that inasmuch as they have shown what they allege to be fraud that on that ground all the votes should be rejected. This, we contend, is not the law in this case, and on this point we quote the following from contestee's brief, which is directly in point, in view of the fact that contestee is not implicated in any of the alleged fraud:

> If fraud is shown, but contestee is not connected with it, it must affect enough votes to change the result to warrant unseating him. Thus where there was fraud and bribery on behalf of contestee, but there was no proof to connect him with it or showing that it affected enough votes to change the result, the committee reported for contestee. (Evans v. Turner, 56th Cong., Rept. 198.) Where a number of voters, considerably larger than the number returned for contestant, testified that they voted for him and there were circumstances suspicious of fraud, the minority held that the returns should not be rejected if the circumstances could be explained in any way consistent with the innocence of the election officers, saying, "Fraud when charged must be proved and never can legally be presumed from mere suspicious circumstances, however strong they may be deemed. A mere discrepancy between the number of votes returned and the tally lists, or the number that may afterwards be proved to have been cast, has never been considered as evidence of fraud at all tending to affect the validity of the election, and if it should be held to have that effect, no election could be sustained." (Washburn v. Voorhees, 39th Cong., 2 Bart., 70.)

On the question of fraud I wish to further quote from contestee's brief as follows:

> Fraud is not to be presumed. In the absence of anything to rebut it the presumption must be in favor of the correctness of the record kept by the officers of the election and of their return. "Fraud is not presumed" is a maxim not only of law but of justice. The means of knowledge, the facilities for accuracy, the impossibility of inattention, and the responsibilities connected with the failure to discharge their duty all unite to secure a credence to the acts of the officers which can not be justly accorded to the acts of others. (Little v. Robbins, 31st Cong., 1 Bart., 140.) The presumption that the sworn officers of the law have done their duty must obtain until the contrary clearly appears. (Boynton v. Loring, 46th Cong., 1 Ells., 350.) If a person votes at an election, his vote is presumed under the law to be legal until the contrary be proven in a legal way for the reasons: First, that the acts of an officer or officers of an election within the scope of their authority are presumed to be correct and honest until the contrary is made to appear, and therefore that they, as such officers, would not receive an illegal vote. Second, that the presumption is always against the commission of a fraudulent or illegal act, and, therefore, that a man would not cast an illegal vote. (Finley v. Bisbee, 45th Cong., 1 Ells., 93.) Unfair conduct on the part of election officers and suspicious circumstances do not justify overturning a majority not destroyed by testimony. (Spears v. Burnett, 57th Cong., 2 Hinds' Prec., 693; Frost v. Metcalfe, 45th Cong., 1 Ells., 290; McDuffie v. Davidson, 50th Cong., Mobley, 581.)

On the question of irregularities and the violation of directory statutes I quote the following from the same brief:

Where an officer of election testified that he had marked certain ballots for illiterates wrong, and these ballots were thrown out for irregularity, the committee counted them, saying: "It is well settled that an elector can not lose his right to vote by the misake of one of the election officers. If the voter himself made the mistake, the ballot should not be counted, but where he depends upon an officer whose duty it is to assist him in the preparation of his ballot, and the officer, through ignorance or design, fails to mark the ballot properly, it should be counted." (Brown v. Swanson, 55th Cong., Rept. 1070, p. 8.) "Evidence which might have been sufficient to put the voter to his explanation, if challenged at the polls, is not deemed sufficient to prove a vote illegal after it has been admitted. Something more is then required to prove it illegal than to throw doubt upon it." (Gooding v. Wilson, 42d Cong., Smith, 82.) "Our election laws must necessarily be administered by men who are not familiar with the construction of statutes, and all that we have a right to expect are good faith in their acts and a substantial compliance with the requirements of the law." (Ingersoll v. Naylor, 26th Cong., 1 Bart., 35.) "Elections should not be set aside for want of mere form for innocent or unintentional irregularities." (Reid v. Julian, 41st Cong., 2 Bart., 830.) The violation of directory provisions of the law, if no fraud be shown to have resulted therefrom, can not vitiate an election. "The voter is not to be deprived of his right and the citizens are not to lose the result of an election fairly held because of some unimportant omission of form, from the neglect, carelessness, or ignorance of some election officer, or the failure to carry out some unimportant direction of the law." (Richardson v. Rainey, 45th Cong., 1 Ells., 230.) "Regulations may be merely directory, and if the officer of election or the voter does not follow them, it does not necessarily vitiate the vote when deposited and received." (Lowe v. Wheeler, 47th Cong., 2 Ells., 97.) "Votes fairly and honestly given ought not to be lost or set aside for any mistake of any of the returning officers." (Colden v. Sharpe, 17th Cong., C. and H., 371.) Where the judges in 12 precincts adjourned for dinner—contrary to the election law—the committee unanimously held that this alone would not vitiate the election, it not appearing in this case that any person was deprived of his vote by reason of the adjournment; they did not "feel warranted in depriving so large a number of electors of their votes on account of this unintentional and, in this case, harmless error of their officers." (Delano v. Morgan, 40th Cong., 2 Bart., 172.) And where the law required the votes to be counted one at a time from the box, and they were instead spread upon a table and assorted and counted by fives, it was held that this was a mere irregularity, and should not void the election in the absence of any evidence of fraud or corruption. (Hurd v. Romeis, 49th Cong., Mobley, 424.)

We assume that no one will question the rule of law that the burden of proof is upon the contestant to make out his case, especially under a complaint such as contestant makes in this case, and I do not think that I can state it more forcibly than it is set forth in the contestee's brief, as follows:

The burden of proof is upon contestant. The distinction between the controversy at the polls and that before the committee is manifest. At the polls the voter is a party. When the polls are closed and the election is made the right of the party elected is complete. He is entitled to the returns, and when he is admitted to his seat there is no known principle by which he can be rejected except upon affirmative proof of a defect in his title. Whoever seeks to oust him must accomplish it by proving a case. The difficulties in his path can form no possible reason why the committee should meet him half way. The rule of reason requires that he should fully make out his case, even though it involve the proof of a negative. (New Jersey case, 26th Cong., 1 Bart., 26.) The returned Member is presumed to have been duly elected. This presumption should be maintained unless repelled by conclusive evidence. (Bisbee v. Finley (minority rept.), 47th Cong., 2 Ells., 203.) The burden of proof is always upon the contestant or the party attacking the official returns. The presumption is that the officers charged by law with the duty of ascertaining and declaring the result have discharged that duty faithfully. (Bromberg v. Haralson, 44th Cong., Smith, 357.)

After a careful consideration of the questions involved in this case, I felt fully convinced that the contestant had failed to make a case, and, in my judgment, his petition should have been dismissed. But the majority of the committee differed from me and my Republican colleague, and, I might add, from the chairman of the committee, Judge GOLDFOGLE, and decided to throw out the 7 precincts we have been discussing, which would give Mr. Gill a plurality of 67 votes, and upon that showing determined to recommend the unseating of Mr. Dyer and the seating of Mr. Gill. We protested against the disregarding of the vote in these precincts and insisted that it was incumbent upon contestant, under his complaint, to purge the vote, as the burden was upon him. However, when this was refused and the burden shifted to the contestee, we felt that he should be entitled to the opportunity of taking the additional testimony necessary to determine the question of the validity of the votes in these precincts. In this contention, as I have said before, we were joined by the chairman of the committee, who offered the resolution directing that further testimony be taken in this matter. In this we were overruled by the majority in the face of well-established precedents, such as in the Alabama election case of Threet against Clarke, Fifty-first Congress, and found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, pages 466–469, and also Rowell 1, chapter 181. I quote from this decision:

If the results at all these polls were, as alleged by contestant, tainted by fraud and corruption to such an extent that the polls should be excluded, he has failed, in the opinion of your committee, to exercise that diligence which the law asks of every suitor before granting him the relief prayed for. Bearing in mind that the character and tendency of the proof is very similar in all these precincts, the contestant might reasonably have been expected to have, at least in one or a few of them, called in the body of the voters of the precinct and established his claim of fraud, if fraud existed, beyond question. He does not even pretend to have made an effort to do so in this contest.

In that Alabama case, from the report of which the above is taken, the charges made were substantially the same as here. Substantially the same number of witnesses were called from the different precincts complained of as in this case, and the Committee on Elections in that case reported to the House, which report was sustained by the House, to the effect that proof of fraud was not sustained by the testimony of two to five witnesses in each precinct, but that the body of voters should have been subpœnaed. In this case the contestant, Gill, knew the names and addresses of all the voters complained of, and there is no excuse for his not having taken their testimony. The burden of proof was on him to disprove the certified results of the election and the official recount.

Other decisions, bearing out the rule in the Alabama case referred to, are Walker v. Rhea, a Virginia case, Fifty-sixth Congress, report No. 2566. This was also in many respects similar to the present case, yet the committee in that case made a report, sustained by the House, adverse to the contestant. Their report was, in part, as follows:

The printed testimony in the case comprised about 3,000 pages and brought in vast detail before the committee the evidence relating to the charges of the contestant and the countercharges of contestee.

The case was most elaborately and ably argued for about two weeks before the committee, and was then considered for many weeks with the greatest care.

The conclusion arrived at as a consequence of the committee's investigation is that, while the evidence shows that there were frauds and irregularities practiced, chiefly in the interest of the contestee, they fall very far short of being sufficient to justify a change in the result of the election.

Again, we have a Virginia case in the next, the Fifty-seventh Congress, a contest between the same parties. In that case we have one particular similarity to this case, in that the Democratic candidate for Congress ran considerably ahead of the presidential candidate (Bryan). The committee's report in that case said in part:

The fact that on the face of the returns contestee received 1,751 more votes than contestant, and McKinley 1,509 more than Bryan, is not, in the judgment of your committee, sufficient reason to justify that such result was accomplished by fraud. After a careful examination of the record your committee does not find such affirmative and positive evidence of fraud or mistakes on the part of the election officers as will overcome contestee's certified majority or justify it setting aside the election.

It must be borne in mind also that this case (Gill v. Dyer) is different from that of all other cases cited by us and by the majority report, in that no charge is made that Mr. Dyer or his party was in any way connected with any alleged wrongdoing or fraud.

A decision on all fours with the present case was that of Hopkins against Kendall, Fifty-fourth Congress, referred to above. In that case the difference between the majority and minority of the committee arose as to whether the vote of the whole county should be rejected or whether the contestant should simply be credited with the number of votes actually shown to have been lost to him by the fraud. The majority of the committee found that 79 votes were lost to the contestant, and as this number was not sufficient to overcome the returned plurality of the sitting Member (his plurality being 253 votes), the majority concluded that the sitting Member was entitled to his seat. The minority contended for the rejection of the entire vote of the county. In this case Mr. Dyer's plurality, after crediting the contestant with every vote that he was shown to be possibly entitled to in the official recount of the ballots, was 350. As shown above, Mr. Gill took the testimony of 56 witnesses in these seven precincts, and less than 50 per cent impeached their ballots. In that case (Hopkins v. Kendall) the majority concluded that the sitting Member was entitled to his seat, but the minority contended for the rejection of the entire vote of the county. The controversy therefore was the same in that case as in this; fraud was charged in both cases to have been committed by election officials. In order to obtain the best possible testimony as to what was the exact and correct vote in that case, that chairman of the Elections Committee, Mr. William H. Moody, of Massachusetts (afterwards Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States), reported to the House a resolution authorizing the committee to take further testimony upon the matters in dispute. Mr. Moody presented this resolution to the House on June 6, 1896. The resolution was adopted, further testimony was taken, and on February 17, 1897, the House adopted the minority report for the majority report.

This shows that the taking of further testimony in that case, similar in all respects to this one, had the result of changing the decision of the Committee on Elections, because the committee itself recommended to the House that the minority report be substituted for the majority report. It is true that that case was decided near the end of the Congress, but justice was apparently done, because the committee changed its report after taking further testimony. We could cite numerous cases similar and where similar action was taken by the House. The question that the House wants to decide is whether or not the contestant or the contestee was rightfully elected. Whether the contestee retains his seat for a longer period because of this further search for testimony is immaterial as compared with having complete justice done. The burden of proof was upon the contestant to prove his case. We claim that the record fails to disclose that he has proven his case.

The majority of the committee based its denial to permit the contestee to take such additional testimony on the report of the Elections Committee in the case of Giddings against Clark, which was decided in the Forty-second Congress (Smith, 91). I quote the following extract from the report of the committee in that case and cited in the majority report in this case:

> It must be borne in mind that the party now asking an extension is the sitting Member. He is now, and has been during a large part of the term, exercising the functions and receiving the emoluments of the office in question. In a litigation of this character the thing in controversy grows daily less, and does not, as in most ordinary lawsuits, remain intact to be recovered by the successful party in the end. In this particular case the extension asked for would be very nearly equivalent to a final decision of the case in favor of the sitting Member upon the merits.
> We are now near the close of the second session of the Congress. If the parties are to be sent back to Texas to take further testimony, of course no further action can be taken until the opening of the third and last session, which is of but 90 days' duration, and would be necessarily far spent before a final decision could be reached. It does not follow from these considerations that a sitting Member can in no case be allowed an extension after the time allowed by law for taking testimony expires; but your committee think it does follow that no such extension should ever be granted to a sitting Member unless it clearly appears that by the exercise of great diligence he has been unable to procure his testimony, and that he is able, if an extension be granted, to obtain such material evidence as will establish his right to the seat, or that by reason of the fault or misconduct of the contestant he has been unable to prepare his case. (McCrary on Elections, 4th ed., p. 332.)

We of the minority feel that the case just cited does not establish a precedent that ought to be followed in this case. Surely the contestee was justified in relying on the rules of law and the precedents long established, that it is incumbent on the contestant in cases such as this to establish his case by showing that a sufficient number of votes were taken from him as a result of the alleged irregularities to defeat him. This contestant makes no claim to have shown, but relies on the disregard ng of the votes in their entirety in the precincts which he alleges were tainted with fraud. The contestee met every charge raised by the contestant and felt that that was all that could be required of him, and that the rule that where the party has been guilty of negligence in taking testimony does not apply to him in this case, for until the committee decided to disregard the votes in the seven precincts heretofore mentioned it was not incumbent upon him to subpœna the body of the voters in these precincts, that burden rightfully resting upon the contestant. Therefore we feel that, since the committee has seen fit to reverse the order of making proof, as a mattery of simple justice Mr. Dyer should be granted this privilege. But it is said by those contending for the contestant that it would require time, and the sitting Member is enjoying all the privileges and emoluments of the office while this additional testimony is being taken. True. But is that any argument when the truth in this matter is involved? The contestee only asks for 30 days in which to take this additional testimony, and can we, who are asked to pass upon this very important question, refuse this request and pass upon the case blindly, which we are compelled to do, for no man knows whether any of the 437 votes involved in this dispute are dishonest votes, and the only evidence of their validity is locked up in the breasts of the voters themselves. We know who they are. Shall we ask them to disclose the truth, or shall we blindly guess, as suggested by the contestant? It is true the goddess of justice is said to be blind; but does that justify us in shutting our eyes to the truth in this case when the facts may be brought out so that we can see them clearly? Let me appeal to you, my colleagues, not to be a party to such a proceeding. Let us get the facts by the taking of this additional testimony, which will demonstrate beyond any question who was elected in this district, and we can all stand together for the right. I would not be so insistent upon this were it not for the utter failure of the contestant to furnish the evidence which was so easily obtainable. Take, for an example, the second precinct. There were, as I remember the evidence, 34 ballots marked by the same hand. Why did he not subpœna those 34 men and clear up to the satisfaction of all as to whether or not those 34 ballots were fraudulently marked? That would have been easy to do. What is the excuse for subpœnaing only 4 men, 3 of whom confirmed their ballots?

Take one other charge made by counsel for contestant, for instance, to illustrate the weakness of his claims, that of conspiracy between the committeeman, Egan, and the judges of election. How absurd this charge appears when we remember that these judges were appointed by the election commissioners, a bipartisan board, and when we remember the further fact that the organization in this ward threw practically their full strength to Mr. Gill at the primaries, at which time his treachery to Tom Kinney was unknown to them. And how feeble the charge of conspiracy among the judges in the several precincts when we remember that many of the 51 Democratic judges and clerks voted for Mr. Gill, and even in these 7 precincts, in 4 out of the 7, part of the judges voted for Mr. Gill. Surely these men were not in a conspiracy. And as the record conclusively shows that whatever was done by the judges in these several precincts was done in the open, before all the other judges and clerks, watchers, and challengers, and such voters as might have happened to be in the voting place at the time.

In conclusion let me ask, What remains of all the charges upon which we are asked to unseat Mr. Dyer and seat Mr. Gill? Forsooth, the judges fail to administer an oral affidavit to the illiterate voters and to a number of unfortunate and poorly educated voters who asked and received assistance from the judges in scratching their ballots, and that there were some irregularities in the return made by the judges. In the recount the contestant was given the benefit of all the errors made in the count by the judges, which disposes of that. So practically all that remains upon which to hang his case is that the judges technically violated the law by aiding voters in scratching their ballots, notwithstanding the evidence that such scratching was done in a frank and open manner in accordance with the custom long practiced in this ward, and I doubt not in the other wards of the city of St. Louis.

The truth about it is that the contestant and his counsel have magnified molehills until they appear to them to be mountains, and I regret to say that some of the members of the committee have been led to believe that they are really mountains and that harmless omissions of conduct on the part of the officials and the exercise of their lawful privileges by the voters in this ward have been magnified into crimes and conspiracies.

Is it a crime, or are men guilty of conspiracy, who deliberately undertake, as these men did in the open, to defeat a candidate on their ticket whom they believe to have been guilty of treachery and duplicity to a friend? We think not, for if such were the rule of law I fear most of us would be conspirators at heart. And surely it comes in poor taste from one who has been guilty of such conduct to charge his fellow men with shortcomings, as the contestant has done in this case. To my mind the result in the fifth ward in question was the most natural thing in the world, and had these fifth ward Democrats not resented the treachery which they believed Gill perpetrated on their best friend, Tom Kinney, once the little newsboy of the ward, but afterwards the leader and champion of all the people of that ward, they would have been unworthy of the name of friends.

The slogan of the campaign in this ward was, "If Dyer was good enough for Gill to vote for two years ago, he is good enough for us to vote for now." Are these men censurable for this fight against the man whom they had believed had wronged their best friend? He that hath no friends let him answer. To my mind the man who strikes my friend strikes me. We are human. These fifth ward Democrats were very much human.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, if Mr. Dyer or his Republican friends had been implicated in this fifth ward fight against Gill, or if money had been used in corruptly bribing voters or election officials, or any of the many crooked practices often resorted to in political contests where the will of the people is sought to be overturned had been followed, I would feel differently about this case. I have no time nor use for the man who will willfully corrupt the electorate in our country, and there is no punishment under our law too severe for him. But these things do not apply in this case. It is admitted by contestant and his counsel that Mr. Dyer was in no way responsible for what happened in the fifth ward, and there is not a particle of evidence in the record to show that any money was used or any other illegal means to bring about the result. It was done by the organization in the Democratic Party in that ward appealing personally to the voters to vote against Gill, which they had a perfect legal and moral right to do.

Mr. Speaker, I am done. It is not incumbent upon me to dwell upon the personality of either of the parties to this contest.

The contestee, Mr. Dyer, has served in this House for a number of years. His record, so far as I have been able to learn, has been an honorable one. In this case, however, we should disregard all personalities, being governed solely by the facts and the law, endeavoring to do but one thing—justice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield back the balance of his time?

Mr. McKENZIE. I control it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, there are now in this House 290 Democratic Members—two-thirds of this body. If there were the inclination, there is no necessity for this election case being considered from a party standpoint. It is a somewhat ungracious undertaking to have to deal with a question vitally concerning the personal interests of a Member of this body who occupies so respectable a station in its estimation as the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Dyer.

I regret the circumstance that the report of your committee has, unfortunately, divided along political lines. The report of the committee is united in by the six Democratic members and the one Progressive member, and the minority report is signed by the two Republican members. I take occasion to say that in my own personal association in this House there are hardly any two Members of the body with whom my personal relations are more pleasant than with the two gentlemen who have signed this minority report, and they have my sincere respect and admiration.

This case is in many respects unique; not, I would say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCOY], in the respect in which he regarded it, but it is unique in this, that your committee reports that the sitting Member is not entitled to his seat, and according to precedents you would have expected the minority to report that the sitting Member was entitled to his seat. There is no such finding on their part. You do not find in the report of the minority one single suggestion that it has dissented from the conclusions of the committee. You do not find in that report any recommendation that this House ought to accept the returns from those seven precincts in issue; but you find that instead of deciding the question that has been submitted to them the minority members come here and ask that you shall go back to St. Louis and take further testimony in order to ascertain what is the proper result in this case. So that the issue now presented to this House is whether or not you have sufficient testimony upon which to make up a judgment or whether you shall postpone a decision at this time and submit to another inquest in the city of St. Louis.

Now, gentlemen, in the time allotted to me for the discussion of this case, the record of which covers over 2,000 pages of closely printed matter, it can not be expected that I undertake to expound the details of this testimony. I find myself in a situation where I can only address myself to the high points in the case, so to speak, the salient features of the record. Your committee has said that in the fifth ward of St. Louis it has found fraud of a bold and glaring character. And what are the insignia, what the badges of fraud by which they have been led to this conclusion?

In the first place, gentlemen of the House, this is a Democratic ward, notwithstanding the fact that the chairman of the committee declined to give it that character. Every other name on the Democratic ticket in this election, with the exception of the Congressman and the sheriff, received substantially 2,000 votes, while every Republican candidate in that ward except for those two offices received substantially 1,000 votes. That was true of the presidential electors, true of the candidate for governor, for the court of appeals, for warehouse commissioner, and so on throughout the list; but when you come to the name of the Congressman you find that the sitting Member, Mr. Dyer, is credited with having received two thousand two hundred and odd votes, when nobody else in his party except the candidate for sheriff received more than a thousand; and you find that out of 1,991 Democratic ballots in that ward Mr. Gill, the candidate for Congress, had his name scratched off of 997 of them, and Mr. Dyer, the sitting Member, had his name inserted upon 888 of them.

That does not mean anything by itself. You might say it was a most remarkable change of public sentiment. You might say that this Republican candidate was the most popular Republican that ever ran in a Democratic district, and that the Democratic candidate was the most unpopular man who ever ran before the people, but it would not necessarily mean fraud.

I present to you now the second badge by which we are to be guided in this case. There were 102 election officers in that ward—51 Democrats and 51 Republicans. Every one of them, but 14, voted for the sitting Member, the Republican candidate. That does not mean anything by itself. They might have changed their minds on account of the popularity of this Republican in a Democratic ward and the unpopularity of the Democratic candidate. It has been stated to you that they were appointed by a nonpartisan board of election commissioners, and that is a fact; but the record in this case discloses that they were appointed on the nomination of the Democratic committeeman from that ward, and who was that committeeman? Thomas Egan, the brother-in-law of Thomas E. Kinney, a former candidate for Congress against the sitting Member.

Now, gentlemen, here are all your scratched ballots. Here are all your election officers owing their places to the recommendation of one man, and that man unfriendly to the contestant in this case. But that does not mean anything by itself, gentlemen may say.

Now, what are the other circumstances in connection with that election for us to take into account? I stand before you to assert from this record that there was not a single direction of the statute law of Missouri which was complied with by these election officers in the conduct of this election in many precincts of that ward.

The law of Missouri said that an illiterate voter who asked for assistance should be sworn as to his inability to fix his ticket. Not a single man throughout the limits of this ward who asked for assistance was sworn as to his inability.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield on this point, that the election officers were appointed on the recommendation of the committeemen in the wards? If my colleague can cite me to any part of the record showing any evidence on that point, I will certainly be under obligations to him, because I have been unable to find anything in the record. It was a mere statement of counsel, as I remember it.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I can not stop to put my finger on the name of the witness who testified in that regard, but I pledge myself to the gentleman that before this discussion is finished I will find and show to him the name of the witness who stated that the committeeman in that ward nominated the election officers.

I was saying, gentlemen, that not a single illiterate voter was sworn as to his illiteracy or his inability to fix his ballot. The statute law of Missouri requires that when a man asks for assistance in fixing his ballot he shall be assisted by the election officers acting in a body, in the presence of one another and in his presence. The testimony in this record discloses the fact that judges of election took the voters into the booths, where they had no right to be, and out of the presence of the rest of the election officers assisted them in the preparation of their ballots.

The law of Missouri requires that every single election officer shall assist in counting the ballots, that it shall be the work of each and all. In many of the precincts of this ward the Democratic ballots were turned over to the Democratic election officers and the Republican ballots were turned over to the Republican election officers, and in several instances only one man did the counting, and there was no attempt to make the count by all the election officers.

The law of Missouri provides for a secret ballot, but notwithstanding that the voters in some places were permitted to bring into the polls cards from the outside for the purpose of informing the election officers on the inside how they should be voted.

Now, gentlemen, any one of these things by itself might be considered inconsequential. I mention these circumstances for the purpose of pressing upon your attention the fact that if there was a statutory requirement of the State of Missouri which these people complied with, I have been unable to find it in this record.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You say that in seven precincts of this ward the Republican candidate ran ahead of his ticket?

Mr. WATSON. In every precinct.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I was just going to ask about that. In the seven precincts that were thrown out, what was his majority over his associates? It was seven or eight hundred, was it not, out of 2,000?

Mr. WATSON. Gentlemen, in round numbers the Republican candidate for Congress received two-thirds of the votes of that ward, and his associates on the ticket received one-third.

Mr. TRIBBLE. How did he run in the other precincts you did not throw out? Did he run ahead of his ticket or run behind it?

Mr. WATSON. I would say to the gentleman in passing that I consider that practically every precinct in this ward excepting two is almost in the same predicament.

Mr. TRIBBLE. But you did not throw them all out?

Mr. WATSON. We did not.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question here?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. In the other wards how did Mr. Gill, the contestant, run? Did he run up to or ahead of his ticket?

Mr. WATSON. Outside of the fifth ward Mr. Gill ran along with his ticket; got just about as many votes as anybody else did.

Mr. DICKINSON. But in this ward——

Mr. WATSON. In this ward he ran behind, getting one-third as against two-thirds.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is where the complaint is made and that is where fraud is charged?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Did I understand the gentleman a moment ago to say that he thinks the election was unfairly conducted in all the precincts of that ward?

Mr. WATSON. I will answer that in a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many of them were thrown out?

Mr. WATSON. The committee eliminated seven.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many were there in all?

Mr. DICKINSON. Seventeen in all. There were two of them in which no question was raised.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman has spoken of certain insignia—certain badges that might be taken account of—which he says, standing alone, are not conclusive. The gentleman has been diverted from his argument by interruptions. He has overlooked one fact which I think, possibly, he did not intend to overlook. I have not had time to read the testimony in this case, but I have understood that one man probably made most of the many erasures that were made, scratching out the name of the contestant and writing in the name of the contestee.

Mr. WATSON. That is true, sir. I am coming to that. Now, gentlemen, when we come to the ballots, this is what we find. There are five precincts in this ward—2, 4, 5, 14, and 9—which by themselves would change the result of this election. In these five precincts there were 918 ballots cast, and when the returns were opened and recounted it was found that 336 of these 918 ballots had been counted wrong. Mr. Dyer had been given 207 votes more than he was entitled to and Mr. Gill had been given 129 fewer votes than he was entitled to. In other words, more than one-third, or 36.6 per cent, was returned by the election officers for Dyer that he was not entitled to.

When the ballots were examined—and I invite your attention to the sample copies exhibited before the House—it was found that in most instances one man at the precinct did the scratching. Not only one man, because my colleague from Illinois has stated that perhaps they properly selected one man to do it, but he had the same pen every time, and not only that, but he held it in the same position, and he himself probably occupied the same position every time.

But that testimony is not enough to quiet the conscience of the minority members of this committee and to justify them in eliminating these returns. They are not satisfied with circumstantial evidence; they want positive proof that the ballot was tampered with after it went into the box. Fortunately for this case we have positive proof. I can not stop now to enumerate all the witnesses who have been called to testify on this point, but I want to say that Judge Bishop, a distinguished member of the bar and at the present time assistant district attorney, testified that he voted at his precinct the straight Democratic ticket. When they came to examine the ballots at that precinct, although his number was recorded on the poll book and his name on the registration book, and his ballot marked 56, when they came to look into the box, lo and behold, it was gone. Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] would account for that on the ground that somebody found on the floor a straight Democratic ticket that might have been his.

Mr. McKENZIE. It was in the box.

Mr. WATSON. Well, in the box. I want to call your attention to the fact that it is necessary at every turn to have some accident to account for the remarkable situation that exists.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. I have not heard it stated what position the majority took in regard to the question of fraud. Did it take the position that the mere circumstance of fraud was sufficient justification for throwing out the entire vote of the precinct, or did they take the position that it must be such as to invalidate or change the result?

Mr. WATSON. I will answer the gentleman when I come to that point.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. In relation to the incident of Judge Bishop, to which the gentleman has just referred, I see in the minority report this statement, and I would like to have the gentleman's answer to it. It says:

> Judge Bishop, precinct 2, whose ballot the majority say "was missing," testified that he voted a straight Democratic ticket, "I can't say now that I saw the number indorsed on the ballot or saw anybody write on the back of the ballot at the time" (p. 312). He saw the ballot go into the box. He was voter No. 56; no ticket No. 56 was found; but all the other numbers were found, and one straight Democratic ballot was found unnumbered, and had been counted for Gill. This was undoubtedly Bishop's ballot.

There is no positive testimony that his vote was numbered, and then follows the statement I have read from the report.

That seems to meet the case exactly.

Mr. WATSON. That may account for that ballot. I can not recall at this moment all the testimony on that particular point.

Now, when we come to Father McGuire, a Catholic priest, a gentleman of intelligence, he voted at another precinct, and his ballot was marked. He testified that he did not scratch Gill's name off; but when we examine the ballot box and the ballot comes out, Gill's name was eliminated entirely and Dyer's name written in place of it. When we come to John Flannery, a contractor and builder, the same thing happened. To Walter Pfeiffer, a retired business man, the same thing happened. When we come to A. D. Stahl, a stock dealer, the same thing happened. The same thing is true about Theodore Tompkins and A. B. Walker and many others whose names it is unnecessary to mention—we find the same state of facts. These people whose names I have mentioned were people of intelligence, people of character, literate, who could fix their own tickets, and yet though the election officers were relieved of the duty of fixing their ballots when they came out of the box they were found to have been tampered with and the name of Gill scratched and the name of Dyer written thereon.

Now, gentlemen, these are some of the circumstances connected with this case. Can any reasonable man suppose that these things could have happened by accident? Can anybody place any confidence in the integrity of these returns, with these indicia of fraud stamped on their face?

I heard some gentlemen state in this debate that only 18 witnesses had testified that their ballots had been changed after they went into the ballot box. Well, if 18 true and intelligent men can not prove a fact, I will ask gentlemen of this House how many witnesses they would require to establish a fact? The truth of the gospel and the history of Jesus Christ rest on the testimony of four Apostles. But here are 18 men—lawyers, doctors, priests, men of character and substance in the community—who come and tell you that they have been wronged, and yet Members stand up and say that they want more testimony. Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] asked what is the committee going to do.

The minority members of this committee do not ask you gentlemen to accept these returns. They do not say that any man in this House should hold title to his seat on such a state of facts as these. They come and ask you to take further testimony. And when was that application made? It was made after long months had elapsed, after all of the testimony had closed, the contestee not requesting one more day further time. Your committee had sat in judgment, had come to a conclusion, and had tentatively pronounced that judgment, and then the application was made. After the judgment is made up and the verdict rendered the cry is raised that more time must be taken, that other testimony should be brought in. I want to say to this House that while I do not pretend to have examined all of the contested cases which have been adjudicated at its bar, yet I do not believe there is a case on record where, after the pleadings were made up, after the argument was delivered and the case decided, it was ever reopened for the taking of further testimony and practically for a new trial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman like to have some more time?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Will that be time enough?

Mr. WATSON. I would like to have a little bit more.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I will surrender a part of the time that the gentleman from New York was to yield to me.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri. The minority report recites the fact that this was done in two other cases, the case of Hopkins against Kendall, in the tenth Kentucky district, and of Jackson against Smith, in the first Maryland district. I have examined both of those cases, and I find that they present no parallel to this case. This House, at the instance of the Committee on Elections and at its unanimous request, and before any judgment was rendered in the Hopkins and Kendall case, permitted the committee to take further testimony in order to decide that case. In the case of Jackson against Smith the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported to the body that the testimony was insufficient to enable it to enter a judgment, and asked that it be permitted further time in which to take testimony; and I want to say to this House that that further time never eventuated, and that that case was never decided.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] asked what the attitude of the committee is toward the evidence in this case. The committee can not believe these returns. The committee can not separate the good from the bad. The election officers could not separate them, and they made a mistake as to one-third of them. The attitude of the committee is that with these violations of the statute law of Missouri, with these falsifications staring them in the face, no man is wise enough to put his hand on those ballot boxes and tell which ballot represents the will of the voter and which misrepresents it. The case answers to the requirement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], because it does affect the result. It elects one man in this case and sends another one from your midst. This fraud is bold; it is patent; it is not denied by the minority members of the committee; it is seen of all men; and we come here to tell you that you can not accept it as a basis on which to found a title of a Member to a seat in this body. Hence, we say, reject these returns; and while I need not stop to refer to the adjudicated cases in which that precedent has been established and that doctrine expounded, I undertake to say, as a lawyer, that in no textbook, in no court decision, aye, in no decision of this body, can there be found precedent for accepting returns where the fraud is so glaring as to affect the whole, so that you can not separate the good from the bad. So the attitude of the committee is that they ought to be rejected, because you can not rely on them, because they do not state the truth, and because they stand for nothing.

What is the alternative suggested by the other side? They want the precedent established that although you have set up fraud by a thousand badges and proven it beyond reasonable doubt, yet because you disfranchise the good voter as well as the bad, you ought to go back to St. Louis and hold an inquest some 18 months after the event to find out how these people voted in that election. Gentlemen, we think that is useless; we think it is impracticable; and I might go further and say we think it is impossible. In the first place, I very much doubt whether under the statute law of Missouri, which is the law under which we act in respect to this matter, a committee of this body could compel a single voter in Missouri to testify how he voted unless he chose to testify. The case to which I referred this morning—decided in 1911—held that the voter would be permitted to testify how he voted; but it has not been held in Missouri that the voter could be compelled to testify how he voted. In the first place, then, if you went there to try to take the testimony of these many citizens, you would be confronted, doubtless, with the situation that they were not willing to testify, and there you would be at the end of your rope; but suppose they were willing to testify, what knowledge would you gain? These people live in what is known as the levee district in St. Louis, along the river front. It is a district of tenement houses inhabited by people of nomadic habits and without means for the most part. In large measure they are illiterate. The testimony shows that within a few weeks after the election many of them did not remember for whom they voted. What assurance could this House feel that after the lapse of 18 months and the passing of other elections, they could remember in the first place for whom they voted; and, in the next place, there in St. Louis subjected to all of the local influences that could be brought to bear, who knows what they would be willing to tell; how they voted in an election for the unlawful conduct of which perhaps their friends and neighbors were being prosecuted?

In addition to that, if 800 of them were not to be located by the contestant in this case when he served his notice of contest, what possible assurance is there that we could locate them now after nearly two years have gone by? I undertake to say that never in the history of this body has such a proposition been made to it. I undertake to say that if we attempted to go there the result would be futile and that instead of the inquiry resulting in additional satisfaction upon these points you would find it had been only a partial one and that the result would at best be left in doubt.

One other point in this matter and I am through. The minority members of this committee would have this House believe that because the contestant had voted against Thomas E. Kinney for Congress in 1910, therefore a thousand people of the character and circumstances I have described—people without fixed habitation and friendships—had felt so much resentment in consequence of that fact that they had turned around to a man, deserted their party, scratched the Democratic nominee, and voted for the Republican ticket. In the days of chivalry one blast of Roderick's horn was said to have brought a thousand from the Highlands——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to use some of his time.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I take the floor with evident embarrassment because of the personal interest I have in this case; but, gentlemen, I value and prize more highly my good name, such as I have, than I do any seat in even this the greatest legislative body in the world, and I feel it is my duty to assist you, as little or as much as I can, in the discharge of the duty which you all must realize is one of the most important duties that comes to Representatives in this great body. When this election occurred in November, 1912, and it was complained of by the contestant, the gentleman who was my opponent upon the Democratic ticket, that he had been defrauded of votes in the fifth ward, and when complaints were published by him in the newspapers, and even when it was said that he would ask indictments of election officials, I stated then in the public press—and that statement has held good ever since—that if he or anybody could show that I had been elected by fraudulent votes that I would refuse to accept the certificate of election; and not only that, but I would pay out of my own private earnings $100 for every conviction they could obtain of election officials. [Applause on the Republican side.] That statement was made and published in the public press. I have been ready and willing to carry out that promise to this day. Some men were indicted, and those indictments were brought here to Washington by the contestant and have been paraded here among the membership of this House. Those were brought before the Committee on Elections, although every man who knows law and justice and right knows that that had no part in this case, because they were not a part of the record, but they were put in the brief of the contestant as a part of his argument referring to the indictments returned against officials involved in these fifth-ward election precincts. I have a copy of the indictment here. I did not bring it into the case; it was brought into the case by the contestant by bringing these indictments here. I protested to his counsel that it was unfair to try to influence Members of the House by something that does not appear in the record in any place at all.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I can not yield to the gentleman; I have not the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CANTOR). The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to ask the gentleman whether, in justice to the chairman of the committee, at least, it is not a fact we excluded those indictments, and the chairman indicated that they were not admissible in evidence?

Mr. DYER. I know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY] at the hearing of the committee in December, 1913, rose in his place as a member of that committee and offered in evidence these indictments and asked that they be considered as evidence of fraud in this election. I know it was done, and I do not know that they were ever excluded or were not considered, because I have never received any official information otherwise, and the hearings do not disclose that it was excluded from consideration. But, gentlemen, in fairness to all mankind, in justice to everybody, I have secured here copies of these indictments certified by the proper officials. After a long time these cases were finally brought to trial, but an effort, in my judgment, has been made to delay these indictments until this election case could be disposed of, so as to prejudice your mind against a just and proper verdict, which you should render in this case; but, thank God, from whom justice does come, one of these cases was finally forced to trial week before last. These men were indicted jointly, and when the case came up for trial the men indicted asked for a severance, and the circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis selected to try the case of Daniel Morrisey as a case which was the strongest case he had.

The circuit attorney of the city of St. Louis, Mo., is a distinguished, honorable, public official, a Democrat in politics, a man who has been judge and presided over the circuit court of that city. He has some eight assistants in his office, and he took charge of that case personally, so that no one might say that a vigorous prosecution was not had. He prosecuted it personally, and a jury was brought in, and this case submitted to them. The ballot boxes were opened, and every ballot cast in the second precinct of the fifth ward was brought and laid before those jurors and the results showed to them, and they were examined in detail. This second precinct of the fifth ward is where they say fraud was committed with such glaringness. That is the worst one of which complaint is made, and, gentlemen, here is the indictment charging that these judges made a false account and a false return. They were tried upon it in the criminal courts of St. Louis, and here is the verdict of the jury to whom this case was submitted after four days of trial upon that charge, and the verdict was not guilty on the charge of fraudulent counting and returning in that case. [Applause on the Republican side.] Is not that some evidence? Here are men who saw every ballot, who examined every ballot personally; every one was laid before them, and nobody kept anything from the jury. They saw whether the ballots were accurate or false. And I might add that the judge or the court who sat in that case was Judge Jones, a lawyer and a distinguished Democratic official of the city of St. Louis. The counsel who defended Daniel Morrisey were Democratic members of the bar of St. Louis, and he was acquitted. His defense was that if any fraudulent alterations of the ballots were made they were not made in the polling places but by the contestant and the attorneys and counsel for the contestant when they made a recount in the election commissioners' office. I now read you from the St. Louis Republic of Wednesday, June 10, 1914. It is as follows:

MORRISEY SET FREE IN VOTE FRAUD CASE.

Daniel Morrisey, judge of election in the second precinct of the fifth ward at the fall elections of 1912, on trial in Judge Jones's court on a charge of making false count and return of ballots, was found not guilty by the jury at 9.30 o'clock last night.

The trial had been in progress three days. Morrisey contended that any discrepancy between the count as made by the judges and the recount made at the election commissioners' office in the Gill-Dyer contest was due to the ballots having been tampered with by outsiders prior to or during the recount.

There is a man, gentlemen, acquitted from the charge of fraud, and yet you would, on the testimony of a little over a dozen witnesses, deprive 1,537 voters in this ward of the right of franchise. Now, what appeared in this recount of the ballots by the election commissioners of the city of St. Louis? When the contestant filed his notice of contest he had a notary public serve subpœnas upon the commissioners of election, a bipartisan board, of the city of St. Louis, and which board selected every judge and every clerk who served in this election that is complained of, and selected them upon their responsibility, on their authority under the law; and they did not in any instance have to accept any recommendations from anybody. Those men, simply for the purpose of discharging a responsible duty, selected these men themselves, after the closest scrutiny and inquiry possible. They had to select these men in the precinct where they lived. They had to get as good men as they could, but they could not get any better than lived in the precinct. You, gentlemen, should take the trouble to look over the recount which is set up by the contestant. I want to say to you that in our desire to be fair in every way we have credited the contestant with every vote that his own testimony in the recount showed that he had gained, and after doing that we still have left a plurality of 350. After crediting him with every vote that the recount showed that he might possibly be entitled to, we have left, gentlemen, that number—350.

And, now, what has been shown to take away these 350 votes? Some dozen or so witnesses, voters, came in after the contestant had canvassed the fifth ward by letter and in person, and from the copy of the poll books he had the name and address of every man in the fifth ward who had voted at that election. He knew where they lived; he knew whether they voted the Democratic ticket or not and whether they had scratched him or not. As I have said, he canvassed that ward for witnesses to prove that he had been illegally defeated, and after doing it, of these entire 1,537 voters of these precincts he subpœnaed 56, by whom he attempts to prove his case. And it has already been shown to you, gentlemen, that a majority of these 56 that he subpœnaed himself, after this canvass, testified that they had voted against him, and they said why they had done so.

I want to read to you, gentlemen, if I have the time, what some of these voters testified to. Here is witness after witness called by him, who said they voted against him and testified why they voted against him. Even before the election, according to the testimony in the record, the present postmaster of the city of St. Louis, Mr. Colin Selph, appointed by President Wilson, stated that he told Mr. Gill, "you are guilty, and you will be beaten." This is found at page 1303 of the record.

Now, gentlemen, these 56 witnesses are from the different precincts. These 56 witnesses that he found in all of these precincts testified as follows: In the second precinct he subpœnaed 4 witnesses, and 3 of them swore that they scratched him and said why. One impeached his ballot. You can find, gentlemen, some men after every election, if they are scratching, who, when they are brought to the bar and put under test and are charged with voting against their own party ticket, will swear that they did not, however truthful they may be otherwise. And they found this small number. In the second precinct they want to throw out all of those votes because 1 man out of 204 men swore he did not scratch Gill, although his ballot indicated he had.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Certainly. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. RUCKER. I thought possibly the gentleman made a statement which he did not intend. Did I understand you to say that Mr. Selph, the present postmaster of St. Louis, testified in this case? I understand, as a matter of fact, there is a mistake about that, and that Mr. Selph did not testify at all.

Mr. DYER. It is in the record, I will say to my colleague, and the page of the record is given in the report.

Now, gentlemen, they want to throw out those 204 votes in the second precinct because one man impeached his ballot. In addition to that, what? In the recount made by the contestant it showed that he gained votes and I lost votes. Was he not credited with every one of them? Did not we credit him with them? And has not the verdict of 12 men been unanimously rendered that there was no fraud with the ballots before them, which none of you gentlemen have seen? You have only seen some ballots paraded around here which were photographic copies. And I want to say to you that that kind of testimony is not worth anything. In the first place, nobody was subpœnaed by the contestant—that is, put upon the stand—to swear as to any similarity of handwriting, or forgery, or anything of that kind. He did subpœna a man, an expert in handwriting, but he did not put that man upon the stand when he came to examine these ballots. So that testimony, gentlemen, is not worth anything, except for the purpose of being used, as these indictments were used, to try to prejudice Members of this great House against an honest discharge of their sworn duty.

Gentlemen, here is the testimony of some of Gill's own witnesses:

Charles Kohl, precinct 2 (p. 394), "I know I scratched this guy that is making a big roar about nothing. If I didn't I hope I may drop dead." Yet the majority would throw out his vote.

Frank Blagg, precinct 3, testified (p. 772) that he also scratched Gill and wrote in Dyer. Why reject this vote?

Fred Farnsworth, precinct 4, testified (p. 197) that he asked a judge to prepare his ballot because the booths were occupied and he had no pencil, directing the judge to scratch Gill and write in Dyer. Yet the majority propose to throw out this ballot with the rest of the precinct.

W. B. Jameson, precinct 4, testified (p. 2151) that as it was dark in the booth and he had no pencil, he asked a judge to scratch his ballot, marking out Gill and inserting Dyer. Yet the majority, in throwing out the precinct, would reject this proven ballot.

Edward Johnson, precinct 9, testified (p. 498) that the election judge of whom he asked assistance "didn't say nothing at all about scratching"—this in a precinct which the majority throw out. He voted for Dyer (p. 499); yet the majority would take away this vote by throwing out the precinct.

Emmett Brown, precinct 9, testified (p. 2126) that he scratched the Progressive candidate and voted for Dyer. The majority would rob Mr. Dyer of this vote by throwing out the precinct.

William Kinney, precinct 14 (p. 310), testified to scratching Gill and writing in Dyer. The majority would deprive contestee of this vote by throwing out this precinct.

George Wilcox, precinct 14 (pp. 305, 306), testified as follows:

"Q. Now, what questions were asked you when you came in?—A. He only said 'Good morning' to me; that is all.

"Q. What questions were asked you by the judges and clerks, if any?—A. Well, I asked the judge how to write out the ballot.

"Q. Did they ask you where you lived?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And your name?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And then they did what?—A. I didn't know how to write out the ballot; I asked for a Democratic judge. He asked me what names I wanted to scratch out.

"Q. Did he ask you anything else?—A. No, sir.

"Q. Did he ask you who you wanted to write in?—A. No, sir."

And (p. 306) "I told him to cut out Gill and put L. C. Dyer in the ticket."

But the majority propose to throw out this vote, with the precinct.

Bruce W. Casterline, precinct 17, testified (p. 409) that he voted for Dyer, yet the majority, by throwing out this precinct, seek to deprive Mr. Dyer of this proven vote.

William Myers, also in precinct 17, testified (p. 407): I told him (the judge)—he had a pencil, I didn't have any—I told him, "scratch Gill and write Dyer below it." Yet the majority throw out this established vote in rejecting this precinct.

Henry Williams, also in precinct 17, colored, testified (p. 418) that he was "a little under the influence of liquor that day * * * There was two men on the Republican ticket—that is, Dyer and Howard Sidener—I voted for them, and he put my slip in the box * * * he fixed it up all right, just as I told him to." The majority would take this established vote from Mr. Dyer by throwing out the whole precinct.

Then, Bartley Burke and Thomas Burke, in the same precinct 17, testify that they voted against Gill and for Dyer (pp. 421, 426); they did not know how to scratch, and asked the judge to do so for them. By throwing out the precinct, the majority would also deprive Mr. Dyer of these proven Democratic votes.

These are simply typical of the array of voters who came in to testify frankly that they had scratched Mr. Gill and voted for Dyer in these disputed precincts. It therefore seems that there is no room for conjecture; that the vote as returned should be corrected, in so far as the evidence shows any possible errors, but that in the face of this mass of testimony corroborating the returns, it would be unconscionable to throw out seven precincts, from which some 2 per cent of the voters have been examined as to their ballots, and about 1 per cent have impeached the official returns. To do so is certainly a new rule in congressional election contests.

The utter needlessness of fraud makes it hard to believe that there was any concerted movement at the instance of the party leaders. Gill ran behind his ticket in every ward, there being seven wards in the district, and he himself concedes the election to have been regular in all except this one ward; he ran behind his ticket in the ward in which he resides. The general Democratic uprising against him in the fifth ward was noised throughout the city two weeks before election. The vote for the Democratic candidate for governor compares with contestant's vote, as follows:

	Ward—
	5	6	7	15	16	17	23
Major	2,047	1,517	1,939	1,768	2,008	1,841	1,818
Gill	991	1,454	1,849	1,682	1,919	1,783	1,747

That he should fall far behind in the fifth ward particularly was to have been expected long before the election from the revelation of his having scratched two years before the then congressional candidate who resided there, of whom the ward committeeman testified, at page 1194, "the man that would scratch Tom Kinney would have a hell of a lot of nerve to try to run on a Democratic ticket * * *. I don't know how he (Gill) got as many votes as he did; he must have stolen them." And (p. 1193) "I knew we had enough to beat him, and that is all I was concerned with." And (p. 1192):

"Q. You testified that you had a hundred or more people at your meeting when you gave out the words to defeat Mr. Gill?—A. We did; we had more than that; we had one that went about 500; after we gave the same order out at one of our regular meetings."

Other witnesses also testify that they had plenty of votes to defeat Gill long before the election. State Senator Michael Kinney, whose brother Gill scratched two years before, testified at page 1250:

"Just as soon as that report (of Gill scratching Kinney in 1910) went out, why it was around; they were up in arms; everybody that met me and asked me, I told them about it. * * * The story was circulated if Dyer was good enough for Gill to vote for two years ago, he was good enough for them to vote for this year. * * * I voted for Dyer—the first Republican I ever did vote for, and I hope it will be the last."

The majority report, by throwing out Michael Kinney's precinct (the seventeenth), would deprive the contestee of that man's vote and of others of like sort who confirm their ballots. We do not believe that the precedents justify throwing out a vote proven to be correct, whatever view may be taken of others left to inference and conjecture.

Other witnesses to the preelection uprising against Gill are Judge Bishop (above mentioned), now Democratic assistant circuit attorney, who said (p. 318): "It was noised all through the ward; had been for some little time before the election." And Thomas Burke, a voter (p. 422), said: "I just told him (the judge) to scratch Mr. Gill's name * * * I had my mind made up"—because Gill had "double-crossed" the Democratic ticket two years before. And (p. 423) Burke testified further:

"Q. Did that seem to be the unanimous feeling up there?—A. Yes."

This was in precinct 17, which the majority would throw out, on testimony about only 4 contradicted ballots out of 200 cast.

Then William Hoppe, another voter and not an election official, though active in the ward, testified (p. 1301):

"Q. So that there was a general or widespread feeling among the Democrats, as far as your knowledge extended?—A. The whole ward and outside the ward, any place you go to."

Gentlemen, that is the kind of testimony upon which you and I would rely. Yet my distinguished friend the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] says that the testimony of a few men establishes fraud. Gentlemen, the testimony of these voters in this election affect only their own vote.

We in this record showed by the evidence of judges and clerks and by voters that the election was carried on decently and in order, and in only one case in all of these precincts was there the least semblance of trouble, and that was in the seventeenth precinct, where some challengers were ordered out by the judges of election, and the judges testified why they ordered them out. It was because the challengers got into an argument and quarreled among themselves and disturbed the election. The judges of election are responsible for the honest and orderly conduct of an election in a polling place, and they have the right to order out the challengers or anybody else if they are creating a disturbance. But the testimony shows that there were policemen in that polling place, as in every other polling place in this ward on that election day, and that they stayed there all the time, so that if anything was done that was wrong those men would have seen it.

Now, gentlemen, that is the testimony as covering these voting witnesses. Why should we not take the testimony of those Democrats whose ballots showed that Gill was scratched? There are not so many of them, gentlemen; there are only 426 now, after eliminating those who have already testified. We know their names and their addresses, and we know where they can be located; and we know, gentlemen, that every single one of them will go upon the witness stand and, in my judgment, affirm his ballot.

Why do I know it? Because I say that the contestant, as shown in this record, made a personal canvass of the whole ward and saw every one of these men, and found out whether or not he scratched him, or whether some crooked judge did it; and having done this, he could not afford to put them all on the witness stand, and he put on only the few that he did put on, I have reason to believe, and so does any reasonable man, because these men were the only ones he could possibly count on.

The contestant, Gill, was not elected, and, gentlemen, by all that is honest and true, my certificate of election, after taking off every questionable vote, is as clear as that of any other gentleman in this House, and if it were not so I would not be here to-day.

The minority can submit only one resolution as a substitute for those of the majority. I contend now, as I contended before the Committee on Elections, that this additional testimony should be taken to clear up the doubt in the minds of that committee. When did I ask the Committee on Elections to let me take testimony of these 425 men in dispute? Was it yesterday or a month ago? No. I asked it in a written communication addressed to the chairman of the committee on the 13th day of March, 1914. I asked for 30 days. I asked to take this testimony under the same rules of taking testimony in election-contest cases and at my own expense, and I made in my statement in that written request that if I did not secure the testimony satisfactorily to the majority of the committee, showing that they were wrong in their tentative vote, I would decline to accept any pay for the time consumed in taking that testimony.

That fact is not in dispute, and the chairman himself will tell you it is true. Gentlemen, have I done anything to show that I have not been willing to meet the issue? Have I not done my full duty in trying to find out if anything is wrong? I do not want any fraudulent vote, and there is not a man living to-day who can say that I ever asked, sought, or tried by any means on earth to obtain a fraudulent vote, either for myself or for anyone else.

Let us take the testimony of these 400 men, and we will convince even the members of the committee who are reasonable men—and almost all of them are—beyond any possible doubt that they are in error. My friend Mr. WATSON, who represents in part one of the greatest States in this Union, a State that I love, because my good and noble father was born there, has told you that there are no precedents for taking testimony in a case like this after it has been closed. I cite here a case which is cited in the minority report, a case similar to this, for taking testimony; and if you will examine it, you will find it is almost exactly parallel to this. It is the case of Hopkins against Kendall, in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

In that case the difference between the majority and minority of the committee arose as to whether the vote of the whole county should be rejected or whether the contestant should simply be credited with the number of votes actually shown to have been lost to him by the fraud. The majority of the committee found that 79 votes were lost to the contestant, and as this number was not sufficient to overcome the returned plurality of the sitting Member (his plurality being 253 votes), the majority concluded that the sitting Member was entitled to his seat. The minority contended for the rejection of the entire vote of the county. In this case my plurality, after crediting the contestant with every vote that he was shown to be possibly entitled to in the official recount of the ballots, was 350. As shown above, Mr. Gill took the testimony of 54 witnesses in these seven precincts, and only 18 of them impeached their ballots; hence the most under the showing made by the contestant that he would be entitled to would be 18, which, taken off of my plurality of 350, would still leave my plurality 332. In that case—Hopkins against Kendall—the majority concluded that the sitting Member was entitled to his seat, but the minority contended for the rejection of the entire vote of the county. The controversy therefore was the same in that case as in this; fraud was charged in both cases to have been committed by election officials. In order to obtain the best possible testimony as to what was the exact and correct vote in that case, that chairman of the Elections Committee, Mr. William H. Moody, of Massachusetts—afterwards justice of the Supreme Court of the United States—reported to the House a resolution authorizing the committee to take further testimony upon the matters in dispute. Mr. Moody presented this resolution to the House on June 6, 1896. The resolution was adopted, further testimony was taken, and on February 17, 1897, the House adopted the minority report for the majority report.

This shows that the taking of further testimony in that case, similar in all respects to this one, had the result of changing the decision of the Committee on Elections, because the committee itself recommended to the House that the minority report be substituted for the majority report. It is true that that case was decided near the end of the Congress, but justice was apparently done, because the committee changed its report after taking further testimony. I could cite numerous cases similar and where similar action was taken by the House. The question that the House wants to decide is whether or not the contestant or myself was rightfully elected. Whether I retain my seat for a longer period because of this further search for testimony is immaterial as compared with having complete justice done. The burden of proof was upon the contestant to prove his case. I claim that the record fails to disclose that he has proven his case. The majority, at its meeting in March last, when tentative votes were taken upon eliminating entire precincts, indicated that in their belief the contestant had shifted the burden of proof from the contestant to myself. If that was a fact, then I should at least have an opportunity to sustain that burden and furnish additional testimony. My letter to the chairman of the committee on March 13 last stated in detail how, when, and in what way I could secure the testimony that was vital, as indicated by the tentative votes of the committee. To deprive me of that opportunity is doing me a great injustice, as indicated by the decisions in previous cases similar to this one.

Gentlemen, there are other numerous cases cited in Hinds' Precedents and in the books that guide us in these matters. When the gentleman says, therefore, that there is no precedent for it, he is certainly mistaken as to the prior rulings of the House along the line indicated. It will not take very long to do this. Would not you and would not I and would not the Committee on Elections feel better after knowing whether or not these men did scratch Gill, or whether the judges of election did it without their knowledge? They have never been asked this question. Only 56 out of 1,537 have been asked the question. More of them have said that they scratched Mr. Gill than have testified the other way, and those witnesses were put upon the stand by Mr. Gill himself. Gentlemen, what is the further law covering these matters? I find other cases which have been before the House that are practically similar to this. I find a case from the State of Virginia, the case of Walker v. Rhea (Rept. No. 2566, Fifty-sixth Congress). There was a case where the Democratic candidate ran 1,751 votes ahead of the Democratic candidate for President, who is the present Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan. The Democratic candidate in that district ran 1,751 votes ahead of the Democratic candidate for President. In the contest from that district this was cited as one evidence of fraud, but the committee brushed it aside and said it was no evidence of fraud that a candidate ran ahead of his ticket. In this fifth ward I was not the only candidate who ran ahead of the ticket there.

I want to say to my friend Mr. WATSON and others who have referred to it that the record itself shows that the Republican candidate for sheriff in that same election ran up practically with me, only 50 or 60 votes different. He got 2,131, and the Democratic candidate for sheriff in that ward got 945 votes. Democrats voted against the Democratic candidate for sheriff for the same reason that they voted against the Democratic candidate for Congress. Both had been against their candidate for Congress in the previous election.

Now, gentlemen, you may say what you please about there being such a number of Democrats who scratched the Democratic candidate, but this ward is different from most of the places from which you come. It is a ward down in the heart of the city, in the business district, where 23 or 24 great banks and trust companies are located. There are great office buildings and great factories in that ward. The voters live in small houses along the river front, and in the cheap dwellings, lodging houses, tenements, and so forth. Thomas E. Kinney was their leader, and you can only describe him by saying that he had the same kind of a following in that portion of the city of St. Louis that Tim Sullivan had with a portion of the Democratic Party in the city of New York. This man Kinney rose from a newspaper boy. He came from the slums. He became a leader in his ward; he became a representative of the ward for eight years in the city assembly, and then for eight years a member of the Missouri State Senate, and it was through his efforts that some splendid laws were enacted for the poor people of St. Louis. He stood well among these people. They loved him, and they were willing to show their love for him even in death by working and voting against a man whom they had found out had been false to him, false to Kinney when he was hardly cold in death.

Gill came down to the fifth ward and asked Michael Kinney, now State senator, for this ward's support for the nomination for Congress. They claim that Gill represented to them that he had been a great friend of Tom Kinney, supported him in his race for Congress, loved and admired him, and that he wanted to be the same kind of a legislator for the poor people that Kinney had been. They went out and supported him. What does the record show? Running in a ward where he was never known before, Gill got 924 votes as against 251 for Arnold, an able lawyer of St. Louis. After this splendid showing of Kinney's friends for Gill at the primaries, there is further evidence in the record that only three or four weeks after this, when it was found out that Gill never was Kinney's friend and never supported him, they did not vote for him but against him.

Now, the record shows that he made no effort to disprove the charge and never would take oath that he did not vote as charged. Was there any crime committed by these Democrats in their going out and voting against a man that the record shows was false to his representations to them? What would you have done, gentlemen; what would anyone have done under those circumstances? You might have done it a little more intelligently; but, gentlemen, you must take into consideration the conditions in this ward, the class of men that live there, and the fact that these judges of election are called to the polling places at 6 o'clock in the morning and have to sit there until 7 o'clock at night, until the polls close; then count up and make returns. Now, with this ballot and all of these constitutional amendments—eight or nine of them—these men were there all night, and some of them until noon the next day, before they returned their books to the commissioner's office. Not alone in that ward, but all over the city. Now, gentlemen, you can take elections in your own district, and I warrant that you will find mistakes here and there. You will find where some men have been credited with more than they should have, but not done fraudulently. In this case, if you look over the recount made by the contestant himself, you will find that I gained votes in a number of these precincts myself. If men wanted to help me, certainly they would have given me what I was entitled to in the first instance.

Now I come to my request to the Election Committee on March 13, 1914. They met on March 12, and one of the members of the committee talked without permission of the committee to a member of the press. He told this representative of the press about their tentative vote in which they were going to throw Dyer out. The press man talked it around, and I heard about it. The next morning I wrote a letter, a copy of which I have, to Mr. GOLDFOGLE, setting forth in detail how I could prove the falsity of the charge as to fraud in the seven precincts in question. I stated how I could get the testimony of these voter witnesses, and I say to you, as I said to him, that I would bring the testimony here and present it to the Election Committee and cause them to change their views, and if I could not I would not ask you for one minute to hear the case anew. I will resign if I can not convince the committee of this House that they are in error in recommending that these votes be all thrown out.

Gentlemen, I have a responsibility in this, as you have. I have been given a certificate of election, and when I received the notice of a contest I selected for my counsel two of the best and ablest lawyers in the city of St. Louis—one of them, Franklin Miller, a Democrat all his life and the other, Albert Chandler, a Progressive—and I told these men that I wanted nothing but what was right. I said "You go up and watch the recount, and if you think I was not elected let me know at once and I will not go any further." I told them the same thing when the contestant started to take voter witnesses testimony, and that has been my attitude all through the contest.

My own counsel was selected without regard to politics, and there is no politics in this case. I do not want to be here for the money involved while this testimony is being taken, but I want a clean-cut verdict—one that I can take back to the people of St. Louis who sent me here, and which will plainly show that there was no unfair partisanship in it. I do not want you to decide this case by throwing out good votes. By throwing out these 1,537 votes you would throw out 350 Progressive votes, against which there is no complaint whatever, and the Progressives suffered changes in the recount, as did the Socialists. They did not have the same number of votes on the recount that they had originally. There are the Progressive votes, against which there is no complaint, in these 1,537 votes that the committee proposes to throw out. You also would throw out some hundreds of straight Republican ballots against which no complaint is made, and you would throw out the votes the contestant got himself. So the result is that to throw out 1,537 you would throw out 1,100 concerning which there is no question on earth as to their being correct. Will you not permit the testimony to be taken of these men whose votes are in question and allow them to say under oath, subject to cross-examination and without any possible injury to the House, whether or not they did scratch Mr. Gill themselves or whether some one else did it?

I do not care what the alleged business of a man is. You can call the crookedest fellow that ever walked the streets of a city and put him on the witness stand and ask him what his business is, and he may be a thief or the crook of the town, but unknown, perhaps, to the counsel he can give his business as that of a manufacturer or a builder or as a priest or anything. But that does not prove a case. Go down there and look at these ballots; let your committee look at them. A jury of good citizens in the city of St. Louis looked at them, and they looked at the returns, and after the most vigorous prosecution known in the city of St. Louis by one of the ablest circuit attorneys we ever had there, Judge Harvey, a Democrat, tried before an able and distinguished jurist of that city, Judge Jones, a Democrat, they found that this judge was not guilty of committing fraud by making false returns and false count.

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. No; I do not yield. There are other evidences to show how the voters of the fifth ward voted. There is evidence there to show not only the vote that Mr. Gill received in the primaries, with the assistance of the Democratic organization, but there are other evidences in the record to show other support. Here is the return in the fifth ward in the senatorial primary, in which a distinguished Senator of Missouri received 901 votes to 154 for another distinguished Democrat from Missouri, now a solicitor in the Department of Commerce, showing that the voters in that ward have an organization, that they follow their leaders, just as you gentlemen know the organizations in your States.

I do not think it is worth while to take time to discuss the question of these judges assisting voters in marking their ballots, because the Supreme Court of Missouri decided this matter in the One hundred and fortieth Report, back on June 29, 1897. The matter was then before the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri, and they decided that whether the voter was sworn before his ballot was fixed or not by the judges, it does not make any difference as to that man's vote being counted.

The supreme court says there, and points out in the plainest possible language, that voters may come in and the judges may see at once that they need assistance, even though they may have been able to write their names on the registration books, because there is scarcely anybody in the land now who can not write his name; but when it comes to fixing up a ballot, to reading over the names and scratching out names and putting in others, that is a different proposition, and they may need assistance, and the court says that that statute of Missouri which says that they must first be sworn is not mandatory at all, and it does not make any difference so far as those men's votes are concerned.

These judges and clerks were put upon the stand. We put them upon the witness stand and they were cross-examined by counsel for the contestant, and not one of them refused to answer any question that he was asked. They knew about the charge in the public press. The contestant wanted them indicted and prosecuted for what he claimed was a violation of the law, but yet when he put them upon the stand every single one of them answered every question he was asked. They did not take advantage of the constitutional prerogative, which perhaps they could have taken advantage of, and refuse to testify because it might tend to incriminate them, but they answered every question that was asked them. Every man who was called in the fifth ward to testify answered every question that he was asked, and to say now that you can not take the testimony of those men because they might refuse to testify is an awfully thin argument.

They will testify, and they will testify to the truth. I have not any inclination, gentlemen, to take further time from the members of the committee and the House who want to discuss this matter. I have taken the floor, as I told you, for the purpose of assisting you in the discharge of your duty in this case, and have talked to you in all frankness; there has not been any fraud shown to deprive me of a certificate of election. Where is the fraud, gentlemen; where is the conspiracy? I challenge any member of the committee to point to the testimony in the record and show that there was any agreement existing between the judges of one precinct or between the judges of any two or more precincts or between anybody else and the judges of election to count this man out. You have the testimony of Mr. Egan, a member of the congressional committee and of the city committee in that ward in which he stated the judges knew their duty. Well, did Mr. Egan mean by saying they knew their duty that it was to commit fraud, or did he mean that they knew their duty to carry on the election properly? He testified that he had two or three hundred Democrats at one time present at a meeting, and on one occasion about 500 in a meeting in which he explained to them what Gill had done to Tom Kinney. He testified that he was surprised that Gill got as many votes as he did under the circumstances.

Now, if gentlemen want to ask me any questions I will be glad to answer them, if I can.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What precincts were thrown out in ward 5?

Mr. DYER. None of them have yet, and I trust to God they will not throw them out under such testimony.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But I mean in the report, what do they recommend?

Mr. DYER. They recommend throwing out the second, third, fourth, fifth, ninth, fourteenth, and seventeenth.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, is there anything in the pleadings which indicated that the purpose was to throw out these precincts entirely and the gentleman would be called upon to prove by their evidence how people voted?

Mr. DYER. Well, I will answer the gentleman from South Carolina by stating I was served with a notice of contest, charging fraud in the fifth ward—the regular notice that is served upon a case of this kind.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me, that is a general allegation and not specifically applied to any one of these seven precincts.

Mr. DYER. He did, I think, challenge the fifth ward; but when he got down to take the testimony he could not find a single person in two precincts to testify to anything wrong at all.

In some of the others you only find one; in some two; and in some three. And I did not believe, nor does any sensible man believe, that the whole vote could be thrown out on such testimony.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Under the laws of Missouri, where are those ballots now?

Mr. DYER. They are in the custody of the election commissioners of the city of St. Louis, a bipartisan board, composed of two Democrats, one Progressive, and one Republican, appointed by the Democratic governor of the State of Missouri; and I suppose the ballots are under lock and seal.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How long are they preserved under the law?

Mr. DYER. As long as there is any possible use for them. They destroy them sometimes after five years or so, when there is no contest or legal proceedings pending.

Mr. HOWARD. How many of these witnesses that really cast ballots in the fifth ward were summoned by the contestant?

Mr. DYER. In the whole ward or in the seven precincts?

Mr. HOWARD. In the seven precincts.

Mr. DYER. In the 7 precincts he subpœnaed 56 witnesses.

Mr. HOWARD. How many of those witnesses that were subpœnaed at his instigation swore that they scratched him?

Mr. DYER. The majority of the committee in this report mentions 11. We have stated that there were 18. Some of them attempted to impeach the vote, and there is some doubt whether they did or not under their testimony, because under the cross-examination it was shown that some of these men could not possibly be telling the truth, because their testimony showed that they were referring to the primary or something else and not to this election at all. The majority of the committee only state 11.

Mr. HOWARD. I can not get it from the hearings, but I understand that all but 18 swore they voted as the ballot showed they voted.

Mr. DYER. They swore positively that they voted as the ballot showed, but there may have been three or four more that did not contradict their ballots.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, how many ballots were left that were like these 56 that they examined the voters on that were in dispute or you wanted to investigate yourself at your own expense?

Mr. DYER. Now, there were 512 ballots in these precincts on which the name of Gill was scratched. I was voted for on a portion of them. He took the testimony of 56. We took the testimony of judges and clerks and Mr. Kinney and Mr. Egan and maybe a dozen others. There are not much over 400.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. DYER. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think I can give correct answers to the gentleman. There were 512 scratched ballots. Seventy-five of those ballots had Mr. Gill's name scratched off and no name written underneath. That left 437, and out of that 437 I discount these 56, which would leave 381.

Mr. HOWARD. In other words, they would not vote for Mr. Dyer or Mr. Gill, but scratched out the name?

Mr. DYER. They did not vote for anybody.

Mr. RUPLEY. Now, the notice of the contest on the part of the contestant was served upon all of the electors of the fifth ward in this congressional district, where a letter was mailed by the contestant to all the electors of this ward?

Mr. DYER. Yes; I think that is true. I think he wrote a letter to them.

Mr. RUPLEY. Do you know how many letters were returned from the post office marked by the authorities as "Unable to deliver"?

Mr. DYER. No; neither does the gentleman know it, according to the record. There is nothing in the record about it.

Mr. RUPLEY. I have gathered it from the record or from the testimony before us that more than 500 were returned.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman does not find any such statement in the record. If he does, I hope he will call the attention of the House to it when he reaches it in his argument.

Mr. RUPLEY. I will.

Mr. DYER. Whether they were returned or not, he had the names and addresses of every man, and he could go and subpœna them personally, and if he could not locate them the process server would have shown that they could not be found. He could have put that testimony in the record.

Mr. RUPLEY. There were more than 100 witnesses called on the part of the contestant—nearly 150 witnesses.

Mr. DYER. No. The total witnesses in the whole ward, consisting of 17 precincts, with 3,000 voters, or so, that he subpœnaed were 95. That is, in the whole ward.

Mr. RUPLEY. I have a list prepared here showing over 140.

Mr. DYER. Well, I do not know anything about the gentleman's list.

Mr. RUPLEY. All the names of the witnesses called are found here in the notes of the testimony, and I find here one hundred and forty-odd witnesses.

Mr. DYER. I am talking about voters in the ward.

Mr. RUPLEY. I am talking about electors who cast their ballots at the November election in 1912, and I find one hundred and forty-odd electors.

Mr. DYER. I make the statement, and the gentleman can not show it to be different, that the total number of witnesses he subpœnaed in all the ward of 3,000 voters was 95, and the total in the 7 precincts in question was 56, and I challenge anyone to find differently.

Mr. RUPLEY. How many witnesses?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY]?

Mr. DYER. No; I do not.

Now, I have notices here showing the kinds of letters he sent out all over the ward, in order to find out whether men voted for him or not.

It is shown here that one sent word back, "Yes; I scratched you," and applying an epithet to him or something, showing the feeling in the ward against him. There is another, showing a different matter, showing that letters were sent out, and showing that every effort was made by him to find men to impeach the ballots, and showing that he could not do it.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. Is a copy of the letter sent out by Gill in the record?

Mr. DYER. Yes; two or three of them; the letters he sent out showing what information he was asking. They are all in the printed record.

Now, gentlemen, here is a proposition that you throw out 1,537 votes, upon what? Not on the ground that the contestant did not receive a full vote, because he got everything there that he could possibly get. The courts have adjudicated the question that there was no false count and no false return, because a judge is acquitted absolutely on the charge of a false count and false return. There can not be any fraud about the recount. He has got the benefit of every ballot that was possibly his. And, putting that aside, and under the law, gentlemen, here is a case absolutely in point showing what the attitude of the contestant must be in taking the testimony of the body of voters.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague, Judge RUCKER?

Mr. DYER. I do.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman this: Did I understand you correctly to say a moment ago that on the trial of Mr. Morrisey, recently, in St. Louis the ballots used in this election of 1912 were exhibited to the jury?

Mr. DYER. Yes; absolutely; every one of them, and brought there from the election commissioners' office and submitted to the jury, examined, and handled by them upon the table in front of them, under the direction and examination of the attorneys.

Mr. RUCKER. The ballots were thoroughly examined by the counsel?

Mr. DYER. Yes; the newspapers so stated. I will read another extract from the St. Louis Republic that shows that that did happen. It is stated in this article, part of which has been cut by the stenographers from the St. Louis Republic of Wednesday, June 10, that this was the first trial that was had in the matter in which the ballots had been brought in.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman's statement is based only on a newspaper article? That is the only information he has?

Mr. DYER. Besides the statement in the St. Louis Republic, I have also seen the statement in the account of the trial in other papers.

Mr. RUCKER. Was it not expressly ruled that the number on the ballot, indicating who cast the vote, should not be seen by the jury?

Mr. DYER. I do not know as to that.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not true that no jury or anybody else could tell whether A or B cast the ballot?

Mr. DYER. The ballots were brought there from the election commissioners' office and examined, showing the marks on the ballots that the contestant is complaining about, where his name was scratched off. They were all shown to the jury.

Mr. RUCKER. Together with the number on the ballot, identifying the voter?

Mr. DYER. No; I do not say that.

Mr. RUCKER. You could not tell who cast the ballot. If you have the article there now and desire to read it, I would be glad if you would.

Mr. DYER. It is in the papers here somewhere.

Mr. RUCKER. Very well; if you can not find it, no matter.

Mr. DYER. Here is the article I was referring to:

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, June 10, 1914.]

DANIEL MORRISEY IS ACQUITTED OF ELECTION FRAUD—ORIGINAL BALLOTS PRODUCED FIRST TIME IN STATE PROSECUTION OF SUCH A CASE.

The first successful attempt in Missouri to produce original ballots in court as evidence in an election fraud prosecution resulted Tuesday night in the acquittal of Daniel Morrisey by a jury after less than three hours' deliberation.

Morrisey, who was a Democratic judge of election in precinct 2 of the fifth ward in November, 1912, was acquitted of "feloniously and willfully making a fraudulent election return" when he signed a report giving Republican Congressman L. C. Dyer 199 votes and M. J. Gill, Democratic candidate, 5 votes. The ballots were produced in court and counted in the presence of the jurors, and it was found that 106 ballots for Dyer were in the box and 70 for Gill, besides a few imperfect ballots rejected because of defects. Circuit Attorney Harvey personally prosecuted the case.

It was stated in this article that the ballots were all brought there, and I know as a matter of fact, from other testimony, that that was so. There is no question about it. The ballots were all brought there, and that is one of the reasons why they stated that they were delaying the case, because the counsel for Morrisey had tried to get an order from the supreme court withholding from the jury the ballots on account of their being secret. The supreme court, as it decided in the decision referred to by Judge WATSON in 1911, held that there is no such thing in Missouri now as secrecy with respect to the ballot when it comes to showing fraud in an election. The ballots were all there.

Now, if anyone wants to ask me a question, I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. COOPER. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I have not had time to examine all the voluminous record of testimony in this case, but I see in the minority report this statement, and will ask the gentleman to verify it from his knowledge of the testimony:

> Here the majority report would throw out 7 precincts, and it would result in giving the contestant a plurality of 67 votes; yet from some of these precincts only 4 voters were subpœnaed as witnesses to impeach the vote of 200 and more votes. In only one precinct were there as many as a dozen voters subpœnaed, and in that precinct more than half of those subpœnaed confirmed the record of their vote.

That is a very strong statement, to throw out the vote of two hundred and odd voters on the testimony of four. Is that correct?

Mr. DYER. That is the testimony which this report of the committee would have to be sustained upon.

We are offering to bring in this testimony and have you vote upon it after you have got all this testimony. And with due respect and due regard for the Committee on Elections, first let the committee examine this testimony, and if in their judgment they have made a mistake about these precincts let them have a chance to reverse it. And, gentlemen, if they do not, I say to you now, as I said before, I will not accept any pay for the time during the taking of the testimony, and you will not have to try this case again, because I will offer my resignation. [Applause.]

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. DYER. I do.

Mr. HENSLEY. I want to ask a question, and I want some information on the point. As I understood you a while ago, in answer to the question asked by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], you were somewhat surprised that the contestant insisted upon this certain ward being eliminated and thrown out. Is that correct?

Mr. DYER. He only complained about the fifth ward, but as a matter of fact he ran behind his ticket in every ward, and I ran ahead of mine in every ward.

Mr. HENSLEY. What I am getting at is this: Is it not true that from the very beginning of this contest you were apprised of the fact that they were insisting that this ward should not be counted?

Mr. DYER. But it was counted. The complaint was that there was fraud in this ward.

Mr. HENSLEY. And that you should not count any of that ward.

Mr. DYER. That is what he wanted; but as I stated to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], while he made that blanket charge in the beginning, when he started to take testimony, in his written brief and argument submitted to the committee he admitted that it was not true as regards the whole ward; that in at least two districts he could find no complaint whatever, and made that admission; so he could not throw out that whole ward.

Mr. HENSLEY. When did the counsel representing the contestant appear before the committee here and make his argument?

Mr. DYER. He made one argument in December.

Mr. HENSLEY. In his December speech did he not then insist that this ward should not be counted at all?

Mr. DYER. No; he did not. I have the gentleman's argument in toto here, in which the counsel admitted that he did not want the whole ward thrown out, because in his own brief signed by him he admitted that precincts 6 and 12 were absolutely correct. Although Gill was scratched in those precincts, too, he said they were correct, and he had no complaint whatever to make of those two precincts. Therefore he could not possibly have asked to throw out the whole ward, because his own brief made a different statement.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to correct his statement that counsel appeared before the committee in December? It was in January.

Mr. DYER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I accept his statement. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman if it is not true that in precincts 6 and 12 a number of the judges of election scratched Mr. Gill, and that in one precinct only two of the judges, and in another four, voted for Mr. Gill.

Mr. DYER. I think that is true. I have that somewhere.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. I understand from the gentleman that the time the contestant's counsel appeared here was in December and the record shows that it was December 15.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have just looked at the record and find it to be as stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. I simply want to call attention to the line of decisions where it says that when an effort is made to throw out a whole vote it is the duty of the contestant, upon whom is the burden of proof, not only to show fraud but also to show what the correct vote was in at least one of the counties or one of the precincts by calling in the body of voters.

I want to call attention to an Alabama case here, which, with many others, is along that line. It is the case of Threet against Clarke, in the Fifty-first Congress, Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, pages 466–469. Here is what the decision in that case says, upon substantially the same conditions as those in this case. Here is the decision of the Committee on Elections, which was sustained by the House. I read from the decision of the committee:

> If the results at all these polls were, as alleged by contestant, tainted by fraud and corruption to such an extent that the polls should be excluded, he has failed, in the opinion of your committee, to exercise that diligence which the law asks of every suitor before granting him the relief prayed for. Bearing in mind that the character and tendency of the proof is very similar in all these precincts, the contestant might reasonably have been expected to have at least, in one or a few of them, called in the body of the voters of the precinct and established his claim of fraud, if fraud existed, beyond question. He does not even pretend to have made an effort to do so in this contest.

That is a case in the Fifty-first Congress, and in that case, as in this, the same questions were involved, and the number of witnesses to prove the charges of fraud and to show that the vote was dishonest was substantially the same number as in this case. Here are precincts in which only 2, 3, and 4, and not over 10, witnesses were subpœnaed, and in precincts where there were over 200 voters each. That is the law to-day, and it never has been overruled.

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Certainly.

Mr. CARLIN. Who was the Republican candidate against Kinney at the time Gill is charged with voting for the Republican candidate?

Mr. DYER. I was.

Mr. CARLIN. Does the gentleman know whether Gill voted for Mr. Dyer at that time?

Mr. DYER. I do not care to give testimony. Kinney was my opponent there and I was elected, according to the returns, by 2,844 votes. Kinney contested my election. There was a wave in St. Louis of contesting everybody. They contested judges of the supreme court, public school commissioner, and everybody, wherefore or what for I do not know. But I do know that in the contest Kinney brought against me the testimony was taken as it was in this, thousands of pages of it, and it was argued before the Committee on Elections No. 2, and the committee submitted a report to the House unanimously saying that I had been elected, which report the House unanimously adopted.

Mr. CARLIN. Is there any denial in this record of the charge that Gill had voted for you against the Democratic nominee?

Mr. DYER. There is no denial. The only time that he ever made any denial was when he was called before the Democratic congressional committee and charged with it, when Mr. Kinney and some other members suggested to him that he ought to withdraw, for he could not be elected. He made the statement, so the witnesses say, that it must be a mistake. At no time and in no place has he ever made an affidavit or gone on the stand and denied it. The ballot is in the record as cast by him in that election November 10, 1910, and it shows that Gill voted ballot 360, and that it was a Democratic ballot, and that he scratched the name of Kinney and voted for Dyer, a Republican. That is in the record in this case, and though he—Gill—has often been charged with it, he has never under oath denied it, nor will he.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that in the record of this contest now between Gill and yourself?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was the ballot presented to the Committee on Elections?

Mr. DYER. Yes; it was a part of the record printed and given to them from which they made up this report, I suppose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was the original ballot cast at that election put in the record?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I mean the original ballot put in the box.

Mr. DYER. There was a recount made of the contests in 1910, the same as in this contest, and at the recount of the ballots the eighth precinct of the sixteenth ward, which was the one in which Mr. Gill voted, it was ascertained by the Democrats of the fifth ward that that ballot was cast for a Republican for Congress and Democratic otherwise. That is reproduced and properly proven by testimony of witnesses as Gill's ballot.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any testimony of any witness who has testified before this committee in this contest claiming that Gill had ever said to that witness, or any witnesses, that he had voted for you against Kinney?

Mr. DYER. Yes; positive testimony on that point. It is in the record on pages 1990–1995, and not denied by Gill in the record, though he had every opportunity to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. And he has not denied it in his testimony?

Mr. DYER. He never has denied it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Did Gill testify in this case?

Mr. DYER. He did not; and a part of our defense was that he was voted against and scratched and fought because he had voted for a Republican against the Democratic candidate two years before. That was in our defense—in our testimony—and we put the ballot in the record, and he never went on the stand to deny it.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Certainly.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Is it not a part of your statement that in the trial of the city officials the theory of the defense was that the contestant's attorneys were the parties who changed the election returns?

Mr. DYER. That was the defense of Morrisey, the election judge, that he did not make the false returns, but that they were made by the contestant and his watchers, and counsel and attorneys at the time they made the recount.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Upon what theory would they make a change to the prejudice of the contestant of several hundred votes, as I understand were changed?

Mr. DYER. They were all in his favor.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I understood they were against him.

Mr. DYER. Every one in his favor in those precincts.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. How about the other precincts?

Mr. DYER. In some of them I gained a few, but most of the gains were by Gill. In the recount of the second precinct I was put down as entitled to 106 and Gill to 73. In the court proceeding it was claimed that this was done by these men when they were making the recount; that they monkeyed with the ballots themselves. I do not say it was true, because I do not know; but I say that that was the defense made by Morrisey and upon which he was acquitted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does this record anywhere disclose the reasons assigned by Mr. Gill or by anybody for him for scratching his own ticket and voting for the gentleman in 1910?

Mr. DYER. No. That is all, Mr. Speaker. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret, being a new Member of the House, that I should be placed upon a committee that compels me to pass upon the validity of any Member's title to a seat in this House. I try to be fair in politics, and I like to deal with others who act fairly also. In the election held in St. Louis November 6, 1912, there is not any question in my mind from the evidence presented before this committee that Mr. Dyer was not legally elected, and that he is holding a seat in this House that another should occupy. Undoubtedly Mr. Dyer desires to be fair in his arguments, but when he states that Mr. Gill never denied that he voted for him I think he must have overlooked the proceedings in the last day of the hearings before the committee, a portion of which I desire to read at this time in relation to Mr. Gill's denial that in the election held in 1910 he voted for Mr. Dyer:

The CHAIRMAN. You just made reference to a publication in a newspaper, which I assume was the publication of the story that you had voted against Kinney. Am I right?
Mr. GILL. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Was there any denial on your part?
Mr. GILL. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. How did you make that denial?
Mr. GILL. The only way I could make the denial was this: That I voted against Kinney, and that the precinct he had shown you here—if you men will examine the precinct, you will see there were seven more votes in the box than were counted—that I claimed it was simply a mistake. I went further than that; I went to the supreme court in Jefferson City, where there is a contest——
The CHAIRMAN. That is not what I have reference to, Mr. Gill.
Mr. GILL. In just a moment I will come to it.
The CHAIRMAN. What I am trying to get at is whether, after the story of your voting for Dyer against Kinney came out, you made a denial. You said you did, and I asked you how, in what form, that denial was made before the election took place. That is what I meant to ask, if I did not ask it directly.
Mr. GILL. I stated that I denied it, and the newspapers copied my denial, and the supreme court had a contest for a judge upon the bench, Dyer——
Mr. DYER. I want to be interrupted, if the chairman wants him to make that statement, but it is not in answer to the chairman's question.
Mr. GILL. And the record in that contest showed——
Mr. KENNEDY. Did you make the denial at any public meeting?
Mr. GILL. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. What meeting was this?
Mr. GILL. A Democratic meeting.
The CHAIRMAN Where was it held?
Mr. GILL. In my own ward and other wards.
The CHAIRMAN. Before the election?
Mr. GILL. Before the election; I went all over the city.
The CHAIRMAN. Was it publicly made?
Mr. GILL. Publicly made.

It seems to me that that is as emphatic a denial as any man could make; that he never voted for Mr. Dyer.

There is another very strange feature in relation to this whole case. From January, 1913, until March 12, 1914, Mr. Dyer never made a request either before the committee or this House to have further evidence taken in St. Louis. He never at any time before the Committee on Contested Elections, until after all the evidence was in, argument of counsel concluded, and the case decided, made any request for the committee to visit St. Louis and examine the voters—as to who they voted for. I defy him or any member of the committee on the minority to deny that statement. But now, after the evidence was all in, after the arguments were all made, after he had been heard himself, and after the committee had voted on this case and decided it, the following day he sent a letter to the chairman of the committee, and I believe on the 1st of April sent another one, requesting that the committee reopen this case and open the ballot boxes, summon the voters, and ascertain how they voted.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think it is in ample time if a request is made before final decision is rendered, and just as soon as the contestee learns of the disposition to take this action of throwing out wholesale five or six precincts?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I do not. The committee have not thrown out wholesale five or six precincts.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. What have they done with them?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. The committee have not done a thing except what they were compelled to do from the evidence, and what the gentleman would do if he was on the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Have they not thrown out four or five precincts?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That is what I meant by saying "wholesale." I meant no reflection on the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Very well.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. So that we might have the record complete, especially with regard to the application to which the gentleman from Connecticut has reference, is it not also a fact that the chairman of the committee, after the denial of the motion, offered a resolution to the committee along the line of the request that had been made by the contestee, asking permission to bring that resolution into the House for its consideration, so that if the resolution were passed the committee might have it in its power to take further testimony at such time and within such limits as the committee saw fit.

Mr. BURNETT. What date was that? Was it early in the session?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; that was in April.

Mr. BURNETT. Of this year?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; and the request of the chairman was refused by a majority of the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I would state that that resolution mentioned by Mr. GOLDFOGLE was offered by him after this case had been decided by the committee.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Tentatively.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes; and final, I might say. Now, it seems to me that that was rather late to come in with such a request, particularly after the statement had been made before the committee that the voters in that district, hundreds of them, were rovers; that they were transients; that they were traveling from city to city and impossible to locate 18 months after election. What argument is advanced for the purpose of sending this case back to the committee? It has been decided by a former Congress that it was a very dangerous precedent to establish and a very dangerous course to pursue—that after votes had been cast one year and a half or a little over to have the voter testify just how he voted or have the case reopened.

The committee based its denial of the motion, amongst other grounds, on the authority of the report of the Elections Committee in the case of Giddings against Clark, which was decided in the Forty-second Congress (Smith, 91). In that case the committee said:

> It must be borne in mind that the party now asking an extension is the sitting Member. He is now, and has been during a large part of the term, exercising the functions and receiving the emoluments of the office in question. In a litigation of this character the thing in controversy grows daily less, and does not, as in most ordinary lawsuits, remain intact to be recovered by the successful party in the end. In this particular case the extension asked for would be very nearly equivalent to a final decision of the case in favor of the sitting Member upon the merits.
> We are now near the close of the second session of the Congress. If the parties are to be sent back to Texas to take further testimony, of course no further action can be taken until the opening of the third and last session, which is of but 90 days' duration, and would be necessarily far spent before a final decision could be reached. It does not follow from these considerations that a sitting Member can in no case be allowed an extension after the time allowed by law for taking testimony expires; but your committee think it does follow that no such extension should ever be granted to a sitting Member unless it clearly appears that by the exercise of great diligence he has been unable to procure his testimony, and that he is able, if an extension be granted, to obtain such material evidence as will establish his right to the seat, or that by reason of the fault or misconduct of the contestant he has been unable to prepare his case. (McCrary on Elections, 4th ed., p. 332.)

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. Do the proceedings of the committee show that a member of it undertook to put in copies of indictments at St. Louis, Mo., in the record?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. That was in the hearings before the committee.

Mr. SWITZER. Does it show that a Member himself did undertake to have them inserted?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. He offered the indictments.

Mr. SWITZER. Was it offered by either side, both sides being present by counsel?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. That is my impression, sir.

Mr. SWITZER. That is what I want to find out.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. And I objected to the indictments being offered as evidence before the committee.

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SWITZER. A member of the committee undertook to do that?

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Connecticut yield——

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I will.

Mr. RUPLEY. To answer that question? I desire to answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio. The indictments were brought in by the attorney for the contestant and laid on the table in the committee room—copies of the indictments—and then I made a motion that those indictments be admitted in evidence.

Mr. SWITZER. Was the other side represented?

Mr. RUPLEY. They were present at the time; Mr. Dyer was present himself at the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What did the gentleman read from when he first began to address the House?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I read from the statement before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Was that testimony taken in St. Louis, Mo., or was it an argument before the committee here?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. It was a statement before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. When the case was argued?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Oh, yes; when the case was argued.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is not part of the testimony in the case?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I will.

Mr. HARDY. I have not read over all the testimony, of course. Is there any evidence before the gentleman's committee contradicting the alleged facts that upon a recount these great differences were shown in more than one of these precincts? For instance, where Mr. Gill was given 5 and on a recount showed he was entitled to 73, and where Mr. Dyer was given one hundred and ninety-odd votes the recount showed he actually only got 106? Was there anything offered to disprove those facts?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. No.

Mr. HARDY. Were those substantially admitted facts; was there any contradiction of the facts before the committee?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. They were admitted, and there was no contradiction of the facts.

Mr. HARDY. So that the proposition made late in the contest was not to contradict these false returns or show these false returns were not made, but to go back and retake the vote as it was cast—virtually to have the election over?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Yes; that is the situation.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I will, but somebody will have to extend my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I do not desire to take up the gentleman's time, if he has not enough, but in connection with the suggestion made by the gentleman about the contest—the second count or the recount, as it is called, was it necessary that the contestant should take any steps—did not the recount show he was elected, and therefore he had nothing to contest? Is not that so?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. No.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The recount does not show him elected?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. On the face of the returns.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. That is what I meant.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. In several of the wards of the city there was a conspiracy formed knowingly by the Republicans and the crooked Democratic officials that had taken their oath to perform their duty——

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague on the committee yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I protest. The gentleman has hardly had five minutes of his time. This is an outrage. He either should be entitled to time, or not be entitled to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think it is for the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] to determine to whom the gentleman shall yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will endeavor to protect the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply desire to ask my colleague if he will kindly cite the page in the record where there is one scintilla of evidence to substantiate the statement which is made by him?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. There is. You turn to page 470 of the first volume, and to what does the witness testify? He testifies that in the counting of the ballot in a certain precinct they could not find a ballot for Mr. Gill.

And one man there—I think his name was Housmann—said: "I know there is one there, because I voted for him."

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Wait until I get through, and I will yield. Another official that was keeping tally said: "Yes; I know you did, and I think a couple of others did. Give him three." And that is all they gave him, right under the eyes of Republican and Democratic officials, and now you call that a fair election. If you turn to page 470 of the first volume, you will find that there.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will yield him a minute of my time. Is it not a fact that that testimony was the testimony of the Republican judge or clerk—a Republican official? Consequently, he could not have been in the conspiracy.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I understood he was in the conspiracy, because he is the judge who turned around and said, "I know there is one who voted for him," and the fellow keeping the tally sheet said, "I know he has three, and we will give him three." Think of it; in a fair election for a Representative to this House, claiming that he is entitled to his seat, and that he will resign if he is not, in which he has one hundred and ninety and odd votes cast for himself in one precinct and five for Mr. Gill. In the presence of these officials, where were those seventy-odd votes that the court found for Mr. Gill in this precinct? They were there on the table in the presence of these election officials that had taken their oath to count those ballots fairly. Did they do it? No. Who says so? The court says so.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, Mr. Spjeaker, if my colleague will yield, I will grant him another minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I can not yield just now.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to have the gentleman point out in this book which I hand him, on page 470, the evidence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut declines to yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I was going to give him the time.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Well, I will find it for you. But very evidently you know it is there, because you say it was a Republican official. You told this House so. [Laughter.]

In another ward or precinct in a recount of the votes there was a difference of 50 or 60. It was so that Mr. Dyer's vote was reduced over 200 and Mr. Gill's was increased over 170.

I assume that every gentleman here has had something to do with politics, and I want to ask you this question in all seriousness: If you have a certain section of your district carved off, and there are 102 election judges and inspectors and clerks there, and 52 of those are appointed by the Democratic congressional and county organization——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. I will ask the chairman if he will grant me more time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that he may have 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs to state to the gentleman from Connecticut that the time is in the control of the Member from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE]——

Mr. DONOVAN. Could he not get it by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (continuing). And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. DONOVAN. Could it not be done by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] that his colleague may have 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the chairman can yield him time if he wishes, as he has more time to yield. Therefore I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] objects.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Fifty-two of these officials have taken their oath to watch over the interests of their respective parties. And in that whole ward only 14 officials out of 37 lifted a finger or gave any advice or made any suggestion or made any attempt to see that the Democratic candidate for Congress had an opportunity to be elected in accordance with the law. Thirty-seven of those officials voted against him. Three of those officials in a certain precinct, after the ballot box was closed, in the presence of three Republican officials, put everybody out of the room and attempted to count those votes. It was only when the Democratic managers went down to the office of the commissioner of elections and received an order from him that the public was permitted to go in there and see that those votes were counted fairly.

Those ballots were in the hands of six officials, who voted against Mr. Gill, for one hour and a half. Does any man here think for one moment that those ballots were counted fairly? Was there not an opportunity to manipulate them? Was there not an opportunity to do that which the voters did not intend should be done with the ballots?

In another ward—I forget the page of the record, but the gentlemen can find it; it is in the second volume of the evidence—a man was a hotel keeper, as he said, and had been keeping a hotel for three months. He was one of the election judges. What did he do? He suggested that the challengers should be put out of the voting place, and every man there who was an official was in favor of Mr. Dyer for Congress, and it was only when they went to the election commissioners' office and received an order there that those challengers had an opportunity to represent their respective parties.

Now, there is the situation. If you think it was a fair election; if you think it was a correct method for securing a fair count and for having an honest ballot cast; if you think it is not necessary to have elections conducted according to law, why, of course, you will seat Mr. Dyer. But if you think the election held on November 6, 1912, in precincts 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 14, and 17 in the fifth ward at St. Louis for a Member of Congress was corrupt, ballots tampered with, illegal ballots cast, and a conspiracy formed by the election officials you will vote to sustain the committee report. If you believe the election officials betrayed their official trust and did that which every corrupt election official would do and has done in the past; if you want to have clean elections in the fifth ward of St. Louis, you will seat Mr. Michael J. Gill as a Member of this House, who was honestly elected, and not vote for this request to send this case back to the committee to take evidence in St. Louis. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] use some of his time now?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] to use some of his time now. We are not ready to go ahead to-night. I would like to inquire, Mr. Speaker, how the time stands up to this point?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] has 2 hours and 25 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has 2 hours and 43 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield now, Mr. Speaker, 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker, the contested-election case of Michael J. Gill against L. C. Dyer for the seat from the twelfth congressional district was brought and conducted according to the rules of the Committee on Elections and the statutes in relation to contested elections.

The notice of contest was filed and served on contestee, and he served his answer on contestant. Contestant began taking testimony Monday, January 13, 1913, by authority of an act of Congress, and consumed the entire time legally allotted to him. He examined nearly 150 witnesses, electors of the seventeenth precinct in the fifth ward in the city of St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Dyer examined about 40 witnesses and consumed only a small portion of the time allowed him by the act. In rebuttal no effort was made to explain or contradict the frauds alleged in the notice of contest and afterwards proven by the ballots offered and the disclosures made by the recount of fraudulent returns made by the election officers. His attorneys used about half of the time at his disposal in the examination of witnesses, many of whom did not reside in the twelfth congressional district, in an effort to justify his so-called "knifing" of Mr. Gill and evading and avoiding the charges of fraud; not endeavoring to show by judges or clerks of election that no frauds were perpetrated against Mr. Gill; did not subpœna Republicans or Progressives or challengers who were present or who cast ballots or knew of cuts, to combat testimony of Michael J. Gill, to wit, documentary evidence in shape of scratched ballots; return of count showing great discrepancy in return of election officers; marked ballots by officers of election, contrary to the election laws of Missouri; leaving ballot boxes unguarded; election officers generally agreeing to vote for Dyer, a Republican, cutting Gill, a Democrat, and voting for Kinney for State senator, a Democrat, as against Kramer, a Republican, and voting for Kiehl, Republican candidate for mayor, and against Dickman, a Democrat.

Evidence in the case shows bipartisan agreement and deal and every effort made to solicit voters to carry out a bipartisan compact consummated by election officers on election day inside the voting places. In this connection the evidence shows, volume 2, page 1165, in testimony of Thomas Egan, that judges and clerks in a number of precincts were given directions to scratch Gill and Dickman. Returns show bipartisan agreement carried out. Returns of ballots from fifth ward show Dyer, Republican, Gill, Democrat, and that Kiehl, Republican candidate for sheriff, over Dickman, Democratic candidate, and that Kinney, Democratic candidate for State senator, had an increased vote of 300 over any other Democrat in the ward, thus showing the operation of the bipartisan agreement entered into.

Kinney, the candidate for State senator, is the political boss in this ward. In the fifth ward, twelfth congressional district, Missouri, there are 17 precincts. Each has three Republican and three Democratic judges and clerks, and these are recommended for appointment by the political organization—in this case a bipartisan one—accounting for the character of the boards, as shown by the testimony.

The election officers made their return 2,213 for Dyer and 815 for Gill. The official recount secured by the contestant under an act of Congress disclosed that Mr. Dyer had 2,009 votes and Mr. Gill 994, showing a discrepancy of 383 votes. Mr. Dyer's vote as a Republican from the twelfth Missouri district was 11,981, Mr. Gill's total vote was 11,248, or a plurality of 732 for Mr. Dyer; the recount reduced Mr. Dyer's plurality over Mr. Gill to 349 votes. No evidence, no explanation, is presented on the part of the contestee for these acts of the election board, except that they sat from 6 a. m. election day to 6 a. m. the following day after election. This seems peculiar, as in these precincts of the fifth ward there were only some 300 electors in each precinct, and there were six judges to count and return the vote.

It is testified voters were furnished lead pencils in booths for the purpose of scratching Gill and voting Dyer, although the recount shows that a great deal of this scratching was done in ink, writing in names, as in the case of Dyer—in ink.

Now, nearly 20 months after election Hon. L. C. Dyer asks that an examination of five or six hundred electors, who, it is alleged, cut their ballots in the election of 1912, be made.

The contestee himself has to say in his briefs and arguments that—

It should be remembered that the fifth ward is not one of the fine residence districts of St. Louis. One of the "river wards," it is a compact territory lying in the most congested part of the city, containing within its limits, on the one hand, practically all of the large office and public buildings, hotels and stores, and many factories and warehouses (in which very few voters live); and, on the other hand, practically all of the cheap hotels, so-called rooming or lodging houses—such as are found in every large city—and many tenement houses, boarding houses and unpretentious homes, including the so-called "levee district" with its large colored population. The record is full of detailed testimony covering these conditions, especially with reference to the number and character of the lodging and rooming houses in the first, second, third, and fourth precincts, filled with men only, who for the most part live upon small and often irregular incomes. These men are not outcasts, tramps, or vagrants, but as a class they are poor in purse and poorly educated, many being wholly illiterate, and many others barely able to write their own names. In the typical house of this class single beds or cots—often "double-decked"—for men are arranged in rows on each dormitory floor. In the "Home Hotel" alone 100 men slept nightly on one floor—with no partitions—at 10 cents each.

In the evidence offered by contestant it is shown that he sent a letter to every voter in the fifth ward within 30 days after the election, in which he asked certain questions, among others, "Did you vote for Gill?" Six hundred of these letters were returned marked by the post-office authorities, "Unable to deliver." From other replies received he secured his witnesses. At this late date the resolution of the minority report asks Election Committee No. 3 to go to St. Louis and secure evidence as to these scratched ballots. Your committee denied this motion, believing a sitting Member after all these months should have been able to satisfy the committee that an extension of time was necessary, inasmuch as every facility was at his command to prove his case, and already the testimony comprises 2,205 closely printed pages, together with the exhibits.

All testimony tends to prove, as do the exhibits, that fraud was consummated by the election officers in this ward. The contestee himself admits that the electors were poorly educated, illiterate, unable to write their own names, and so forth.

It is a very hard matter to prove fraud by direct evidence. The rule is—

That whenever a sufficient number of independent circumstances which point to its existence are clearly established, a prima facie case of its existence is made, and if this is not met by explanation or contradiction it becomes conclusive.

I have shown the recount in the twelfth congressional district of Missouri gave the Hon. L. C. Dyer a plurality of 349. The committee, by its resolution, declares that L. C. Dyer, from the twelfth Missouri district, is not entitled to a seat in the Sixty-third Congress, and that Michael J. Gill is the duly elected Representative, and is entitled to a seat therein. The committee set aside seven precincts in the fifth ward, namely: Precinct 2, which returns, by original count, gave Dyer 199 and Gill 5; recount gave Dyer 106, Gill 73.

Now, I refer to this precinct because Morrisey, the judge of elections, who was tried in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, was from this precinct. Here I have a number of reasons, alleged and supported by the testimony, for the setting aside of the election returns from the second precinct of the fifth ward.

First, all the judges and clerks voted for Dyer.

Second, Gill's name was scratched on 63 ballots and Dyer's name written on 60 of them. See page 75 of photographic exhibit.

The committee had before them photographs of all the scratched ballots cast in the 17 precincts of the fifth ward.

Third, judges and clerks openly traded votes. That is in support of the allegation of a bipartisan compact in the second precinct. Judges and clerks openly traded votes, Republican judges and clerks voting for Kinney for State senate, and the Democratic judges and clerks voting for Dyer for Congress. See pages 389, 1890, 1041, 342, 1918, 1935, and 1941.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield right there?

Mr. RUPLEY. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Was it not admitted by counsel for contestant, when the question was put to him in regard to the trading of votes, that there was nothing criminal connected with that sort of a proceeding, and did he not admit that there was not?

Mr. RUPLEY. I will admit that electors and even judges and clerks may agree among themselves to vote for Democrats or Republicans, but I am sufficiently wise about elections to know that when that is true, and when Mr. Kinney secures his majority for the State senate from the fifth ward and Mr. Dyer secures his majority to Congress from the same ward, that some agreement, some understanding is being carried out; and it is general among about 15 precincts of the 17; and I want to say the quality and kind of fraud was the same in 15 of the 17 precincts, and only two of them were clean and clear of this kind and quality of fraud. But the committee saw fit to throw out 7 of the 15 precincts. In my judgment, a number of the other 8 precincts should have been thrown out. But giving the contestee the benefit of all doubt, we selected and threw out those that showed the grossest fraud, and left stand to his credit the remainder, and he is using that fact now in stating that but 40 witnesses were questioned, and these 40 witnesses he confined to these 7 precincts, and that only 18 testified that their ballots were scratched, and the others voted straight Democratic ballots. But, recollect, over 100 electors testified from these 8 other precincts, where the quality and kind of fraud is about the same as in the seven eliminated by this committee, and the judges and clerks of election supported this bipartisan compact that was carried out openly and publicly by the judges and clerks of the second precinct.

Mr. LOBECK. Do you mean to tell me that in throwing out these precincts you did not examine into the question whether there were any honest votes cast there?

Mr. RUPLEY. The rule of law, as laid down in the principles and precedents is that when the election officers on the inside mark the ballots, scratch the ballots, tamper with the ballots so that you are unable to separate the good ballots and the legally cast ballots from the fraudulent ballots it is the duty of your committee to throw out all the ballots of those precincts. That is the duty of the committee when that is disclosed, and I am one of this committee, elected by this House.

Mr. LOBECK. But in this election here you could identify every ballot with every voter, could you not, because they are numbered? It is not a secret ballot.

Mr. RUPLEY. Well——

Mr. LOBECK. Then you could identify every honest ballot cast there, and by your report you are disfranchising men who voted honestly and whose ballots were cast straight.

Mr. RUPLEY. On the face of the argument——

Mr. LOBECK. That is not fair, and any American citizen is entitled to have his honest vote counted, I do not care what kind of a district he lives in. If an honest vote is cast, and by the record you can prove it, according to your own admission, that vote is entitled to be counted.

Mr. RUPLEY. Permit me to answer that. On the face of it that appears to be very patent and plain.

Mr. LOBECK. It has been true in all election cases that I have had experience in.

Mr. RUPLEY. On the face of it, as the gentleman is appealing to your fairness, if we were able to go to Missouri and to pick out these electors and to identify these ballots, so that on the one side we could lay the Gill ballots and on the other side the Dyer ballots, and then could determine by counting them whether Mr. Gill or Mr. Dyer was elected, that would be the thing to do.

And we have here this equation in the case. We have not been able to find electors in the fifth ward; more than 500 were missing 30 days after the election. But if they were all there and we called them before us, the testimony shows that the witnesses were not certain of their ballots. The ballot marked 5 in precinct 5 would be shown an elector, and he would take it, and the table prepared and the list of all the electors showed that he cast the ballot. They would say, "This is your ballot," and elector after elector testified that he was not certain that was his ballot. Elector after elector testified that he was not certain that he scratched Gill's name and put Dyer's in, while a number testified that they did not scratch Gill's name and insert Dyer's, and that that ballot was not theirs. I ask you how the committee, under those conditions, could go to St. Louis and determine and separate the wheat from the chaff—the Gill ballots from the Dyer ballots?

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUPLEY. I will.

Mr. SWITZER. Does the record show that Gill or anyone else issued subpœnas or any process through any committee, or in any other way to bring these persons before some notary to give testimony? All you have is that the postal cards were returned, and you say they were not in the city.

Mr. RUPLEY. No; I do not know that he did. It was impossible to serve the warrant for the arrest of Morissey for about five months after the election.

Mr. SWITZER. You say they were not in the city because the postmaster returned the cards. Do you claim that is a justification for saying these people were not in the city and were not voters at the time?

Mr. RUPLEY. I am only the servant of this body, elected to this committee, and I of course will carry out your will; that is within your power; but I say that in my judgment it will be impossible for this committee to take the poll after you send us to St. Louis.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUPLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Does the history of any contest in any case heretofore show that there has been an effort by any committee of this House to have a reelection, to take the votes all over again of all the electors in any precinct where there are 1,000 or 1,500?

Mr. RUPLEY. I have carefully gone over the precedents established here in the Congress of the United States, and I find no case supporting Mr. Dyer in his contention before this House. Not a single case. The cases before the committee were cases where they brought the witnesses before the committee had decided on the contest before them

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HULINGS, for a few days, on account of a death in his son-in-law's family.

To Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. VAUGHAN, indefinitely.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. FOSTER, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies papers in the case of G. W. Irvin, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 19, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations required by several departments of the Government for the service of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1914 and 1915, and for prior years (H. SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 19, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Rev. George H. Williams, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for Thy loving kindness that has followed us all the days of our lives, for Thy leadership through the years that are past, and for this blessed privilege of meeting in the midst of these favorable surroundings, again to offer unto Thee our prayers in the name of Him who loved us and died for us.

Our heavenly Father, our fathers trusted Thee and Thou didst deliver them. They declared that there was no real government unless it was founded upon a strong moral basis. They with this faith laid deep and strong the foundations of this glorious Republic. We thank Thee, heavenly Father, for their faith, and we praise Thee that this great and magnificent superstructure is still, in its beauty and loveliness, ours. We thank Thee for the great privileges and the great advantages that we have for civil and religious liberty.

And, our Father, as we look upon this great structure and as we remember that it is from the cooperation of God with man, its erection makes us feel like one of old to exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" We pray that Thou wilt bless us, that Thou wilt pardon us all our sins, and that Thou wilt lead us in the way of Thy commandments. And when our work on earth is done may we hear that welcome plaudit, "Well done!" We ask all in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Page	Smoot
Brady	Hollis	Perkins	Sterling
Bristow	Johnson	Pittman	Stone
Bryan	Jones	Pomerene	Sutherland
Burleigh	Kenyon	Ransdell	Swanson
Catron	La Follette	Reed	Thomas
Chamberlain	Lane	Saulsbury	Thompson
Chilton	McCumber	Sheppard	Thornton
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Myers	Shively	Warren
Culberson	Nelson	Simmons	Weeks
Cummins	Norris	Smith, Ga.	West
Dillingham	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.	White
du Pont	Owen	Smith, Mich.	Williams

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and his pair with me.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

Mr. MYERS. I will announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the last session.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to submit a conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair make an inquiry. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair last evening, but he was advised that a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into that immediately upon the reading of the Journal to-day the Senate would proceed to consider in executive session a certain nomination.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes, Mr. President; and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator to withhold that for just one moment. There are some resolutions to present from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, especially one——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that that can not be done under the existing unanimous-consent agreement. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 30 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Mr. SHARP, and Mr. COOPER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair) presented a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Honolulu, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

[Telegram.]

HONOLULU, June 18, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT, Washington:

Salaries governor certify fixed by law. Living expenses here higher than mainland. Hope Appropriation Committee report reducing salaries may not be adopted.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF HONOLULU.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented a telegram from William J. Spencer, secretary-treasurer of the executive council of the Building Trades Department, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

[Telegram.]

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 18, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Executive council of the Building Trades Department, representing 400,000 building operatives, has this day instructed the undersigned to advise you of our unqualified indorsement of House bill No. 15657, which has for its purpose the relief of voluntary organizations of wageworkers from the interpretation the United States courts have placed upon the Sherman antitrust law.

WILLIAM J. SPENCER,
Secretary-Treasurer Building Trades Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented a petition of the New York Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, of Union Springs, N. Y., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11245) extending to the port of Providence, R. I., the privileges of section 1 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10345) for the relief of C. M. Hammond, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 604) thereon.

Mr. WEST, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4005) for the relief of John J. Muehleisen, reported adversely thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WEST, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4744) to authorize the appointment of John W. Hyatt to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 605) thereon.

GOLD HILL CONSOLIDATED CO.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back with amendments Senate resolution 394 authorizing a special committee to investigate the use of the Senate committee stationery in the promotion of the Gold Hill Consolidated Co., submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] on the 15th instant. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "a special committee of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President of the Senate, and that said committee" and insert "the Committee on Privileges and Elections or any subcommittee thereof"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "stenographers," to insert "at not to exceed $1 per printed page"; and in line 13, after the word "thereof," to insert "no witnesses to be paid except when subpœnaed," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections or any subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation into the use of stationery of the United States Senate Committee on the Census and the United States Senate Committee on Rules in the promotion of the so-called Gold Hill Consolidated Co., and of the sending of an employee of the United States Treasury to make an investigation of and report upon the property of said company, and any other matters touching upon or relating to the use of property of the United States or employees of the United States Government in connection with the promotion or business of said Gold Hill Consolidated Co. Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress, to require by subpœnas or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, documents, and papers; to take the testimony of witnesses under oath; to obtain documents, papers, and other information from any of the departments or bureaus of the Government; to employ stenographers at not to exceed $1 per printed page to take and make a record of all evidence taken by the committee, and to keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed and suitably bound. The chairman of the committee, or any of the members thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpœnas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof, no witnesses to be paid except when subpœnaed. All hearings by and before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall be open to the public. The expenses of such investigation shall be paid for out of the fund for contingent expenses of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

L. W. JONES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 388, submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on the 11th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate the sum of $16 to L. W. Jones, for services as assistant clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs, from June 1 to June 4, inclusive.

THE COMMITTEE ON REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 383, submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] on the 29th ultimo, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to E. W. Lillard 60 days' salary at the rate of $2,220 per annum; to Rella M. Lane, 60 days' salary at the rate of $1,440 per annum; and to Ephraim S. Lillard, 60 days' salary at the rate of $1,200 per annum; the same being for services as clerk, assistant clerk, and messenger, respectively, to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, for 60 days from May 27, 1914.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DU PONT:

A bill (S. 5900) granting a pension to Laura C. Bailey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 5901) granting an increase of pension to David Frank; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) for the appointment of a commission to acquire by purchase or condemnation certain land for the extension of the Capitol grounds, and providing for the payment therefor; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $90,000 for the purchase by the United States of the right to use the method patented by Louis Gathmann for drying smokeless powder, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for the purchase of that portion of the block whereon the United States courthouse and jail now stand in the city of Fairbanks, Alaska., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—THOMAS S. MURRAY.

On motion of Mr. THOMPSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Thomas S. Murray, S. 2644, Sixty-second Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

AFFAIRS IN NICARAGUA.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have received a telegram from Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, which I desire to have read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, June 18, 1914.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

We have telegraphed to the Hon. BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY, chairman of Foreign Relations Committee, as follows:

"Our attention has been called to newspaper reports of a resolution introduced by Senator SMITH of Michigan in the United States Senate directing the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, to inquire into certain transactions between the Republic of Nicaragua and Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co. and Speyer & Co. The preamble of the resolution makes certain positive statements, every one of which, so far as it relates to the undersigned, is incorrect. Said incorrect statements are as follows:

"'Speyer & Co. are not associated with Brown Bros. & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co. in their Nicaraguan transactions.

"'Earnest H. Wands was not designated as financial agent of the Republic of Nicaragua in the interest of said Brown Bros. & Co. and Seligman, having been designated as financial agent before the bankers had any relations with Nicaragua; in fact, the bankers met Mr. Wands for the first time when, as financial agent of Nicaragua, he, on behalf of Nicaragua, negotiated with them.'

"Neither Brown Bros. & Co. nor J. & W. Seligman & Co. ever bought any of the bonds of the Republic of Nicaragua at a low price or at any other price, and have not made and do not stand to make any profit through their redemption. They never owned and do not now own any bonds of the Republic of Nicaragua. What the bankers did was as follows: On behalf of Nicaragua they negotiated with the council of foreign bondholders in London, Lord Avebury, president, and J. P. Cooper, Esq., secretary, representing the holders of the bonds of 1909 of the Republic of Nicaragua and managed to arrange for the Republic a reduction of the rate of interest on said bonds from 6 per cent to 5 per cent, and also secured for the Republic of Nicaragua the release of certain security pledged to the bondholders, as well as the release to Nicaragua of £379,049 4s. 2d. cash withheld in London by the original purchasers of the bonds. They also secured for the Republic a reduction in the redemption price of the bonds. For none of these services was any charge made by the bankers. The only connection of Mr. Wands with this matter was that on behalf of Nicaragua he went to Paris for the purpose of securing the assent of the French bondholders to this arrangement, so advantageous to Nicaragua.

"The railroad of Nicaragua has not been sold to the bankers below its actual value. In the first place, only 51 of the shares of the railroad were sold to the bankers, the remainder being retained by Nicaragua; and, secondly, the price paid, so far from being below its actual value, is, in the light of earnings, above the actual value of the road. The railroad has paid no dividend since the stock was bought.

"The bankers have not secured profits of any kind through compelling the Republic of Nicaragua to redeem any of its bonds. The bankers never owned and do not now own any of said bonds. Furthermore, they have made no profit on any of their transactions with Nicaragua. They have charged 6 per cent interest on their advances, and no commission, except one of $7,550 on one particular advance. A very large proportion of said advances amounting to $1,060,000 still remains unpaid. They have bought 51 per cent of the railroad and 51 per cent of the bank, to the future enhancement in the value of which they must look for any possible profit.

"Generally speaking, the bankers have not only not brought reproach upon the American Government, as charged, but, on the contrary, they have, without compensation, put through in Nicaragua a creditable piece of constructive financing. They have aided Nicaragua to adjust its foreign debt at a reduced rate of interest. They have assisted Nicaragua in settling its disordered currency. They have aided Nicaragua in improving the collection of its customs of revenues, which have largely increased in consequence. They have greatly improved the condition and operation of the railroad of Nicaragua. For the purpose of making the above possible, they have loaned large sums to Nicaragua from time to time, and have purchased 51 per cent of the stock of its national railroad and 51 per cent of its national bank. The bankers have received no dividends on the shares, either of the railroad or the bank, and neither enterprise is at present in a condition to declare dividends.

"The entire program and the manner of its execution we respectfully suggest reflect credit on American banking methods. We think it unfortunate that baseless accusations should have been made to discredit American business men and their methods.

"The members of our firms and their books are at the disposal of your committee for any investigation you may desire to make in this matter."

As New York Senator, familiar with our reputation, we think you should be apprised of the facts.

BROWN BROS. & CO.
J. & W. SELIGMAN & CO.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I introduced the resolution to which that telegram refers after very careful consideration and a thorough investigation into Nicaraguan affairs, so far as they are controlled and directed by the bankers who send this telegram to the Senator from New York.

I have no disposition at all to enter into any controversy with these gentlemen concerning the subject about which they have advised the Senate. I will say, however, that the indebtedness of the Republic of Nicaragua, funded from time to time and made the basis for supervision and liquidation by Brown Bros. and Seligman, reflects no credit upon this Government, upon the Government of Nicaragua, or upon the bankers having this matter in charge.

The issue is now squarely made by their communication to the Senator from New York, who is also a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it is the duty of the Senate to take up that issue and to investigate it carefully. I feel that the Committee on Foreign Relations, which has jurisdiction over the resolution, will take that course.

The only answer I desire to make to the telegram is this: Standing in my place, and with my responsibility to the country as an American Senator, I allege that the indebtedness sought to be validated and imposed upon the Republic of Nicaragua is, in the main, fictitious and fraudulent and ought not to receive the approval of the American Government.

Saying that much, I request that the telegram offered by the Senator from New York shall be sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration in connection with the resolution of investigation now pending there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the communication will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as somewhat cognate to this matter, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD an article entitled "Our Continental Policy," by Melville Davisson Post. It deals with the Monroe doctrine in its relationship to European connection with South America, and especially with reference to the present condition in Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OUR CONTINENTAL POLICY.

[By Melville Davisson Post.]

The situation in Mexico brings the Monroe doctrine forward out of the region of academic speculation. We have had much discussion of the doctrine and its application to the various courses the United States was advised to follow before our decisive step at Vera Cruz; but the air has not been cleared. Confusion, for the most part, results from failure to recognize the precise limitations of this policy—to differentiate what President Monroe defined it to be from the vague notion of a continental protectorate so insistently in the public mind.

There can be no greater hardship than to live under indefinite laws. The greatest safeguard of the citizen is that the laws shall be so certainly defined that no question can arise about their meaning. There is a like peril when national policies are not certain. If we are to consider the term "Monroe doctrine" to be synonymous with the terms "national honor" and "general welfare," or the like, then it is simply out of the question to undertake to say how any policy may affect it. These latter are terms that change with education, ideals, and public sentiment. No man can say what our conception of national honor or public welfare may be; therefore no man can say what acts of foreign nations may be taken to contravene these vague ideals.

If, however, we define the Monroe doctrine to mean that no land on this continent shall be considered as subject to foreign colonization, and that no foreign nation is to be permitted to impose its system on any American State—that is to say, no land of any American State shall be taken by any European power, and every American State shall be permitted to work out its own governmental policy independent of European intervention—then we have established a measure we may apply accurately to any proposed national act.

THE ARMY OF THE ALLIES AT PEKING.

The United States was urged in the beginning to regard Mexico as in a condition similar to that of China during the Boxer rebellion—a country in a condition of internal chaos, with no responsible government, and with the lives and property of foreigners at the mercy of flying squadrons of bandits. The President was advised to call a conference of the powers of Europe and march on the city of Mexico as we marched on Peking.

It was pointed out that this armed intervention in China was accomplished as a concerted action and without any grave clash between the different authorities. In the march on Peking there were Japanese, Russians, British, Americans, Germans, and French. This force was, without difficulty, put under the general command of the highest foreign officer in China, who at that time happened to be Field Marshal Count von Waldersee.

The legations besieged in Peking were relieved; order was restored and maintained until China was able to guarantee the general safety, and then the troops were withdrawn. China was impressed by the fact that the nations of the earth were determined to put down anarchy wherever it might appear, and to insist on some form of orderly government everywhere in the world.

In the beginning certain authorities urged the United States to take precisely this course with Mexico. There were subjects of all the great powers in Mexico; their lives and property were in jeopardy. And it was pointed out that these nations should be as willing to care for their unofficial subjects as they would be for the personnel of official legations; and consequently the same duty devolved on them to restore order in Mexico as to restore it in China. It was further indicated that if one nation should act alone—for instance, the United States—all patriotic Mexicans might resent it; but they could not resent allied intervention.

If Mexico were a country unaffected by the Monroe doctrine, or what it is imagined to be, this course might have been undertaken long ago; but the Monroe doctrine was generally considered to stand in the way of such a plan. It is interesting to consider just how far this position is tenable.

Mr. Roosevelt said to Congress, in discussing the Monroe doctrine:

"We do not guarantee any State against punishment if it misconducts itself, provided that punishment does not take the form of an acquisition of territory by any non-American power."

And, again, he said to the Fifty-ninth Congress:

"Moreover, we must make it evident that we do not intend to permit the Monroe doctrine to be used by any nation on this continent as a shield to protect it from the consequences of its misdeeds against foreign nations. If a Republic to the south of us commits a tort against a foreign nation, such as an outrage against a citizen of that nation, then the Monroe doctrine does not force us to interfere to prevent punishment of the tort—save to see that the punishment does not assume the form of territorial occupation in any shape."

And Mr. Olney said, during the Venezuelan controversy: "It (the Monroe doctrine) does not relieve any American State from its obligations as fixed by international law, or prevent any European power directly interested from enforcing such obligations and from inflicting a merited punishment for the breach of them."

Mr. Roosevelt was clearly of the opinion that southern States could not use our policy to protect them from European powers if they flagrantly outraged the rights of any foreign nation. It therefore happened that he did not consider the Monroe doctrine to be involved when the ports of Venezuela were bombarded by German, English, and Italian warships.

He took the position that if any southern States refused to follow the usual customs of civilization in their foreign relations, they must suffer for that defiance, and that so long as territory of the State was not actually taken our policy was not involved, no matter how severely the offending American State was punished for its misdeeds.

It is therefore certain that, so far as the Monroe doctrine is concerned, European nations have the right to punish southern States for gross violation of the ordinary humane customs of civilization, and they have the right to protect their citizens and their property. The main point is that European nations shall not occupy the territory of those States. We seem to have made a distinction; their ports may be bombarded, but marines ought not to be landed—the idea being that the Monroe doctrine would not be violated by the landing of troops in southern States, but that European nations, having once occupied territory of an American State for a rightful purpose, might remain for a wrongful purpose. And to continue to occupy territory would be a violation of the Monroe doctrine.

Some years ago European nations were about to seize the customhouse of the Dominican Republic. The United States undertook to act for them, and took charge of the customhouse of that Government, on the theory that if Santo Domingo were once occupied by European powers it might continue to be occupied by them. A permanent occupation of the territory of any southern State would be a violation of the Monroe doctrine, and would call for our interference.

The landing of European troops on the soil of a southern State is not regarded by us as a violation of the doctrine, but as a thing that may lead to a violation of it. It is not the act that contravenes our policy, but the probable result that may contravene it.

INTERVENTION UNDER AMERICAN LEADERSHIP.

It seems therefore clear that if foreign powers, independent of the United States, were to undertake to make a concerted march into the interior of a South American State, we might be forced to protest against it on the precedent of Santo Domingo—that is to say, on account of the fear that the Monroe doctrine might be involved by the refusal of some one of the powers to withdraw its troops. If the United States, however, were assured that these forces would be withdrawn and that no permanent occupation of the territory of the southern State could result, then the Monroe doctrine would not be drawn into the question. It would be no more involved than it was involved by the bombardment of Venezuela.

How could the United States be certain that the powers would withdraw their troops? It would seem that if the United States should lead in any required intervention, and the whole expedition should be under the leadership of a superior American officer, as the Chinese expedition was under the leadership of Field Marshal Count von Waldersee, the difficulty would be removed.

It appears practically certain that the powers could make no valid objection to a plan of this character if they should ever find it necessary to enter a southern State. Small forces of Great Britain, France, Germany, and of other nations, associated with a larger American force and under unquestioned American leadership, might make such a joint intervention without infringing the Monroe doctrine.

If it does not violate the Monroe doctrine for European powers to protect their rights by bombarding southern ports from warships, it is difficult to see how the policy is violated when foreign nations protect their rights by landing troops, if it is certain that the troops are to be removed after the wrongs have been corrected. If a concerted action by warships in which we do not join and over which we have no control is no violation of the doctrine, how can it be a violation of it to have a concerted action of troops in which the United States takes the leading part?

If the whole expedition were under the command of an American general, as the whole Chinese expedition was under that of Field Marshal Count von Waldersee, it seems exceedingly unlikely that any portion of this command would be able to remain on southern territory, if the American officer commanding the expedition deemed it advisable to withdraw.

The current idea that Mr. Olney and Mr. Hay expanded the Monroe doctrine to mean that the United States must alone settle all internal affairs of America without interference by or suggestions from European powers is not sound. The doctrine never meant anything like that. It meant precisely what Monroe said in his message. Mr. Olney's dictum that we are practically sovereign on this continent was gratuitous, as are the efforts of later Secretaries of State to make the doctrine vague and general. We are under no obligations to accept them.

There is no more reason why the United States should accept these modern theories as definitions of the Monroe doctrine than there is reason for our accepting those of Polk and Grant as properly illustrative of it. President Polk suggested that we ought to seize Yucatan, because under the Monroe doctrine we were bound to take over any territory that a European power might be tempted to annex; and that was the theory adopted by Grant when he wished to seize the eastern end of the island of Santo Domingo. It was a novel and ingenious conception of the Monroe doctrine, but not one likely to appeal to us; as though one should say to his neighbor: "A highwayman may take your purse, and therefore to prevent that misfortune I shall take it myself." A piece of irresistible logic!

There can be no doubt that a concert of the powers to police all disorderly places of the world is an advance. It shows that the human race is beginning to move vaguely as a unit and to consider the welfare of all. That it may lead to universal peace, to a sort of federation of all peoples, is a hope not entirely of the fancy. Every concerted move, then, looking to the welfare of all is to be encouraged. The joint action of civilized nations carries more weight and incurs less antagonism than that of a single power. It is the force of united national opinion. As a man is more influenced by the concerted act of his neighbors than by the act of one, so a nation must be more impressed by the joint act of all the great powers about her.

THE NATION NOT BOUND BY HERESIES.

If the United States should be of the opinion, then, that it would be wise for all the powers interested to intervene at any time in southern affairs for the purpose of establishing order and protecting the lives and property of foreigners, it can be done under the dominating leadership of this country without affecting the Monroe doctrine.

The fact can not be overlooked, however, that this policy is not acurately understood by the people. Unfortunately the conception of it is uncertain. The general impression is that we have forbidden any armed European foot to touch, under any pretext, the soil of a South American State. This is a foolish, dangerous, and profoundly erroneous idea. That is not the Monroe doctrine—it is a heresy superimposed on it; but it is widely believed and is the current opinion of the average citizen.

Therefore it must be recognized that if in the beginning the administration had undertaken to negotiate joint intervention of all the powers in Mexico, it would have been subjected to the gravest criticism. Those opposed would have marshaled a vast patriotic sentiment. A popular appeal would have been made to patriotic motives. The administration would have been charged with the abandonment of American ideals and a surrender to European domination.

All this criticism might have had no base in reality, but it may very well be doubted whether any administration would dare to undertake the experiment of stemming such a current of misunderstanding. It might be that a great executive, sufficiently in the confidence of the whole people, would have been able to go forward with it, and so to clearly define the limitations of the Monroe doctrine that the people would have been able to see that no national policy of this country would be violated by such a course.

Looking at the situation from all quarters, however, one must admit that the undertaking would have been extremely doubtful. Old wars, especially with Great Britain, have left their heritage of bitterness. Emigrants from oppressed countries have brought with them their sentiment against the dominion of monarchies. Any policy that would seem to conciliate or invite a joint action of European nations on this continent would inflame this sentiment.

This sentiment is anachronistic and a pressure against a federation of the human race, but it exists and must be reckoned with. Even the great peace movement that Count Mouravieff inaugurated on the 24th of August, 1898, at the direction of the Emperor of Russia, has from time to time in this country been opposed by this sentiment. The pressure of it was so great that the representatives of the United States declined to sign the twenty-seventh article of the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes, except with the reservation that nothing therein contained should be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of our traditional attitude toward purely American questions—thereby excluding the United States from the obligation of submitting any American question concerning this continent to The Hague Court.

If the Chinese and Japanese had excluded any Asiatic question, and European powers any continental question, international questions to be settled by arbitration would have been difficult to find.

However, if any administration were powerful enough to substitute in the public mind the actual Monroe doctrine for the current Monroe heresy, the joint intervention of all powers, when such a course might become necessary in South American affairs, could be had without violation of any American ideal.

We have seen that the United States could hardly permit foreign powers to intervene in southern States exclusive of ourselves—not because the Monroe doctrine would be thereby violated, but because it might be violated by the refusal of some one of the powers to withdraw its forces after the necessity for them has passed. And we have seen that the United States, dominating a concerted movement of the powers, could intervene in southern States without violating the Monroe doctrine, but at the peril of rousing a great sentiment that might destroy the administration which undertook it.

A measure to avoid the pressure of this false sentiment lies in the plan of settling disputes on this continent through the mediation of American Governments only, and the recent efforts along that line are a decided advance. Such stable Governments as Argentina, Brazil, and Chile could very well join with the United States in maintaining order where it is necessary, and to protect the lives and property of foreigners. Such a cooperation of American powers with the United States could, of course, in no way affect the Monroe doctrine or any American tradition. It is probable also that it would provoke less resentment on the part of the American State so entered than if the invasion were by European troops.

It is by no means a mere fancy that we shall be able in time to effect a confederation of southern States which, with the cooperation of the United States, shall undertake to settle all American disputes without the intervention of any European power. This would be an ideal solution of the difficulties on this hemisphere. A good deal has been done toward such cooperation, and it may be accomplished. It is an end well worth every reasonable effort.

It must be admitted, however, that to make such cooperation permanently effective we must get rid of the sentiment against us in the south; we must get rid of the heresy of a protectorate and the unsolicited elaborations of the Monroe doctrine gratuitously made by some of our officials—the idea that we sit as a sort of overlord, and that all southern States must maintain the kind of government we think is suited to them, or the sort of civilization we deem advisable. We should have to make it clear that we take the Monroe doctrine to mean precisely what it does mean.

It is proper to remember that if the United States were to effect a permanent working cooperation with the South American Governments for the purpose of settling disputes on this continent, the Monroe doctrine would in no sense be violated; but the modern acceptance of it, usually attributed to Olney and Hay, that there is an obligation on the United States to settle the internal affairs of America herself, without interference and suggestions from any other power, is heresey. It never was the Monroe doctrine, and it can not be taken to be the Monroe doctrine to-day, except by the use of that elastic construction for which our courts are famous.

THE EGOTISM OF MR. SEWARD.

This brings us to the inquiry as to whether the United States is, in fact, under any obligation to take any active course toward a southern Government unless our national honor is involved or our citizens are in peril. The foreign notion that because the United States declines to permit a European power to colonize any part of America, or to land troops for the purpose of oppressing any South American State, or impose its system on it, we are thereby under obligation to police southern countries is error.

By the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine this country does not undertake to establish order in any South American country, or to collect the debts of any foreign power, or to force any administration to meet its obligations.

Our traditions do not obligate us to send an invading army into any South American State unless our own national honor demands it. We have not undertaken, as Mr. Roosevelt has pointed out, to protect any southern State from the result of its wrongdoing. We undertake to protect it only from foreign colonization and from being forced to adopt a form of government suggested or imposed on it by a European power.

Thus we stood calmly aside and allowed England, Germany, and Italy to bombard the ports of Venezuela; and before that, in 1861, outrages on foreigners became so flagrant in Mexico that they led to a treaty of joint intervention. Great Britain, Spain, and France felt it necessary to intervene. Later Great Britain and Spain withdrew their troops, but Louis Napoleon remained. Afterwards the United States pressed France to withdraw her troops, which was finally done.

It seems strange that Mr. Seward, in presenting the request of the United States, made no mention of the Monroe doctrine. It has been explained that this arose from the egotism of that official, who took himself to be an authority as great as Monroe and his Cabinet.

At any rate, since the Monroe doctrine was announced and accepted, European nations have interfered in southern States for the purpose of protecting the rights of their citizens and their property, and we have felt it our duty to object only when there was danger that these foreign powers would remain on American soil.

Our only reason for putting the customhouse of Santo Domingo under American control was the fear that if European powers undertook that control they would never withdraw from the island. Mr. Roosevelt explained it as follows:

"Our own Government has always refused to enforce such contractual obligations on behalf of its citizens by an appeal to arms. It is much to be wished that all foreign Governments would take the same view. But they do not; and in consequence we are liable at any time to be brought face to face with disagreeable alternatives.

"On the one hand, this country would certainly decline to go to war to prevent a foreign Government from collecting a just debt; on the other hand, it is very inadvisable to permit any foreign power to take possession even temporarily, of the customhouses of an American Republic in order to enforce the payment of its obligations, for such temporary occupation might turn into a permanent occupation."

When citizens of a country are in danger or national honor requires it, however, a Government must act swiftly and with firmness.

An insult to the flag may seem a slight thing to go to war about, but it must be remembered that the flag is the emblem of the nation's honor, and insults to it can not be overlooked. A high and formal courtesy is insisted on by all nations claiming the respect of the world.

No matter what the final result of affairs in Mexico may be, it is certain that our relations with other nations, especially the southern Republics, will be in some degree affected. If our intercourse with these Governments is ultimately to become more friendly, and if in the end some plan of efficient and permanent cooperation is likely to be evolved, it will be a distinct advance in diplomatic relations on this continent. Whatever the final result may be, however, we must in the end make our conception of the Monroe doctrine, as an American policy, clearer and more definite.

It is therefore of the first importance that the people shall have a correct understanding of the exact limitations of this doctrine. Governments are influenced by the pressure of public opinion, and this public opinion must be intelligent if the policy of the administration is to be farsighted and wise.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, when I presented to the Senate the report of the Committee on Commerce on the river and harbor bill I announced that I should ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration on Monday next. Since that time a number of Senators have indicated to me a desire for a longer time in which to examine the rather voluminous report, embracing several hundred pages, a copy of which I hold in my hand. In deference to the wishes of these Senators, I shall not ask to take up the bill on Monday, but I give notice that I shall ask to take it up on Thursday of next week.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, we could not understand the Senator from North Carolina. If I caught what he said in his closing sentence, it was that he would ask to take up the bill on Thursday next.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I said that when I submitted the report to the Senate I made a statement to the effect that I would call it up on Monday next.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. But that, in deference to the wishes of certain Senators for a longer time in which to examine the report, I would not call it up until Thursday next.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then it is the intention of the Senator to call it up on Thursday?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 6, 14, 15, 16, 18, 39, 42, 43, 44, 50, 54, 66, 68, 70, and 72.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 41, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, and 69, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "only," insert the following: "and officers of the Construction Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers not exceeding four as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of Senate amendment insert the following: "June 30, 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Under authority of the House granted to change totals not in conference, the committee of conference amended the bill as follows: Page 20 of the bill, line 21, strike out "$170,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$180,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Naval Proving Ground, Indianhead, Md.: Toward extension of powder factory (cost not to exceed $500,000), $200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "for fuel-oil storage, at some point accessible to the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma, to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, $150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the words "to be available until expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Line 7 of said amendment strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment after the word "men" insert the following: "of the Navy and Marine Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the proviso in said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Provided, That such appointments shall be made in the order of merit from candidates who have in competition with each other passed the mental examination now or hereafter required by law for entrance to the Naval Academy, and who passed the physical examination required before entrance under existing law"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement of the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment after the word "type" insert the following: "to have a surface speed of not less than 20 knots."

In line 5 of said amendment after the word "expended" strike out the comma and insert a period, and strike out the words "and the" and in lieu thereof insert "The."

In line 10 of said amendment after the word "said" insert the words "eight or more"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Hereafter there shall be charged against the several appropriations for the support of the Naval Establishment the overhead charges incident to upkeep and to industrial work at navy yards and stations. The total sum so charged shall be distributed in accordance with the work done in the various yards and stations in order that the cost of work may be determined."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 29, 33, 40, and 71 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, ask a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PERKINS conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

WIDOW OF THOMAS B. M'CLINTIC.

Mr. BRYAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 661) for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments to the said bill.

N. P. BRYAN,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
COE I. CRAWFORD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
EDW. W. POU.
LUTHER U. MOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On June 18, 1914:

S. 2590. An act to reimburse Charles C. Crowell for two months' extra pay in lieu of traveling expenses.

On June 19, 1914:

S. 55. An act for the relief of Daniel Hampton;

S. 2069. An act for the reimbursement of Jacob Wirth for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey; and

S. 2226. An act for the relief of Joel J. Parker.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 12579.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, after line 17, the Committee on Indian Affairs proposes to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of their respective tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, said payment not to exceed, in the case of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, $100 per capita, and in the case of the Cherokees not to exceed $15 per capita, and all said payments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians.

The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] proposes to add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma and until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, we went all through this debate a year ago. The Senate disagreed with the committee and adopted the amendment which I at that time offered. Then the committee, being determined that the amendment should not go through, made a point of order against the committee amendment as amended, and it went out of the bill, and now we have here to go over the whole thing again.

Mr. President, in 1830 there lived in the State of Mississippi a tribe of Indians known as the Choctaws. Unlike every other tribe of Indians in the United States, they had never had a quarrel with the English-speaking white man. No tomahawk had ever been raised by them against the American pioneers who settled that country. They were the friends of the English-speaking white settlers at all times. They fought for them and with them against Frenchmen and Spaniards. They fought with "Mad Anthony" Wayne.

About that year it was thought desirable to get them to remove, if they would, west of the Mississippi River. It was under Gen. Jackson's guidance and counsel that this was done. We entered into a treaty with them known as the Dancing Rabbit treaty, so named after the creek upon the banks of which the treaty was entered into.

Mr. President, it is a principle of universal law that citizenship in a savage tribe is not a matter of residence, but it is a matter of consanguinity, of blood relationship. It is interesting to go back and discover that this has once been the case with all people who have ever lived, not American Indians alone. I once investigated the points or resemblance between the tribal constitution of the Iroquois Indians, the "Indians of the Long House," and the early tribal institutions of Athens and of Rome. To be a citizen in any of them you had to be a member of the tribe by blood or adoption; place of residence had nothing to do with it. It is perfectly wonderful how far the institutions of all in their early stages agree in this respect. Citizenship everywhere originally was a matter of kinship. To be a member of the tribe in blood made one a citizen of the tribe, or, as we call it when we refer to the tribes of Indians in America, a citizen of "the nation."

I dwell upon this a moment for the purpose of laying down the fundamental principle that a Choctaw is a Choctaw, independently of the fact whether he dwells in Mississippi or whether he dwells in Oklahoma; that a Choctaw is a citizen of the Choctaw Nation, independently of the fact whether he dwells in Oklahoma or in Mississippi; and I do it for the further purpose of calling your attention to the fact that the Dancing Rabbit treaty recognized that truth.

The Dancing Rabbit treaty went on to say that provided these people would move west of the Mississippi River a certain lump sum should be appropriated for their benefit, part of it for schoolhouses and school teachers and part for other purposes, and that certain annuities should be instituted, to be shared by those of them who went west of the Mississippi River. In addition to that there was the usual provision for giving the chiefs certain favors—so much land, and all that. In all our treaties with the Indians it has been found necessary to give special favors to the chiefs and subchiefs—men of influence—to induce them to influence the others.

Some of the Choctaws in Mississippi did not want to go west of the Mississippi River, and some of their chiefs did not want to go west—Mooshalatubbee, Greenwood Le Flore, and some of the balance of them. It became necessary in this treaty to provide for those Mississippi Choctaws who declined to go and who were not willing to go, the object of the Government of the United States being to secure the land and be able to sell the land to white settlers; and in so far as the land in Mississippi was to be given to Indians there, to give it out by metes and bounds in individual ownership—in severalty, as we call it.

The consequence was that the Choctaw Indians going west of the Mississippi River became entitled to their proportionate share of this lump sum and their proportionate share of these annuities; but by article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty the Choctaws who remained in Mississippi were specially recognized as having "all the privileges of citizens of the Choctaw Nation." This article 14 had to be inserted in order to secure any treaty at all. It was the sine qua non. Greenwood Le Flore insisted on it. It was admitted on all sides that unless those who chose to remain in Mississippi were to retain their Choctaw citizenship and receive the other advantages of article 14 there could be no treaty.

Mr. President, the Dancing Rabbit treaty can be found in the United States Statutes at Large, volume 7, "Indian Treaties from 1778 to 1842." I shall not undertake to read the treaty, of course; it is too much; but it is a treaty of "perpetual friendship, cession, and limit." It recites that one of the objects of it is "that the Choctaws may live under their own laws at peace with the United States and the State of Mississippi," and that therefore they have determined to sell their lands east of the Mississippi and have agreed to the following treaty. Why did they put in and at peace "with the State of Mississippi," except because there was no promise for all to go and no duty that all should go, and because many would remain in Mississippi?

Another portion of it is that which cedes to the United States the land which the Choctaws then owned as a Choctaw reservation within the State of Mississippi, Mississippi having extended her laws to all residents of the State.

Article 14, which is the important article, upon which I dwell, reads as follows:

Each Choctaw head of a family being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of this treaty——

Mr. OWEN. What page is that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is on page 335, the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty. By the way, I will say in this connection the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was the first man in the world who ever called my attention to this particular article of this particular treaty. I continue the reading—and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him over 10 years of age, and a quarter section to such child as may be under 10 years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside upon said lands intending to become citizens of the States for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue; said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family, or a portion of it.

Now, Senators, mark you—

Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen; but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

Now, that cuts them out of the annuity alone; cuts them out of it, even if they subsequently removed to what afterwards became known as the Indian Territory. In all other respects, remaining in Mississippi, if they so elected, they are guaranteed "the privileges of a Choctaw citizen." Meanwhile they had already been cut out of the lump sum, which was a sum devoted to the purpose of removing the Choctaws west and of schooling them there, and so forth. Of course, those who did not remove to the west of the river obtained, from the very nature of the case, no part of the lump sum. In every other respect the Mississippi Choctaws were a party to this treaty, as Choctaw citizens; and neither the United States nor the United States in conjunction with the Choctaws in Oklahoma, or in the old Indian Territory, had any right to change their rights under the treaty without the consent of the Mississippi Choctaws. They certainly never had any right to change it by engrafting upon it provisions which would cut out the Mississippi Choctaws from their express right under the Dancing Rabbit treaty. This is a fortiori true when you remember that just in so far as the Choctaws in Mississippi were cut out the fellow citizens in Oklahoma were benefited. Certainly a party of adverse interest to them could not represent them and waive their rights.

I had a long fight in the House of Representatives upon this question. I won the fight. The Committee on Indian Affairs there, upon which at that time was the late Vice President, Mr. Sherman, and the former Senator from Kansas, Mr. Curtis, and others, saw the justice of the claim of the Mississippi Choctaws, and it was provided that they should have the rights which were claimed for them.

But upon the legislation I found afterwards an insidious amendment that I did not know was there, and which provided that in order to have their rights they must remove to Oklahoma. The Mississippi Choctaws could no more move to Oklahoma than they could fly, because they for the most part did not have any money to move with, unless they walked, and, if they walked, had nothing to eat while walking.

Mr. OWEN. Was he doing well in Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator asks me if he was doing well in Mississippi. Yes; after his fashion he was doing very well. The Mississippi Choctaw in Mississippi, according to his idea, was in a very happy condition. He was in 1830, but he never was a money-maker, he never possessed a white man's love of money.

By the way, I want to pay tribute right here to the Choctaws in the State of Mississippi. This treaty you see looks to their becoming citizens of Mississippi, but Mississippi never permitted them to vote. She excepted from the ballot "Indians not taxed." But they lived there. They have lived, as their ancestors had, along the valley of the Pearl and the Leaf and the Youghiogheny. With squirrels, wild turkey, ducks, bear, and fish the Indians in Mississippi did not have to die to go to the "happy hunting grounds." He had them right there.

Now, the amendment referred to required these people to move to Oklahoma. So I afterwards secured an appropriation of $20,000, I think it was, to help them remove. But I found that, though I procured this appropriation of $20,000 to help them move, in the first place the sum was not sufficient, and in the next place that they had nothing to do and no way to make a living after they got to Oklahoma; they would have starved when they got there.

I and others interested in their welfare and their future afterwards prevailed upon the Dawes Commission to send a subcommittee to the State of Mississippi in order to identify the Mississippi Choctaws and put them upon the roll. That committee was headed by Capt. McKennon, of Arkansas. They came to Mississippi and went into the counties of Jasper and Newton and Le Flore and Leake and Neshoba, and Smith and Scott, and they gave notice, and the Mississippi Choctaws came up to be identified, and quite a number of them were identified and were placed by that subcommittee of the Dawes Commission upon the roll. Mr. President, there was no trouble in identifying full-blood Choctaw Indians. There were not any other sort of Indians in south and central Mississippi. The members of no other tribe ever remained in that section. Very few others ever lived in it, and they, small tribes right along the seacoast, had long since disappeared. Capt. McKennon did good work, and did it in a kindly spirit. A great number of the Indians came up and were put upon his roll. I am not certain of the number right now, but I think it was about 2,400.

Now, then, after he has acted for the Dawes Commission, has identified these people as Mississippi Choctaws, then the matter is brought into court in Oklahoma somehow or other and those rolls are not approved of.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute. Then, furthermore, somehow or other when those rolls get here to Washington they do not receive the final approval of the Secretary of the Interior as to over eleven hundred of these men—unmistakable Choctaws of the full and half blood. Now, why? Not because they were not Choctaws. Nobody will say that. Capt. McKennon knew an Indian when he saw him; he knew him from a white man. These were full bloods and half bloods. Now, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I wanted to remind the Senator that in the report which Capt. McKennon made subsequent to the list referred to by the Senator they were not put on the rolls because Capt. McKennon in his report said he found it was impossible for the persons of Indian blood to prove their descent. They had no family records; they had no records of 1830; and they could not prove their descent. He made that report, and that was the basis upon which that roll was afterwards disapproved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, Mr. President. I will come to that right now, though that was not the connection of the argument where I intended to bring it in. Here was a law that was passed by Congress in that connection in 1902. It shows that there were two classes of these people reported on by Capt. McKennon—Choctaws who were to be enrolled as of the full blood and Choctaws of mixed blood entitled by virtue of descent from patentees. But let me read it all to give the connection.

All persons duly identified by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stats., 495), as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, may, at any time within six months after the date of their identification as Mississippi Choctaws by the said commission, make bona fide settlement—

Now, this was a waiver of the requisition of going to Oklahoma before identification—make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and upon proof of such settlement to such commission within one year after the date of their said identification as Mississippi Choctaws shall be enrolled by such commission as Mississippi Choctaws, entitled to allotment as herein provided for citizens of the tribes, subject to the special provisions herein provided as to Mississippi Choctaws, and said enrollment shall be final when approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Then this language was put in. It goes on:

The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement—

Now, mark this, the pitfalls in it, and how carefully they were placed there:

The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement, and in the disposition of such applications all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood, who received a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the said treaty of 1830, who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws, entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty of September 27, 1830, and to identification as such by said commission—

The treaty referred to by date is the Dancing Rabbit treaty. But—

Now, mark you this—

But this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant—

Now, mark it. To the advantage of what sort of an applicant?

And shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not a Mississippi Choctaw of the full blood—

That is, Mississippi Choctaws of the full blood. That class could "invoke" it, and it could "operate" to their advantage. They could be identified without proving descent. How? By the eye of any man who knew an Indian when he saw him and had common sense.

It was the other class who could be identified only by proof of descent who must have been solely referred to in that part of Capt. McKennon's report referred to by the senior Senator from Oklahoma in his interruption of a moment ago.

The Mississippi Choctaws of full blood are taken out of this exception. There were two classes of these men. I continue to read the law of 1902—or who is not the descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw who received a patent to land under said treaty, or who is otherwise barred from the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation, all of said Mississippi Choctaws so enrolled by said commission shall be upon a separate roll.

There were two classes of people entitled to benefits under this. One was the full-blood Mississippi Choctaw, who had to prove simply that he was a Choctaw of full blood.

Mr. OWEN. And moved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He was not to move until the lapse of a certain time after the final approval of the roll—now, mark that—six months after the final approval of the roll "and the ratification of the agreement," to which he was never a party, affecting his rights between the United States Government and the Choctaws in Oklahoma. Of course all this involved his having knowledge that his enrollment had been approved. I deny that any such notice was ever really given him, and I assert and will later prove that as to eleven hundred of them; they were simply pigeonholed, to use the language of the senior Senator from Oklahoma. Now, there was a second class, namely, those whose ancestors had obtained patents under a clause of article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty.

And then, Mr. President, what did they do with those men of this class? Fishermen, hunters, illiterates from generation to generation, this great Government called upon them to trace their pedigree back to 1830. Half the white men who are educated can not do it.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. WEST. Why did they put such rigid requirements on the statute book?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I think I can tell you. Because their brethren in Oklahoma knew that the more any Choctaws residing outside of Oklahoma got of what was coming to the Choctaw Nation the less they would get. That is why.

Mr. OWEN. The United States did it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the United States through committees and through Congress did it, and Oklahoma Choctaw influence and their paid attorneys for them won out.

As I was going to say, and I am giving the history of it, I got an appropriation of $20,000 to help bring these people out to Oklahoma.

Now, mind you, under what I have just read you they were not to move necessarily until six months after the final approval of the rolls, but in the meanwhile the matter was carried into some courts out there, and some lawyers out there were paid so much for keeping off and getting off names from the rolls. The Senator from Oklahoma will admit, I believe, that there was a contract to that effect by the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma with a firm of lawyers who were to receive so much per for every name that they kept off the final enrollment, and these lawyers went to work and they kept off these men that Capt. McKennon had enrolled and had identified as full blood Choctaws.

They kept them off and got them off by procedure before a peculiarly constituted court from whom no appeal could lie. Appeal was sought to the Dawes Commission and to the Supreme Court of the United States. The latter decided that it had no jurisdiction to consider the appeal—that the decision of this peculiarly constituted court as instituted by our law was final. What influences secured the peculiar institution of that court? Again echo answers.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from Mississippi is in error with reference to the time and the character of the contract; I have no more sympathy with the contract than has he; but the contract did not stipulate a certain per cent for each one kept off the rolls; it did stipulate 9 per cent for each and every court citizen who should be put off the roll, the court citizens being alleged Indians who had been admitted to enrollment and to citizenship by the Federal courts of the Indian Territory. The contract, as I recall, related exclusively to court citizens, and stipulated that the attorney should receive 9 per cent of what would have gone to each of those citizens who should be removed from the rolls, they having been already placed on the rolls by the court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I will come to that later, unless I forget it. I think the contract to all, and the Senator admits it, applied to those whose names had been placed on the rolls as the consequence and result of trial in and decree of Federal courts, not peculiarly constituted.

I have here somewhere a part of that contract. I do not think I am mistaken broadly in the statement I have made, which was that the attorneys received so much "per." I am not criticizing those people for that. Human nature generally is controlled by self-interest, and when there is a common fund and a certain number of people who would be entitled to distribution under it can increase their share by keeping other people out, I reckon that until God recreates human nature, or until it developes itself to a higher plane, they will proceed to hire lawyers to do it; and that is what they did in this case.

There were these full-blood Choctaws—for the present I am not talking about any others—and no man living denies that they are full-blood Choctaws; no man living, with any knowledge of law, denies that they are citizens of the Choctaw Nation—regardless of where they live—by consanguinity and blood; no man living will deny that the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty said they were to have all the privileges of Choctaw citizens, except that they were not to share in that annuity, and that from the nature of it they could not share in the distribution of the lump sum.

What is the object of this opposition to the amendment I offer and this attempt to distribute this fund solely to Choctaws in Oklahoma? One of the dearest friends I have in the House of Representatives and from Oklahoma has already publicly avowed on the floor there what its object is. It is little by little to distribute this fund until there will be nothing left. Meanwhile these people in Mississippi, friends of the white man, who never raised a tomahawk against him, who fought the other Indians for us, who followed Mad Anthony Wayne in his fight against the northern tribes, have knocked year after year at the doors of Congress and can not get consideration from its committees. It is openly avowed that it is intended little by little to distribute all of this Choctaw fund until there is nothing left of it and therefore nothing left for the Mississippi Choctaws to get; and it is advised that instead of attempting to get what is due him on this bill there should be a separate bill for his relief passed. A bill has been introduced by one of those gentlemen from Oklahoma in the other House, and that bill for the relief of the Mississippi Choctaw is to relieve him out of the Treasury of the United States later on.

Mr. President, here is that annuity business to which I referred, which was an annuity of $20,000 for 20 years, to which the Choctaws remaining in Mississippi were not entitled. Then there follow some provisions in the Dancing Rabbit treaty about money to be devoted to the erection of schools and schoolhouses and the payment of teachers in the Indian Territory, to which they were to remove. These provisions, of course, by their very nature could not apply to the Mississippi Choctaws because the Mississippi Choctaws could not send their children to school in the Indian Territory. In every other respect these people were parties to this treaty, and there was no moral right under the sun for Congress by any law of its own making, without consulting them in any respect, to deprive them of their rights under that treaty. Not even though it were by agreement with—or a better word would be collusion with—the Oklahoma Choctaws.

That is not all. At one time a claim of the Mississippi Choctaws grew up against this Government until I believe it amounted to about $8,000,000. That was paid. The amount was $8,000,000, but about $5,000,000 were deducted to cover various expenses, leaving $3,000,000. It was a claim growing out of what the Government owed the Mississippi Choctaws. Where do you reckon it went? It went to the Choctaws in the Indian Territory, and the Mississippi Choctaws never saw it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. OWEN. I want to remind the Senator from Mississippi that Murray & Vroom found 4,100 of these claims as shown on the muster rolls, and 3,400 of them went to Oklahoma.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not know there were that many in the State.

Mr. OWEN. There were 4,100, and 3,400 went to Oklahoma at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What became of them?

Mr. OWEN. They are there yet; those who have not moved back.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and are not enrolled.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; they are on the rolls.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is news to me. I do not think there ever were 4,000 Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi. At the time Capt. McKennon and I were considering this matter the estimate made was somewhere between 1,600 and 2,500. Where does the Senator from Oklahoma get that information?

Mr. OWEN. From the muster rolls of the Indian Office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, then, it must be right.

Mr. OWEN. It is right.

(Note by Mr. WILLIAMS: Evidently the Senator from Oklahoma and I, as will hereinafter appear, were using the phrase "Mississippi Choctaws" in two different senses. I meant Choctaws living in Mississippi in 1902, he, Choctaws who had lived in Mississippi prior to 1855 and who had left that State and gone to Oklahoma in the fifties—1855, 1856, and 1857—before the war.)

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the junior Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator, if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. GORE. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that the attorneys now representing those who claim to be descendants of Mississippi Choctaws, and who desire a share of the estate of the Oklahoma Choctaws, claim that there are some 40,000 descendants of the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Mr. President, now I understand what the Senators from Oklahoma mean. They are talking about Indians who used to be Mississippi Choctaws decades ago or about the white people who are running around loose with about a sixteenth or a thirty-second of Indian blood in them who want to get in, I reckon. I am talking about full-blood Choctaws living in Mississippi in 1902.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Mississippi misunderstands my observation. The Indians alluded to by my colleague [Mr. OWEN] were actual Indians, who actually removed from Mississippi to Oklahoma, who are now members of the Choctaw Tribe, and who are enjoying the benefits and properties of that tribe. There are attorneys who are insisting that there are some 40,000 persons eligible to qualify as Choctaws who are entirely willing to share in the estate of the Oklahoma Choctaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and to swear that they had Indian ancestors.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about them, nor am I trying to get anything for them. Let me show you the next deadfall in this act. It is provided:

Applications for enrollment as Mississippi Choctaws and applications to have land set apart to them as such must be made personally—

Must be made personally—

before the Commission of the Five Civilized Tribes.

A man in Mississippi to appear personally in Oklahoma to find out if he has any rights.

Mr. President, I know these people well. They lead simple lives; they are hunters and fishermen. They can be prevailed on now and then to go out and do job work. As I said here upon the floor of the Senate once before, you can hire a man in Mississippi to go and split you 10,000 rails. If a negro comes in and tells you he has got those rails piled up in the woods, you had better go out and count them first; if a white man tells you so, you had better, as a rule, count them; but if a Choctaw Indian comes and tells you he has them there, he has them; you need not count them. He pays his debts. Sometimes he is a long time about it, because he is a long time getting the money, but if he lives he pays his debts. He lives an honest and simple life, and here is the United States Government requiring him to appear personally before somebody across the river, and requiring him, moreover, to prove who his grandfather's grandfather was, and half the Senate could not do that; that is, to the satisfaction of a court.

There were two classes of them—this act makes a clear distinction—first, the full bloods, and, secondly, the others, whether of full or of mixed blood. The act goes on to say who is "a descendant of those receiving patents to lands under said treaty." There is not a page upon the history of our dealings with the Indians that is more shameful than the page which records the manner in which the Choctaw Indians have been dealt with by the United States Government.

In the Dancing Rabbit treaty itself there was a provision that a qualified agent of the United States should go down there, that that man should see these Indians, that they should "signify their intention" to the agent "within six months from the ratification of this treaty," and that they should "thereupon be entitled to reservations" of various lands within six months afterwards. The United States Government sent down there a notorious drunkard, who stayed drunk the whole six months, and did not give an opportunity to one-twentieth of the Mississippi Choctaws ever to "signify" any "intention" of any description. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma does he remember his name?

Mr. OWEN. His name was Ward.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; his name was Ward. It is a notorious historical fact that he had to be afterwards recalled. Meanwhile the six months had expired, because the United States through its agent, its partner in the controversy, its representative in the controversy, was drunk.

When successors were sent there most of the Indians lost out because the time designated in the treaty had elapsed.

Senators, I do not want to consume your time unnecessarily, because last year I ran over this whole matter—at that time there was a full attendance of the Senate—and the Senate agreed with me and disagreed with the committee; but there are parts of it that I want to dwell upon.

I think that the Chair yesterday made a mistake in holding that this provision of this bill was in pursuance of a treaty; it is in violation of a treaty. Technically it may be in pursuance of the law of 1902 to a large extent, but it is in violation of a higher law that, unless set aside by the consent of the Mississippi Choctaws, ought to control, and that is the treaty. But however that may be, I have so much more respect for the parliamentary opinion of the present occupant of the chair than I have for my own that I did not appeal from it, and did not make any fight upon it. It was in clash, however, with the decision that was given last year upon the same point. The fourteenth article of the treaty is this, if you please:

When allotments as herein provided—

This is part of the law—

14. When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen, the residue of lands not herein reserved or otherwise disposed of, if any there be, shall be sold at public auction under rules and regulations and on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and so much of the proceeds as may be necessary for equalizing allotments shall be used for that purpose, and the balance shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit—of the Choctaws and Chickasaws—

Of whom?—

Not the Choctaws in Oklahoma alone—and distributed per capita as other funds of the tribes.

That does not say the Choctaws in Oklahoma alone, but it says:

When allotments as herein provided have been made to all citizens and freedmen.

Another clause of this law says—I will read it in a moment—that when all charges upon the fund have been satisfied—the Speaker of the House held that the word "charges" meant fees, attorneys' fees, and charges of that sort. I think that was rather a narrow meaning to give it. There are 1,080 of these people enrolled by Capt. McKennon entitled to their share under this law as full-blood Mississippi Choctaws who are standing out yet without any recognition of any description, and it can not be said, I think, that there has been a "final approval" or adjustment until their claims have been determined. Section 17 of that law reads:

SEC. 17. That when the unallotted lands and other property belonging to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians have been sold and the moneys arising from such sales or from any other source whatever have been paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribes, respectively, and when all the just charges against the funds of the respective tribes have been deducted therefrom, any remaining funds shall be distributed per capita to the members then living and the heirs of deceased members whose names appear on the finally approved rolls of the respective tribes, such distribution to be made under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

My contention is that the United States Government, as a great and honest Government, ought not to make final the approval of these rolls until these people have had a proper chance.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. If the Government pays out this money to the Oklahoma Choctaws, and the Mississippi Choctaws are entitled to their proportionate share of it, does not that become a valid claim against the Government which at some time it will have to pay?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There has been a bill already introduced in the House to pay the Mississippi Choctaws, unless I am misinformed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, a bill may be introduced in the House for any purpose whatever, but these claims have no more right against the United States than if they were absolutely without any foundation whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say they had. I am not prepared now to give an opinion on that subject.

Mr. OWEN. I do not believe the Senator could really contend that they have.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not say they had; but the object is very plain: It is to distribute this fund, to get it out of the way, to leave nothing to the Mississippi Choctaw, and still fool him with the idea that he will have a claim against the United States Treasury; and I do not know but that he would have a claim in the court of morals and good faith. Having been juggled in this matter for 84 years, he might very well have a right in the court of ethics, at any rate, to appeal to the generosity of the United States to restore him some of the money which he had lost.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I remind the Senator from Mississippi that they were urged by the United States and by the Choctaws in the West for over 75 years to go West, and those who have not done so have remained in Mississippi in spite of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; I understand they were "urged to go West"; they were urged to leave the Leaf and Pearl River bottoms and the Youghiogheny and the hunting grounds there and to go out to Oklahoma, but they did not want to go.

Mr. OWEN. Oklahoma is a better place.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And they very properly said, "We prefer to stay here; every right that we have grows out of the fact that we are Choctaws; and it does not grow out of the fact of residence in Oklahoma at all. The provisions of article 14 of the Dancing Rabbit treaty expressly say that we shall have all the privileges of a citizen of the Choctaw Nation except those things which, from the very nature of them, we can not have," which I have already outlined.

The Senator from Oklahoma surely never ate a Youghiogheny squirrel.

Mr. OWEN. I am willing to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And he never ate one of those channel cat out of the streams of that part of Mississippi, and he never went fishing up about Lake Burnside, or he would not say that a sensible Indian could be appealed to to leave that country to go to Oklahoma, unless his right to something in Oklahoma was adjudicated and determined before he moved. That is what I thought I had secured for him. But, Mr. President, outside of that, the Mississippi Choctaw had no way of going there except when he was a well-to-do Choctaw. The poor ones had no way of going; they could not pay their way; and, even after I got an appropriation to help them, they were faced with this question, which each one asked himself, "What am I to do after I get to Oklahoma while I am waiting for the courts out there to deal with my case—starve? They do not want me there anyhow; how do I know they will even give me work?"

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I remind the Senator that the courts out there did deal with these cases, and in the Jack Amos case held that unless the Indians had removed they were not entitled to citizenship there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have already referred to that.

Mr. OWEN. Judge Clayton so held, and the Supreme Court confirmed his opinion; so that I do not think the Senator ought to continue to argue that they have the rights of citizenship without their moving, after the courts have decided it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, that has devolved upon them in consequence of this act of 1912, which was a distinct illustration of bad faith upon the part of this Government. I inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma to what supreme court he refers?

Mr. OWEN. The Supreme Court of the United States in the Stephens case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, under the act of 1902 and the peculiar constitution of that peculiar court; but there is something a little higher in this world than the bare technicalities of the law, Mr. President, especially a law with pitfalls all through it.

Mr. President, there was a committee of the House, presided over by Mr. RUSSELL, to which was referred the bill H. R. 19213, which was a bill for the purpose of providing a method for the Mississippi Choctaws to be enrolled if entitled to be. That committee reported:

> First. That a considerable number of Indians not enrolled are entitled to the benefits of Choctaw citizenship.
> Second. That members of the following two classes are entitled to such benefits.
> (a) All full-blood Choctaws.
> (b) All mixed-blood Choctaws, who can prove descent from an ancestor who received or was entitled to receive a patent to lands under article 14 of the treaty of 1830.

You can just cast that last or B class out, because none of them can prove it, or very few. Some of them can. There was Greenwood Le Flore's family, for example, who remained there and became very cultured people and large slaveholders and large landholders and built "Malmaison," their country house, in Le Flore County, a fine old mansion, which the President pro tempore may possibly have seen; but, as a rule, these people can not prove that.

> Third. That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish this committee, from records in his possession or under his control, and within nine months from the date hereof, a list of those who comprise the two above-named classes and who are not enrolled as Choctaws.

I wanted to find—and I will find later, though I think it will not be disputed—a statement made in the other House where it was confessed that the object was to exhaust this fund. I say that because you will hear the argument made that, even if this legislation is passed without reserving the right of the Mississippi Choctaws, there will be plenty left for them. That argument has been made every time—that there will be plenty left; and yet the idea is to go through the fund little by little until there is nothing of it left.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. OWEN. How much does the balance of the property undistributed amount to?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know what the balance of the property undistributed now amounts to, but I know that if you go on for many years more with this game that you sought to go on with last year and that you are seeking to go on with this year there will not be any left.

Mr. OWEN. It is estimated at $35,000,000, and this sum will amount to about $3,500,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be true; but if you take off $3,000,000 at a slice now, as a starter, and more each year, it will not last long.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, well, I take it the Senator ought not to make that argument beyond its legitimate bearing; and when I call his attention to the fact that there is $35,000,000 of property and only three and a half million dollars taken his argument entirely loses its force.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not lose its force. Here is a letter from an Oklahoma Representative in the House dealing with the subject, part of which I will read:

> You doubtless know that the only legislation necessary for a winding up of tribal affairs is a provision for a per capita distribution of our funds. This amendment is the first step on the last lap of a final settlement, and we expect to try to provide for these payments every year, so that all the funds may be distributed just as they are collected. Points of order, petitions, and every other possible opposition will be urged against this amendment, and the sentiment of our people should be made known.

So I have a perfect right to say that this question is not to be considered solely upon its aspects as a $3,000,000 appropriation here and now, but upon its aspects as a first step in a scheme which is intended to exhaust the fund.

This very dear friend of mine, whom I hold in a place close to my heart, being asked in debate in the House if he meant that, said:

> I admit everything in that letter, and I admit that I am going to try to do everything that letter sets forth.

Mr. President, I do not know what more I can add to this. As the Senator from Oklahoma has intimated, Congress has passed a law, a court has construed that law, and the Supreme Court has upheld that law—or, rather, has ruled that it had no jurisdiction to consider an appeal from the peculiarly constituted lower court's construction of the law and the treaty. I am not contending here that the Mississippi Choctaws, in the face of all that legislation and in the face of these decisions, have any right here that is enforceable in a court of law, but I am trying to get the legislative branch of this Government to change that law which was enacted against them and construed against them.

So far as the construction of the court was concerned, I hardly see how the Supreme Court could have come to any other conclusion, unless it had taken the position that that law could not set aside the treaty without the consent of the Mississippi Choctaws—a point which seems not to have been mooted. I am not talking now, however—and I can not be thrown off the right scent—about what are their rights in court to-day. I am talking about what their rights ought to be. I am trying to get a lot of men who love justice, or are supposed to love it, to help me change the law so that they can get their rights. I say that more shameful pages never were written in any history than those recording the manner in which these people have been treated, and it is no justification of it to say that they were treated in that way by law or by agreement between the United States and the Oklahoma Choctaws, who profit by the agreement.

What is Federal law? Why, it is the voice of the Congress of the United States with the President's signature of approval on it. If one man had gone out and done these people this great injustice there might be some excuse made for it; but those who represent a great Nation have done it, and what I am appealing to you to do is to undo it. No amount of talk about what courts have decided or what Congress did in 1902 or the jurisdiction on appeal of the Supreme Court under a peculiar statute constituting a still more peculiar court can affect the proposition. If this committee amendment in the bill is in order, then this restriction upon it sought to be made by my amendment is likewise in order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, many of my most reputable and honorable constituents are members of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Tribes of Indians. I therefore share the high admiration which has been expressed by the Senator from Mississippi for these immemorial tribes.

I may say, too, that I share the sentiment which he expresses in behalf of this tribe on account of the fact that their early history was identified with the State of Mississippi. I myself am a native of the old Choctaw territory in the State of Mississippi. In my childhood I used to find arrowheads upon their former hunting grounds. It is but natural that I should feel an interest in the Choctaws, whether they have remained in Mississippi or whether, pursuing a wiser course, they have removed to Oklahoma. I am willing—nay, I should insist—that the General Government mete out justice to the Choctaws, whether they reside in Mississippi, their original haunts, or in Oklahoma, their adopted home; but, sir, I am not willing that this Government should be generous toward the Mississippi Choctaws at the expense of the Oklahoma Choctaws.

This Government, sir, must be just to the Oklahoma Choctaws before it can be generous to the Mississippi Choctaws. If there be any right on the part of the Mississippi Choctaws, if there be any obligation in their favor, it must be a moral obligation or claim against the Government of the United States and not either a moral or a legal claim against the Oklahoma Choctaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just wanted to be sure that I understood the Senator. Did he say that there must be a claim against the United States and not against the Choctaw fund?

Mr. GORE. I say, if the Mississippi Choctaws have any right or any claim——

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is against the United States?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just wanted to be certain of that, because the Senator's colleague a moment ago seemed to think it was absolutely absurd that they could have any.

Mr. GORE. I made it entirely conditional and contingent, and I stated that it was a moral claim, not a legal claim. I do not know but that there might be some moral claim against the General Government; not, however, a legal claim.

I shall proceed to show that if there be any obligation it must exist against the General Government, and not against the Choctaws of Oklahoma; and I shall also show, before I conclude, that there is a syndicate or organization of lawyers who have been for years attempting to reopen the Choctaw and Chickasaw rolls in order that they might realize a golden fortune out of that contingency.

It is true that under the Dancing Rabbit Creek and other treaties the Choctaws agreed to remove westward of the Mississippi. They exchanged 15,000,000 acres of land in Mississippi for a large section of territory now comprised in the State of Oklahoma—over 15,000,000 acres. All who desired to remove westward were permitted to remove westward; but the treaty stipulated that if any of the Choctaws desired to remain in Mississippi and become citizens of the States they should be entitled to certain allotments of land. Each head of a family, I believe, was entitled to a section of land. Every child over 10 years of age was entitled to a half section of land. Every child under 10 years of age was entitled to a quarter section of land.

That was a pretty generous dower in behalf of those Choctaws who should elect to remain in Mississippi. It is perhaps true—I have no occasion to deny it—that Mr. Ward, who was acting as Indian agent for the Government, encouraged the removal of Indians from Mississippi to Oklahoma, and discouraged the registration of those Indians who intended to remain in Mississippi. Those who desired to remain in the State of Mississippi were required to register, in order to constitute a list for the allotment of the lands provided by the treaty. Under Mr. Ward's conduct, or misconduct, I think only 142 heads of families were registered, but the Government of the United States made an effort to atone for the conduct of Mr. Ward. In 1842 an investigation was made, and it was ascertained that more than 1,100 Indians, heads of families, had elected to remain in Mississippi, the whole number, children and all, aggregating more than 4,000. The Government then enacted a law to carry out its obligations to those Mississippi Choctaws. It provided, under the act of 1842, for the issuance of scrip to each and every one of those Indians, in accordance with the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator suspend a moment, to permit the Chair to address an inquiry to him?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the desire, both of the Vice President and the President pro tempore, that the Vice President shall resume the chair within a very short time. Is it the intention of the Senator to interpose a point of order to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the committee amendment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is, the Chair will dispose of it at this time, if the Senator will suspend.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The principal purpose of the amendment offered by the committee is to direct a per capita payment of a given sum to certain Indians, the fund to be disbursed being a trust fund, the property of the Indians, and now in the custody of the United States. It provides for an unconditional present payment. The purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi is to make the payment conditional upon the happening of a certain event. The Chair holds that if it is competent for Congress to pass the main proposition for partial payment at this time it is also competent for Congress to annex any condition it may see proper. The condition proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is entirely germane and entirely proper if the Congress sees fit to adopt it. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to make just one observation before the Chair makes his final ruling. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], just before he sat down, said that we pleaded the existing law in behalf of the Oklahoma Choctaws and against the Mississippi Choctaws. He said: "That is the law." He said: "What I want to do is to change the law." It seems to me that statement on the part of the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This does not go to that point. It simply goes to the right of Congress to exercise a conditional delay of the main proposition.

Congress could omit the entire proposition, and if it can do that it can do less. It can make it depend upon certain events that may occur in the future. It might make it depend upon the lapse of a period of time. Besides that, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi does not include all of the tribes named in the amendment of the committee.

The Chair is quite satisfied with his ruling. It is not the result of hasty consideration. The matter was called to his attention on last evening, and he gave it some consideration, and he is satisfied to stand on the ruling he has announced.

The amendment is in order, and the question is on its adoption. The Senator from Oklahoma may proceed.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, as I was saying when the Chair raised this question, the General Government passed an act in 1842 under which land scrip was issued to the Mississippi Choctaws remaining in that State. Scrip for one-half the land was issued in that year.

In 1845 the Government changed its policy. It enacted a law under which no further scrip was issued, but under which the value of the scrip, estimated at $1.25 an acre for the land represented, was capitalized, and upon that capitalization the Mississippi Choctaws remaining in Mississippi were paid 5 per cent interest.

That policy continued until 1852, when the Government of the United States again changed its policy. It decided to pay off the capitalized value of the land scrip previously issued, and the act of that year appropriated $872,000 for the payment of the Mississippi Choctaws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All of those things may be very good reasons why the amendment should not be adopted, but they do not constitute a reason why it should not be considered.

Mr. GORE. I am not discussing the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thought the Senator was doing so. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon. He thought the Senator was addressing his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. GORE. I am not discussing the ruling of the Chair. I am discussing the merits of the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GORE. Under that act some $732,000 were paid to the Mississippi Choctaws who elected to remain in the State and who took lands in Mississippi in lieu of the promised land in the present State of Oklahoma.

Between 1836 and 1855 some 4,000 Mississippi Choctaws removed from Mississippi to the Indian Territory. They were admitted to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation; they are on the rolls to-day, and they are participating in the tribal property of the nation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator between what two years that was.

Mr. GORE. Between 1836 and 1855.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was it only 4,000 Mississippi Choctaws to whom the senior Senator from Oklahoma was referring?

Mr. GORE. I do not know.

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. GORE. I assumed so, but I did not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that is the case, then the senior Senator from Oklahoma and I are both right. If he referred to 4,000 Mississippi Choctaws being on the rolls who had removed there prior to 1855, I would not for a moment dispute that statement. I thought the Senator referred to the Mississippi Choctaws who had removed there since 1902 and had gotten upon the rolls.

Mr. OWEN. No, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought that must be a mistake, as there were only about 2,200 or 2,300 of them in the State.

Mr. GORE. My purpose in making the observation is this: The Senator from Mississippi has argued that membership in a tribe or a clan is dependent upon blood, upon consanguinity, and not upon any legal rights or enactment.

Now, sir, that may have been true in times of antiquity; that may have been true among the families and tribes and clans of ancient Greece and Rome; that may have been true among the Iroquois. Indeed, sir, it may have been true among the Chickasaws and Choctaws prior to the coming of the white man, and even subsequently to the coming of the white man so far as they themselves, their constitution and customs, were concerned.

It does not follow, however, that in their dealings with the Government of the United States mere blood is sufficient to constitute membership in a tribe. Indeed, sir, it is not sufficient to constitute membership in any of the Five Civilized Tribes.

That one point is overlooked by many humane and philanthropic people. It raises the strangest sort of anomaly, which they can not reconcile with their sense of justice; but, Mr. President, bona fide residence among the Five Civilized Tribes was a condition precedent to membership in those tribes or in those nations. It often happened that in the case of full brothers one may be upon the Indian rolls and the other may not, and it turns upon the point of residence.

I remember most distinctly a case in point. One of the best friends I ever had was a Choctaw Indian—Calvin Meek. I could say of him, as Anthony said of Caesar, "He was my friend, faithful and just to me." He died some four or five years ago. He left a widow and five helpless and dependent children. His full brother is on the Choctaw rolls to-day, is a citizen of that nation, secured an allotment, and secures all the benefits and distributions of tribal funds. The Indian blood of his brother, Calvin Meek, was never challenged. No one disputed that he was an Indian by blood, but he filed his application for citizenship while he was a resident of the State of Missouri. He filed his application 30 days before he removed to the Indian Territory. His brother removed to the Indian Territory before filing, and upon that point turned the decision of the two cases. Calvin Meek was held not to be eligible to membership because he had severed his relations with the tribe and adopted the customs of the white man. His brother, a resident of the Choctaw country, maintaining his relationship with the tribe, was a member of the nation, and was entitled to share its tribal property.

There never has been a Chickasaw Indian or a Choctaw Indian admitted to the rolls of either tribe who was not a bona fide resident of the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations in Oklahoma. This is an unvarying rule, and it never has been departed from; but from 1855 down to about 1890 Choctaw Indians removed to Oklahoma from time to time. They were welcomed by their brethren of the West. They were adopted into the tribe, and to-day they are upon the rolls of the tribe.

In 1889 the Choctaw Council passed a memorial requesting the Government of the United States to prevail upon their brethren in Mississippi to transfer their residence from that State to the Indian Territory. In 1891 the Choctaw Council passed a resolution creating a commission to visit the State of Mississippi, to visit their kinsmen in their old home, and prevail upon them to remove to the Indian Territory, and to share the fortunes of their families and tribes who had already moved toward the setting sun. They have greeted them with open arms. Not only that, sir, but in some instances they defrayed the expenses of those who removed from Mississippi to Oklahoma, and in certain instances they defrayed the expenses of those who had removed to the Indian Territory while they were becoming adjusted to their new homes and their new environments.

This has not been a policy of exclusion on the part of the Oklahoma Choctaws. Those who came and became bona fide citizens or residents became members of the tribe. That was a condition essential to citizenship in the tribe. I think there is no exception to that universal rule.

In 1893, 21 years ago, the Dawes Commission was created by Congress. A former distinguished Member of this body was appointed as its first chairman. That commission investigated the rights and the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws remaining in Mississippi to enrollment in the Indian Territory, and that legally constituted commission decided that the Mississippi Choctaws had no right to enrollment. They insisted upon that immemorial requirement, that of residence in the nation.

The decision of the Dawes Commission was challenged. Under the law the Indians had a right to appeal to the Federal courts in the Indian Territory. Jack Amos and others prosecuted an appeal from the decision of the Dawes Commission to the Federal court presided over by Judge Clayton. In a very able and, I might say, a very eloquent decision Judge Clayton decided that the Mississippi Choctaws remaining in Mississippi had no legal right to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation or to enrollment as citizens of the tribe.

That is the decision of the court. It is authoritative. Amos prosecuted an appeal from the decision of Judge Clayton to the Supreme Court of the United States, and despairing of success he suffered the case to be dismissed, and it never came to final judgment in the Supreme Court. He was represented by able and distinguished counsel. I infer, however, from the suggestion of my colleague that in a subsequent case, the Stephens case, the question was decided by the Supreme Court in accordance with Judge Clayton's decision.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to his colleague?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. The Mississippi Choctaw case was argued in the Stephens case, and the Supreme Court held that the decision of Judge Clayton in that whole class of cases was final.

Mr. GORE. The Stephens case and the Amos case were companion—related cases?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Those decisions applied to those people who were claiming that their ancestors had received patents.

Mr. OWEN. The decisions which were ratified by the Supreme Court were to the effect that the legislation authorizing final judgment to be rendered by the United States District Court of the Indian Territory gave conclusive and final jurisdiction, and that their decision under the law was conclusive.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand; but the decision of the lower court went off upon the ground that these people had not proven that they were descended from the people who had received these patents.

Mr. OWEN. No; it went——

Mr. GORE. It was on the ground that they were not bona fide residents of the nation.

Mr. OWEN. I have here the language of Judge Clayton:

> Adopting these rules in the interpretation of article 14 of the treaty of 1830, I arrive at the conclusion that the "privilege of a Choctaw citizen" therein reserved to those Choctaws who shall remain, thereby separating themselves, it may be forever, from their brethren and their nation, becoming citizens of another sovereignty and aliens of their own, situated so that it would be impossible, while in Mississippi, to receive or enjoy any of the rights of Choctaw citizenship, was the right to renounce his allegiance to the Commonwealth of Mississippi, move upon the lands conveyed to him and his people, and there, the only spot on earth where he could do so, renew his relations with his people and enjoy all of the privileges of a Choctaw citizen except to participate in the annuities.

And then he held that those who had not done so were not entitled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Notwithstanding the fact that article 14 says it relates to the Choctaws who remain in Mississippi.

Mr. OWEN. He was passing on article 14.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it says that it relates to the Choctaws who remain in Mississippi.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think it is the last clause in the fourteenth article cited by the Senator and quoted by him, to the effect that they should not lose their privileges as Choctaw citizens, but it expressly provided that those who should remove should not share the annuities; that they shall enjoy other privileges; that they shall have a right to share in other property as citizens of the Choctaw Nation. But upon what condition were the privileges of citizenship to be enjoyed, and by what class of Mississippi Choctaws? By those who removed. That is the language of the treaty.

Mr. President, the second article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty provides that the section of country now held by the Chickasaw and Choctaw Tribes should be conveyed to those tribes, to have and to hold so long as they exist as a nation and live on it. The patent issued in pursuance of that treaty to the Chickasaw and Choctaw Tribes followed that language and conveyed that splendid region to the Chickasaws and Choctaws, to have and to hold so long as they exist as a nation and live on it.

Now, Mr. President, to show the further generosity of the Oklahoma Choctaws under the Curtis Act, under the Atoka agreement of 1898, provision was made for the allotment of land to the Indians and the final winding up of the affairs of the tribe. It is true, as suggested by the Senator, that a number of Indians were identified as Mississippi Choctaws remaining in Mississippi. It is my recollection that there were some 2,500 all told, but subsequent to the Atoka agreement in 1902 a provision, out of abundant generosity, was inserted to the effect that the Mississippi full-blood Choctaws who should remove to the Choctaw Nation within six months should be entitled to enrollment and should be entitled to citizenship under the original terms of the treaty and should live upon the land.

Mr. President, that was not mere nominal generosity. It was not a mere show of justice and of liberality toward their kinsmen. Under that tempting offer some 1,485 Mississippi Choctaws forsook their original home and wended their way to the land of the fair god in the present State of Oklahoma.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How many did the Senator say?

Mr. GORE. I think the number was 1,485, and it cost the Oklahoma Chickasaws and Choctaws $15,000,000. That was the price of their generosity. They opened their homes, they opened their rolls, they shared their lands, they shared their patrimony with their brethren who showed sufficient interest in the new home to transfer their residence to it at the splendid price of $15,000,000.

Yet the Senator from Mississippi suggests that the Oklahoma Choctaws have been measly, stingy, niggardly with their clansmen who were shortsighted enough to remain in the good old State of Mississippi.

Mr. President, the Choctaws and Chickasaws, it is true, have a magnificent patrimony. They have on hand in the Treasury $7,500,000 in cash; they have outstanding uncollected balances of $7,100,000. They have segregated coal land worth at least $30,000,000.

That, sir, has been a tempting bribe to many enterprising lawyers in this country. If but those rolls could be opened, if but the Mississippi Choctaws could be placed upon those rolls, if but these attorneys could share the lands and the money accruing to their clients, what a magnificent fortune it would be.

Mr. President, there is one firm of attorneys in the city of St. Louis who have secured, according to the report of a Government inspector, 9,500 contracts with Mississippi Choctaws and 2,300 contracts with alleged Choctaw and Chickasaw "freedmen"—negroes. According to the testimony of one of those attorneys he held 4,200 contracts. According to the information gathered by the Government inspector he had, all told, 9,500 contracts.

Sir, there is a bill pending in another place to secure each one of these Indians who shall make proof of blood under the act $2,080. The contract, and I have a copy of it here, calls for 30 per cent of all the land and all the moneys which shall be taken away from the Oklahoma Choctaws and transferred to the Mississippi Choctaws. If they realize their golden dream the possible fee would amount to $6,000,000.

That is not all. They have organized a syndicate known as the Texas & Oklahoma Investment Co. It is chartered in the State of Texas with a capital stock of $100,000. A firm of lawyers holds 40 per cent of the stock, and the investors, the promoters, the speculators, those who would plunder the Oklahoma Choctaws, hold 60 per cent of the stock.

I have here an extract from a letter written by one of these parties, in which he says that it is estimated that each Indian claim will be worth $8,000. This is an advertisement. He says that his contracts are for 30 per cent of the amounts which might be realized. This, he says, will be $2,400 in each case. He says that he is not selling less than 20 contracts in a lot, at $25 each. He adds significantly that on 20 contracts you would realize $23,500 net profit on an investment of only $500.

Now, Mr. President, you can see the shadow of the wolf lurking around the tents and the tepees of these Oklahoma Choctaws, if these attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws should consummate their piracy on the Oklahoma Choctaws. I shall ask leave to print a portion of the statement, contracts, and so forth, of this firm of attorneys of St. Louis as a part of my remarks, so that the Senate can appreciate the avarice and the cupidity which has impelled these men, as a pack of wolves, to prey upon these Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter will be inserted. The Chair hears none.

Mr. GORE. I may add that there are 2,300 freedmen contracts.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. WHITE. How did these Indians find these lawyers?

Mr. GORE. I am delighted to have the Senator ask that question.

Mr. WHITE. Did the lawyers go among the Indians?

Mr. GORE. I have just referred to the freedmen's contracts, numbering 2,300. The firm of Crews & Cantwell hired J. Milton Turner, a negro lawyer, to rustle, and he rustled. He got a good many of the 2,300 contracts.

Bob Fortune, a well-known negro out in Oklahoma, was another rustler. He also rustled around and got a good many of these 2,300 freedmen contracts. There was one other negro in the woodpile whose name I do not now happen to remember. In Mississippi they also had emissaries who were conspicuous not only for their activity but for their success. There was one agent, A. P. Powell, retains marks of African ancestry, who was operating in Mississippi, and he got, I believe, 4,200 contracts from the Mississippi Choctaws in that State. I have a statement here showing that one Luke Ward Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., had on the 27th of last month 1,800 of these luscious plums ready to throw into the lap of Messrs. Crews & Cantwell. He had previously assisted in transferring 1,300 contracts from one Matthews to Crews & Cantwell; and I may add that he had helped to secure, I believe 2,358 other contracts in his patriotic endeavors to serve the interests of the Mississippi Choctaws and to share the property of the Oklahoma Choctaws and incidentally to realize to Crews & Cantwell 30 per cent on each and every allotment secured to the Mississippi Choctaws. I think in some cases, perhaps of extraordinary difficulty, the fee was 35 per cent.

I believe that the solicitation of business is not regarded as in accord with the very highest ethics and propriety of the legal profession. Perhaps they might plead the character not the color of their emissaries in extenuation of their activities.

Now, sir, based upon the representation of the Texas Investment Co., if they could realize on these 9,500 contracts it would aggregate a little more than $18,000,000—$18,000,000 attorneys' fees to secure the Mississippi Choctaws their pretended rights under the Dancing Rabbit treaty.

I think in the history of mankind, in the history of Indian fees, greater enterprise and greater cupidity have never been made manifest amongst the sons of men.

It is true that if the pending amendment reported by the committee should be adopted, there would be an abundant balance of the estate left to meet all just claims which might ever arise against the Chickasaws and Choctaws.

The amendment calls for $100 per capita to these Indians. It would leave in the Treasury about $5,000,000 in cash belonging to these two tribes, to say nothing of the uncollected balance of $7,000,000, and the segregated coal lands which are yet to be sold and will probably bring some $25,000,000 or $30,000,000.

Mr. President are we to deny justice to the Oklahoma Choctaws and Chickasaws in order that these attorneys can realize on their investments, or, rather, upon their activities? These Oklahoma Choctaws and Chickasaws need this money. They need it now. It is their money; the Government is their guardian; the Indian is the ward. These Indians are dying, as in the course of nature all must die. They are passing to the happy hunting ground. They ought to be allowed to come into their own, to enjoy their property, to enjoy this money while they yet live to provide the necessaries and comforts of life. It will be of slight service when they are on the other side of the sod. Monuments and inscriptions are quite as unserviceable to an Indian as to his pale-faced brother.

These Indians are obliged now when their property is unavailable for use as a basis of credit to borrow money, and in many instances they are paying high rates of interest, while their own money is lying idle in the Treasury, is rusting in the Treasury. Is that justice to the Choctaw? Is that justice to the Chickasaw? Can this Government, can this Congress, justify such inhuman, barbaric treatment toward the involuntary wards of the Government?

The best way to inculcate an observance of contracts and treaties on the part of the Indian is for the Government itself to keep its word, to keep its faith inviolate with these Indians.

Mr. President, I need hardly say here to reenforce the justice of the pending committee amendment that we have been unfortunate enough in Oklahoma to have experienced five lean years. Our crops have been reduced. The basis of credit has been reduced, especially on the part of those whose landed property is restricted.

I might say in passing to illustrate this fact that the wheat crop in Oklahoma in 1912 was 23,500,000 bushels, in 1913 it was 18,500,000 bushels. In 1912 the oat crop was 22,000,000 bushels, in 1913 it was 17,000,000 bushels. In 1912 the corn crop was 101,800,000 bushels. Last year it was 52,500,000 bushels. In 1912 our cotton crop was 1,021,000 bales, and last year it was only 820,000 bales.

This has been a misfortune to the State, it has been a misfortune to the people of the State, and most of all has it oppressed those who can not make adequate use of their credit. Yet this pittance is to be denied to the Oklahoma Chickasaws and Choctaws in order that the Mississippi Choctaws, who have no right, who have no just claim against the Oklahoma Indians, may be given time to assert an imaginary right against the Oklahoma Chickasaws and Choctaws and to share in the property they now hold.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the voice of justice pleads loudly and pleads eloquently against the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, and pleads with equal eloquence for justice to the Oklahoma Chickasaws and Choctaws and for the adoption of the amendment wisely reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. I trust that the Senate will reject the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi and will heartily indorse and adopt the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The matter requested to be printed is as follows:

EXHIBIT A.

MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAW CONTRACT.

This agreement, made this 5th day of September, 1910, by and between Louis Joseph Ryan, now residing at the town of Biloxi, in the county of Harrison, State of Mississippi, party of the first part, and Thomas B. Crews and Harry J. Cantwell, jointly, parties of the second part, witnesseth:

That, whereas the party of the first part is entitled, as a Mississippi Choctaw or as a descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw, under the laws of the United States, to certain rights in the distribution of the tribal property of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indian Tribe in Oklahoma; and

Whereas the party of the first part has been heretofore denied enrollment or has had no opportunity to make application for proper enrollment in said rolls as a Mississippi Choctaw; and

Whereas it is necessary that the party of the first part shall secure the lawful professional services of attorneys for the purpose of presenting such evidence as the party of the first part may have of his status and right as a Mississippi Choctaw or a descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw, so entitled to the rights aforesaid, and for other necessary legal services in establishing and securing his rights in the premises; and

Whereas the party of the first part is without any means or funds to compensate such attorneys and counsel;

Now, therefore, the premises considered, the parties of the second part jointly agree:

First. To represent the party of the first part as attorneys and counsel in presenting to the Interior Department such lawful evidence as the party of the first part may collect to establish the facts of his pedigree and status, and such other facts as may be necessary to establish the right claimed.

Second. To represent as attorneys the party of the first part in all legal proceedings before any court, commission, or department of the Government of the United States or the State of Oklahoma, wherever and whenever such right may be properly and legally tried.

Third. To present before the committees of Congress proper legal argument in support of the right so claimed or in support of any measure tending to provide a remedy for the right so claimed.

Fourth. To furnish party of the first part necessary information for the purpose of enabling him to select to the best advantage any lands that he may be entitled to by reason of said right.

Fifth. To collect all sums of money, lands, and property that may properly be collected, selected, and received hereafter by reason of said right, and to faithfully pay over and account to said party of the first part for all such sums of money and property after deducting the compensation hereinafter provided for.

In consideration of the premises and the agreement of the parties of the second part as aforesaid, and of services heretofore rendered by them, the party of the first part contracts and agrees to pay and assign, transfer, and convey to the parties of the second part 30 per cent of all sums of money, lands, and property that may be received by reason of the right claimed, and hereby irrevocably appoints the parties of the second part his true and lawful attorneys in fact, to do any and all acts in his name, place, and stead as fully and completely as he might do in person in and about the subject matter of this agreement, and to execute such receipts, discharges, and releases as the party of the first part might lawfully do, hereby ratifying and confirming all that his said attorneys in fact and in law may do in the premises.

The party of the first part hereby revokes all powers of attorney, if any, heretofore made by him to any person or persons whomsoever, touching said rights or interests, and requests that the Interior Department of the United States recognize the parties of the second part as his exclusive agents and attorneys in the premises.

And it is hereby specifically agreed that the appointment herein of Thomas B. Crews and Harry J. Cantwell is joint, and that in the event of the death of either the survivor shall succeed to all rights and benefits of this agreement, and shall perform all of the duties hereunder.

It is further agreed that by reason of the legal services rendered prior to and at the signing of this agreement, in advising the party of the first part as to his legal rights, and in consideration of the services heretofore rendered by A. P. Powell before the committees of Congress in presenting the claims of the class of persons to which the party of the first part belongs, said parties of the second part having compensated said A. P. Powell therefor, and in further consideration of the absolute agreement herein of the parties of the second part to perform the services herein, that the powers herein granted are powers coupled with an interest; and it is agreed that the parties of the second part may jointly designate, substitute, and appoint, in writing, any competent attorney or attorneys at law to assist in the performance of the duties of the parties of the second part hereunder, and to clothe said person or persons with all the powers herein granted to the parties of the second part, the parties of the second part hereby guaranteeing the efficiency and integrity of any and all persons who may be thus appointed, it being distinctly understood that the compensation of such persons for such assistance shall not be paid by the party of the first part.

It is further understood and agreed that, in the event it becomes necessary under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, that this contract shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; then, in that event, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, modify the terms of this contract as to the compensation to be paid the parties of the second part, without invalidating this contract, and said contract as modified by said Secretary of the Interior shall be binding upon the parties hereto, provided always that the compensation fixed by the Secretary of the Interior shall in no event exceed the percentage above stated.

Executed in duplicate.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written.

EXHIBIT B.

[Extract from hearings before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Indian Affairs on June 4, 1914.]

Mr. CARTER (interposing). Right along that line, how many contracts have you with these people?

Mr. CANTWELL. I have in all, contracts with 4,200 persons.

Mr. CARTER. What compensation do those contracts provide?

Mr. CANTWELL. They provide that the fee shall be fixed by act of Congress or subject to change by act of Congress and by the Secretary of the Interior. They provide for from 25 per cent to 35 per cent. A part of them provide for 35 per cent.

Mr. POST. If these 4,000 persons were enrolled as citiens of the Choctaw Nation and if they were entitled to all of the emoluments that you claim for them, what would be the aggregate amount coming to them?

Mr. CANTWELL. They are not claiming under this bill the distributions which were made per capita that they did not go out there to be identified for; that is, those cash distributions that were made during the time the tribe was in existence of lease money or of the net proceeds of them. They are simply equitably entitled to them, but they are claiming instead of the lands that those now on the rolls have gotten or this bill provides that they shall get a full and equal quantity of land at twice the nominal appraised value. That amounts, so far as these lands go, to about $2,000 apiece. It would amount to an equal distribution if awarded those rights——

Mr. POST (interposing). What do you estimate that to be?

Mr. CANTWELL. The estimates vary. Everyone now on the rolls has gotten his 320 acres at a nominal appraisement, and those lands are in many cases worth $100 per acre to-day. There would probably be, at a low estimate, $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 worth of property left; that is, at the very lowest estimate.

Mr. CARTER. I have here what purports to be a copy of a contract, printed with the name of Cantwell and Crews on it, which contains the following provision:

"Fifth. To collect and receive all sums of money, lands, and property that may lawfully be collected, selected, and received by reason of said rights hereafter, and to faithfully pay over and account to the party of the first part for all such sums of money, lands, and property after deducting the compensation herein provided for."

* * * * * * *

Mr. CARTER. I notice here an affidavit by A. P. Powell, in which he sets out, I believe, that he has taken through Milton J. Turner, Robert L. Fortune, and others contracts for about 2,300 people. He states in that affidavit that he has taken 2,300 of these contracts and turned them over to Cantwell & Crews.

Mr. CANTWELL. I do not know what the contents of that affidavit are, but that is probably true. If that is what he says, that is probably true. I think, if you desire any information in regard to those contracts—I only want to say this to you, that we had some difficulty with Mr. Powell. Mr. Powell was sent to Mississippi under a salary of $150 per month and expenses to take these contracts for our firm. He charged in his expenses for notary fees and everything else. We learned that he was charging some of these people small sums of money, and I got him to St. Louis and asked him about it and jacked him up about it. Then we bought Powell's interest entirely out. There is an affidavit which was made on the 6th day of November, 1911. You understand that these contracts taken by Powell have no connection with these others.

Mr. CARTER. Let us see what it is. Do you say that this provision, authorizing you to collect and receive all sums of money, lands, and property that may lawfully be collected, etc., is not in your contract with the Mississippi Choctaws?

Mr. CANTWELL. I will send you an exact copy of the contract with the Mississippi Choctaws. I believe there was a copy of the form furnished in that investigation of Indian contracts made by the committee, but if there is not I will send you a copy of it.

Mr. CARTER. Now, then, Mr. Cantwell, I notice that Mr. Powell testifies to having turned over about 4,200 contracts with Mississippi Choctaws to Crews & Cantwell. Then another gentleman states that he has turned over—I have not that affidavit here with me—but he states that he has turned over to Crews & Cantwell about 1,300 contracts with Mississippi Choctaws in addition to the ones turned over by Powell. That was a gentleman by the name of Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CANTWELL. If the committee desires, I have all the contracts, except about 400 which are in the possession of Mr. Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., in a safe deposit in Washington, with a memorandum of the evidence made by each claimant, and they are open to the inspection of the committee at any time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Powell says that he charged each applicant from $1.25 to $2.50.

He says: "After the 4,000 were registered, more applicants came in, and I charged them $1.25 each. I made this charge because the money that had been advanced by Crews, Cantwell, and Hulbert was exhausted, and they refused to put up any more money for taking applications. This charge by me was to cover expenses of continuing the work of getting applications. I sent all these claims that I was making a charge for to Crews and Cantwell. I went from Bay St. Louis to Washington to see Mr. Cantwell, and he tried to get Hulbert to put up more money, and Hulbert notified me at Jackson, Miss., that he had put up $7,000, and that we had to take proof of the same, and that he was willing to put up the $7,000 for that purpose. He has not put it up yet."

Then he says: "I went to Monticello and took applications for Crews and Cantwell and charged $2.50 each there. I took about 100 names there. I took a few names at Biloxi and charge $1.25 for each applicant there. These claims were for Crews and Cantwell. I also visited Meridian and took about 88 applications there for Crews and Cantwell, but for which no charge was made."

Mr. CANTWELL. I want to say unqualifiedly and as strongly as I can say it that if Mr. Powell or anybody else says that we ever authorized him to charge $2.50 and knew he was charging $2.50, or any sum whatever, for any of these contracts, he is an unmitigated perjurer. Never, with our consent, was there one dollar of money charged; and, furthermore, as this affidavit which I submit to you shows, when we discovered that he had done it, we paid Powell a large sum of money to get rid of him.

Mr. CARTER. When did you sever the connection?

Mr. CANTWELL. This circular which was sent out on the 16th of February, 1912, shows our full connection with Mr. Powell.

Mr. CARTER. Does it show the date?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. Do you know what the date is?

Mr. CANTWELL. Some time in January or February, 1912.

Mr. CARTER. That was after the time he had made this affidavit. This was on April 27, 1911.

Mr. CANTWELL. He is an unmitigated liar if he ever says that any charge was ever made, because he charged us with all the expenses and we got vouchers for them. Our instructions to him were not under any circumstances to permit anybody to pay him anything. I would like to have this made a part of the record.

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir. Since the time that you severed connection with him you have not authorized him in any way to act for you or Mr. Crews?

Mr. CANTWELL. No, sir.

Mr. CARTER. Has he continued to take contracts?

Mr. CANTWELL. I do not know who he has taken contracts for. I understand he has been down to Mississippi. The only contracts taken for us were contracts taken by Mr. Luke W. Conerly, at Gulfport, Miss.

Mr. CARTER. He is your agent?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. He is still continuing to take contracts?

Mr. CANTWELL. I believe so.

Mr. CARTER. When you separated from Mr. Powell, did you give him any letter of recommendation?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir; I committed the unpardonable folly of writing a letter to Powell—he is a very peculiar human being, you know, very active—in which I complimented him for staying here and keeping open the Mississippi Choctaw matters. He and Nichols, as you know, stayed around in this Capitol and haunted everybody for months and months when practically everybody in Oklahoma and Mississippi had given up hope, and I wrote a letter to Powell which gave Powell entirely too much credit and which he immediately had lithographed. He changed one part of it, one sentence in the original copy, and spread it all over Mississippi. There is nothing in that to be ashamed of except that I was probably too generous in giving him something to which he was not entitled.

Mr. CARTER. You found out at the time you made this settlement and turned him off that he was a man of bad repute?

Mr. CANTWELL. At the time we made this settlement?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANTWELL. Mr. Carter, after we made that settlement with Mr. Powell and engaged Mr. Conerly, Powell, I was afraid, would go down to Mississippi and go to taking contracts. I was afraid that we could not keep him quiet. I did not want him to take any more contracts. I agreed to pay Powell a small salary if he would go down there and stay there under the direction of Conerly. After we bought him out, simply to dispose of him, we agreed to pay him $50 or $60 a month.

Mr. CARTER. So he did work for you after that?

Mr. CANTWELL. No; he went down there with the understanding that he was not to take any contracts at all.

Mr. CARTER. But was to draw a salary?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir. He telegraphed me from some point down there that the deal was off, and the next day he went to taking contracts.

Mr. CARTER. On his own hook?

Mr. CANTWELL. On his own hook, I suppose. I got out this circular. That was the occasion for getting out this circular.

Mr. CARTER. Do you not think that giving him this letter from a firm of lawyers like yourself and Mr. Crews might give a certain standing that would enable him to take contracts that he could not possibly have gotten without that letter?

Mr. CANTWELL. I am inclined to think that that is probably true.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CARTER. How much does the Harrison bill provide shall be paid to each claimant?

Mr. CANTWELL. Double the appraised allotment.

Mr. CARTER. Two thousand and eighty dollars?

Mr. CANTWELL. Approximately.

Mr. CARTER. It is stated here that 9,558 of these contracts are controlled by Crews & Cantwell. Without regard to whether that is or is not true, a calculation of 9,558 multiplied by $2,000 would be $19,116,000, and if the fees set out in your contracts were paid to you, you would get about one-third of that sum. Some of them are 30 per cent and some 35 per cent?

Mr. CANTWELL. I do not think there are any 35 per cent.

Mr. CARTER. This one here is 35 per cent.

Mr. CANTWELL. That is not a Mississippi Choctaw contract.

Mr. CARTER. It provides for the enrollment of the people?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir; but that would include freedmen and all.

Mr. CARTER. That would aggregate a fee of $6,338,000. That would be a great deal more than Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish ever dreamed of, and their fee of $750,000 seemed excessive.

Mr. CANTWELL. That predisposes that all are going to be enrolled. In the next place, it includes in your estimate a great many people who are not Mississippi Choctaws, who could be eliminated from consideration.

Mr. CARTER. If they were enrolled, they would be entitled to the same consideration?

* * * * * * *

Have you hypothecated any of those contracts?

Mr. CANTWELL. No; I have hypothecated none of these contracts. There has never been a hypothecation of any of those contracts, so far as we are concerned. There are some gentlemen in Texas who are interested with us in those contracts and in what sum may be recovered who have advanced money for taking those contracts and have agreed to advance some money for the necessary expenses whenever we get an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CARTER. How much have they advanced?

Mr. CANTWELL. They have advanced altogether—I do not know the exact figures, but it is probably $15,000.

Mr. CARTER. What security did they take?

Mr. CANTWELL. They took an agreement from us that they should have an interest in whatever we might recover.

Mr. CARTER. That would practically be a hypothecation?

Mr. CANTWELL. That is not hypothecation; it is a declaration that they shall receive a certain proportion.

Mr. CARTER. How much are they to receive for financing it?

Mr. CANTWELL. My recollection is that in the case of the Mississippi Choctaws it is 60 per cent, whatever it may be.

Mr. CARTER. Whatever your fee is?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. What is the name of the concern that is financing these contracts?

Mr. CANTWELL. It was incorporated by these people under this agreement and called the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co.

Mr. CARTER. Who compose the corporation?

Mr. CANTWELL. A number of gentlemen in Houston, Tex.; friends of Mr. Harris Masterson.

Mr. CARTER. Do you know any of the other names?

Mr. CANTWELL. I do not know any except Mr. Masterson and Mr. Hulbert.

Mr. CARTER. Are those the only people you have negotiated with concerning these contracts for the purpose of raising money?

Mr. CANTWELL. Those are the only people with whom we have ever signed a contract assigning any interest called the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co.

Mr. CARTER. Did you have any business with a fellow named C. B. Molling in Ohio?

Mr. CANTWELL. No, sir.

Mr. CARTER. With Mr. Dechant?

Mr. CANTWELL. No, sir.

Mr. CARTER. Did you have any correspondence with him?

Mr. CANTWELL. No, sir. He may be a stockholder in the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. He may have sold his stock to somebody else, but so far as my knowledge goes——

Mr. CARTER (interposing). It was an organized stock company?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. And the stock was sold?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. What is the capital?

Mr. CANTWELL. I think the capital is $100,000.

Mr. CARTER. What was the capitalization based upon?

Mr. CANTWELL. It was based on the assignment of the contract.

Mr. CARTER. What was the relative value between the capitalization and the fee?

Mr. CANTWELL. There was an agreement to put up $25,000, and to give Mr. Crews and myself 40 per cent of the stock. In other words, the contracts were assigned to the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co.; they agreed to provide a fund of $25,000.

Mr. CARTER. And you take 60 per cent?

Mr. CANTWELL. Forty per cent.

Mr. CARTER. And they 60 per cent?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. They to pay in $25,000 for the 60 per cent?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. Then there has been really $25,000 paid instead of $15,000?

Mr. CANTWELL. You asked how much had been spent.

Mr. CARTER. There is still $10,000 paid in?

Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. And they were to have 40 per cent?

Mr. CANTWELL. Sixty per cent.

Mr. CARTER. Then, for $25,000, if these contracts should go through, they would expect to realize $3,802,000?

Mr. CANTWELL. Of course, Mr. CARTER, I have not speculated on anything of that sort. When the time comes it will be found, of course, that a great many of these people are not entitled to rights. We probably will determine that ourselves.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CARTER. How long was Powell in your employ?

Mr. CANTWELL. Until February, 1912.

Mr. CARTER. Was Milton Turner in your employ?

Mr. CANTWELL. Not on the Mississippi Choctaw work.
Mr. CARTER. Was he in your employ?
Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. CARTER. Was Robert Fortune?
Mr. CANTWELL. Robert Fortune helped Turner on some of the Freedmen's contracts.
Mr. CARTER. Are any of those gentlemen Indians?
Mr. CANTWELL. No, sir; not that I know of. I do not know Robert Fortune at all. Turner is a negro.
Mr. CARTER. How about Powell?
Mr. CANTWELL. Powell claims to be an Indian.
Mr. CARTER What do you think about it?
Mr. CANTWELL. My opinion of the Indian would be very much lessened if Powell is an Indian. That is all I can say from what I have seen of him. When I wrote him a letter, which I think any white man or any Indian would have considered a generous letter, he simply used it to hurt the cause, I thought.
Mr. CARTER. Robert Fortune is a colored man, and for a number of years was a deputy marshal in the Indian Territory.
Mr. CANTWELL. I do not know him.
Mr. CARTER. Did you have anyone else at that time working for you in this matter?
Mr. CANTWELL. Except Conerly; no, sir.
Mr. CARTER. Conerly was employed since that time?
Mr. CANTWELL. Conerly was employed in the beginning, but with Powell.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HURLEY. I would like to ask Mr. Cantwell if he knows whether these gentlemen are connected with the company or syndicate that now holds the Mississippi Choctaw contracts. He has spoken of Mr. Harris Masterson, of Houston, Tex., and Mr. E. L. Hulbert?
Mr. CANTWELL. Mr. E. L. Hulbert.
Mr. HURLEY. Is Mr. W. A. Smith, of Houston, Tex., also a director of the company?
Mr. CANTWELL. My recollection, Mr. Hurley, is that Mr. Smith is the secretary of the company. That is my recollection.
Mr. HURLEY. Mr. J. B. Crews, your partner or former partner——
Mr. CANTWELL (interposing). It is T. B. Crews.
Mr. HURLEY. And yourself, Mr. H. J. Cantwell——
Mr. CANTWELL (interposing). Yes, sir.
Mr. HURLEY. That constitutes the board of directors of the company, does it not?
Mr. CANTWELL. Not now, because I resigned as a director for the purpose of giving them the control of the directory in Texas when they might have meetings.
Mr. HURLEY. Do you know whether or not the following-named persons are the principal stockholders of the company: Mr. H. J. Cantwell, Mr. T. B. Crews, both of St. Louis; Mr. Clifford Green, of El Campo, Tex.; Mr. S. L. Hurlbut, of El Campo, Tex.; Mr. H. Masterson, of Houston, Tex.; J. H. Gavenan, of Galveston, Tex.; H. Gavenan, of Galveston, Tex.; L. Bryan, of Houston, Tex.; J. J. Sweeney and W. H. Gill, of Houston, Tex.?
Mr. CANTWELL. That is my recollection, Mr. Hurley. I think all of those gentlemen are stockholders in that company.
Mr. HURLEY. Now, state what connection, if any, Mr. C. B. Molling, or C. B. Molling & Co., of Houston, Tex., has with this company that has all these Mississippi Choctaw contracts.
Mr. CANTWELL. I do not recollect his name. Possibly he may be a stockholder.
Mr. HURLEY. You do not know whether or not he is authorized to sell stocks or shares in the company that is holding these contracts?
Mr. CANTWELL. Mr. Hurley, any man who owns a certificate of stock in a corporation is entitled to sell his own shares. There is not any sold by the company, so far as the company is concerned, but if he has a certificate of stock he can sell it.
Mr. CARTER. Mr. Cantwell, the organization of this company is founded upon——
Mr. CANTWELL (interposing). Whatever fees——
Mr. CARTER (continuing). The value of the contracts?
Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. CARTER. And unless these people are enrolled the stock is valueless?
Mr. CANTWELL. Absolutely.
Mr. CARTER. Then you and your stockholders are in just exactly the same attitude with relation to aiding these people to be enrolled as the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish was in endeavoring to keep the people off the roll?
Mr. CANTWELL. Except that we do not occupy a fiduciary relation—there is no question about that.
Mr. HURLEY. I want to ask you about the statements in this communication. I am reading now from a letter from Mr. C. B. Molling, dated Houston, Tex., June 12, 1911:

"It is estimated that each Indian's share of the estate is worth $8,000. The attorneys' contracts call for 30 per cent of this, or $2,400, of which we are to get one-half, or $1,200. We are organizing a syndicate to take over 1,000 of these contracts at $25 per contract. We will not accept subscriptions for less than 20 contracts, or $500. The estimated value of 20 contracts, if we win, will be approximately $24,000, or a profit of $23,500 upon each $500 invested."

Mr. CANTWELL. I never saw the article nor authorized any such statement as that. I never saw any such letter, and I have no knowledge of any such letter being sent. I can not imagine why it should have been sent or who could have sent it.
Mr. CARTER. For the information of Mr Cantwell I will tell him that the letter was sent to me by a former Congressman, with the suggestion that I had better look into the matter.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BOND. Was this corporation organized before you acquired the contracts or after?
Mr. CANTWELL. That corporation was organized after we acquired quite a number of contracts.
Mr. BOND. The relation of attorney and client exists between you and these Indian claimants, does it not?
Mr. CANTWELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. BOND. How many of these claimants came to you and employed you as an attorney of their own volition?
Mr. CANTWELL. Of our own volition——
Mr. BOND (interposing). How many of them came to you of their own volition?
Mr. CANTWELL. I should say probably 250 or 300.
Mr. BOND. Then, how many——
Mr. CANTWELL (interposing). That I had never heard of before—maybe 500.
Mr. BOND. Did they come to St. Louis and employ you at your office?
Mr. CANTWELL. No, sir; by correspondence.
Mr. BOND. Then how many did you acquire by solicitation or by hiring agents?
Mr. CANTWELL. All the rest of them.

EXHIBIT C.

CONTRACT BETWEEN J. F. M'MURRAY AND R. P. FORD.

This memorandum will show that I, J. F. McMurray, an attorney at law of McAlester, Okla., having made certain contracts with members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians to settle all claims against the United States, including the "leased district," and to represent said tribes in the sale of all remaining tribal property, and desiring the assistance of 30 leading citizens of said tribes to successfully carry out the terms of said contracts and secure to said members the best results in said claims and property, do hereby employ and associate with me in said work, for the purpose of assisting me in carrying out the terms of said contracts and getting the best results from same, 30 members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes.

Each of the parties so employed hereby agrees to devote himself to all work necessary to carry out the terms of said contracts to a successful termination and to hold himself in readiness to carry out any suggestion made by said McMurray not inconsistent with his own personal business.

Said McMurray for a valuable consideration hereby transfers, sets over, and assigns to the said 30 parties hereinafter named one-half of all amounts realized by him out of said contract after paying all expenses connected with the prosecution of said work under the said contracts, and it is hereby agreed that said McMurray's expenses under this contract up to and including the present date is $30,000; said amounts to be paid over to said parties at the time received by said McMurray and divided equally between the parties hereto named.

For and in consideration of said transfer each of said parties hereby pays in cash to said McMurray the sum of $500 and agrees to pay any other sum necessary to carry out the work of said contracts not to exceed $500 for each person.

All parties to this contract hereby sign our names and agree to all the terms mentioned therein this November 19, 1912.

J. F. MCMURRAY.
R. P. FORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment need not lead to any delay and will not lead to any delay, but, on the contrary, will hurry up things by hastening the consideration of pending bills to do justice to the Mississippi Choctaws. It may delay this particular $100-apiece distribution for a few days or a few months, but a separate bill can be introduced. All that is necessary to stop delay upon this matter is for the Senator from Oklahoma and his colleagues in both Houses to stop delaying legislation in behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws.

There is now a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives dealing with a bill introduced by Representative HARRISON, of Mississippi, who represents the Mississippi district in which most of the Mississippi Choctaws reside. That bill is before a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and that bill can be reported out any day whenever that subcommittee is ready, and one of the Oklahoma Representatives is chairman of that subcommittee. We are merely trying to force consideration for our people, and then all of us all together can move to the final distribution and settlement.

Now, if the Senator does not want any delay, let him and his colleague from Oklahoma quit throwing obstructions in the way of legislation in behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws. Independent legislation has been introduced, and it is being delayed and held up, and wherever it is we find that the opposition comes from Oklahoma. It does not come from anywhere else. Oklahoma being peculiarly the Indian State of the Union, it is very natural that she would have immense influence in connection with Indian affairs. She has exerted it. She has overexerted it—overdone it. So much for that.

Now, another thing, Mr. President. The Senator speaks of reopening the rolls. This amendment does not reopen any rolls, except just this far, that this money shall not be distributed until these people have been heard and the opportunity has been given Congress to act upon their case; that is all.

The senior Senator from Oklahoma showed a disposition a moment ago to question what I was saying, because I said this was the first step in a scheme to exhaust the entire funds of the Choctaws and then to throw the burden upon the Treasury of the United States of doing justice to the Mississippi Choctaws.

Here is a bill, H. R. 10066, a House bill introduced by a Representative from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] to do that very thing. It provides that a commission to be known as the Mississippi Choctaw homes commission, to consist of certain parties, be provided to determine those people's rights under the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty, and that said commission shall be assigned interpreters, agents, and so forth, and then that said commission is authorized to select a tract of land in the State of Mississippi.

I stop to wonder if the man who drew this bill up knew how little public land we have left in the State of Mississippi, and how absolutely worthless what little we have left is—land that nobody would have. There is no other sort. But the bill goes on to provide that if not feasible to purchase the same in that State, it may be purchased in any other State in quantity sufficient to give to each Mississippi Choctaw a home of sufficient "acreage and fertility."

Now, mark the close of it. I quote:

That there is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this act, out of any funds of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum for the accomplishment of the purposes of this act.

Mr. President, there is nobody who knows better than the senior Senator from Oklahoma how these people have been treated. I have heard him use words of righteous indignation about it. But the chief difference between a Choctaw in Mississippi and a Choctaw in Oklahoma is that a Choctaw in Mississippi has no vote and a Choctaw in Oklahoma has.

In a brief drawn up and filed some time ago the senior Senator from Oklahoma, representing the Mississippi Choctaws at that time, used this absolutely true language:

It will thus be seen that there was a secret underhand opposition to the Mississippi Choctaws, because it must be remembered that this rule of identification, made by the Dawes Commission on March 10, 1899, and submitted by report to the Secretary of the Interior, was pigeonholed for eight years and then disapproved without notice.

That is the language of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

That is the roll where over 1,100 Mississippi Choctaws went before the Dawes Commission and proved their right to be enrolled, and when that list came up here it was never put on the final rolls of the tribe.

Why not? Mr. President, echo answers, Why? The senior Senator then proceeds in the same brief:

The report declares that the Mississippi Choctaws were poor, ignorant, and helpless.

And they are.

The report referred to is in behalf of the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws. Every word of this is true. The Senator from Oklahoma stated this, but it is true independently of who had stated it:

The report declares that the Mississippi Choctaws were poor, ignorant, and helpless. This report in behalf of the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, signed by the Dawes Commission, was disapproved eight years later by Mr. Secretary Hitchcock, on March 4, 1907, without notice or warning, so that no person upon this roll ever knew for eight years whether he was so far identified as to be entitled to remove as an identified Choctaw, and finally the entire schedule was rejected without notice.

And finally the entire scheme was rejected without notice. There were not only pitfalls in the law, but pitfalls in the administration of the law. Eleven hundred of them were found to be entitled to go upon the rolls, were kept eight years without notice, and then finally cut out because they did not move in time.

It is the senior Senator from Oklahoma who said all that.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Oklahoma says that I place these people's case, and that it rests, entirely upon consanguinity. I did not. I placed it partially upon that ground and partially upon the ground of the solemn word of a solemn treaty, which in express language says that they shall have "the privileges of citizens of the Choctaw Nation." The claim rests upon both grounds. But if it had rested only on either ground, it would have been a sufficient foundation.

The Senator speaks of the claims attorneys who would get in their bloody work. I do not doubt it. They have already gotten it in on all the tribes in Oklahoma, and I expect if these people of mine get any chances at all these Indian claims lawyers will try to get the lion's share of it.

But that is easily enough cured, and nobody knows it better than th Senator. In the act of 1902 there was a clause, and I will come to it after a minute——

Mr. OWEN. Of 1900.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of 1902.

Mr. OWEN. Of 1900, I think.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was one in 1902 providing that these lands, which at that time were to be distributed in severalty, should go without charge of any description flowing out of mortgage, deed, or contract. You can cut out these scoundrels very easily. What do we do every day in connection with pension claims? We prescribe just how much the lawyer shall get. We do not leave him to deal with necessitous, ignorant people, and by unconscionable bargaining to rob them. Nor ought it to be done here.

Unless my recollection is at fault it was at my instance that the clause in the law of 1902 was placed there, because I knew that the thing that is going on now was going on then, because these Choctaws had been writing to me from that part of the State of Mississippi in which they dwelt, or having others write me for them, asking me about entering into contracts to give the Cotton Development Co., and firms of lawyers here and there, 50 per cent or other outrageous proportions of their lands, in case they succeeded, and I wrote to the poor people every day, and I said, "You do not need any lawyer at all. If I can save you I can save you, and if I can not I can not; but you do not need a lawyer now, at any rate. You may need a lawyer later in your country, but not here. Wait until we put upon the statute books the law that gives you an undoubted right, and then there will be time enough to employ a lawyer if your claim is disputed; and a lawyer in Oklahoma," or in the Indian Territory, as it then was. In spite of that, these poor, helpless, ignorant people nearly all went on and signed thousands of these unconscionable contracts. That is not all. The Indians in Oklahoma did it, too. It is easy enough to stop it if anybody wants to stop it. I believe here is that clause I referred to in the law of 1902. Yes; here it is:

Lands allotted to members and freedmen shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated under this act.

That is the language there and we can put it in any law when all have had a chance to be heard and all is ready to be closed up with justice to all, and I shall be more than pleased to see it done. I think if there is anything in the world I dislike more than another—I had almost said "hate," but I do not believe I hate anybody longer than 24 hours—but if there is anything I dislike more than another it is one of these galloping-around lawyers with agents getting illiterate people to sign up contracts of useless employment on contingent fees in order that he may live upon their sweat. The Senator from Oklahoma can not outdo me in stopping that. So all he said in that connection goes for naught in this discussion.

The junior Senator from Oklahoma gave the number of Indians who are on those rolls. He is mistaken in the number. The Commissioner of the Indian Office says in a report to the House, in discussing the Mississippi Choctaws:

The total number of persons—

Now, I ask the Senator from Oklahoma to mark the language—

The total number of persons entitled as Mississippi Choctaws was 2,534, but only 1,445 were finally enrolled.

The Senator's colleague can tell him how that happened. The rolls containing their names were pigeonholed, lost for eight years, and in spite of all that we are not disposed to do them justice.

I have already called your attention to the bill which was introduced by one of the Representatives from Oklahoma, Mr. MURRAY. There is another man from Oklahoma in the House of Representatives that I love very much for very many reasons. He would not do anything that he thought was wrong. I suppose he thinks he is representing the interests of his constituents, and many think provided they are representing their constituents that everything is all right. He was asked if he had not introduced a bill of this sort. I see him before me. He said:

Mr. CARTER. No. I introduced a bill directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the condition of the Mississippi Choctaws, with a view of seeing if it was practicable and just for the Federal Government to provide homes for them on the public domain.

That is exactly the Murray bill. He goes on, however, to say that whatever glory he may have had in that respect it was taken away from him by one of my colleagues in the other House, who introduced the same bill in his own name.

The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has to-day made the argument that whatever wrongs these people have suffered, they ought to be indemnified for out of the United States Treasury. Well, I answer that by saying if they are not entitled to rights as Choctaws they have not any rights at all. I fear that if they have no rights as Choctaws growing out of their citizenship in the Choctaw Nation and as coparceners with the Choctaws in Oklahoma before the tribal relations were abolished, then they have no rights of any description.

I am inclined to agree with the Senator's colleague [Mr. OWEN] about that; but suppose the junior Senator from Oklahoma is right, that the Mississippi Choctaws have rights against both the Choctaw Nation and the United States Government, what justice is there in making the white people of the United States pay because they did not receive their rights as Choctaws?

That is not all, Mr. President. Drawing a picture a while ago of how these people have been treated, I forgot something that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate. My colleague in the other House [Mr. HARRISON], representing the district in which most of these Choctaws live, during the debate in the House said:

You and your colleagues from Oklahoma would go into the Treasury of this country and take out the money to give to the Mississippi Choctaws, while I would give it to them out of the funds of the tribe. I make that statement for this reason, in part, because in 1881, I think it was, the Oklahoma Choctaw Indians sued the United States for moneys due the tribe they left back in Mississippi about 1831.

What he meant, of course, was the citizens of the tribe left back there in Mississippi:

They based their suit—

Now listen to this, Senators—

They based their suit on injuries done to the Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi and not to the Choctaws that had moved out into Oklahoma. The suit went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and an $8,000,000 verdict was rendered in favor of the Choctaws in Oklahoma.

On account of the injuries done to the Choctaws in Mississippi remember—

That went into the funds of the tribe. It is there now, less the expense incurred in that piece of litigation, and is it right—to saddle upon the Government of the United States and upon the Treasury the payment of this money when the Oklahoma Choctaws got that money in that way—

He said—

About $8,000,000 of it—and it is now in the funds of the tribe?

He goes on:

The Mississippi Choctaws that I have pleaded for in the bill that I have introduced have never received one cent of that money that is now in the coffers of the funds of the Choctaw Nation. And I want to say it will be a living compliment to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH], who were on the Indian Affairs Committee in this House in the Sixty-second Congress that they went into exhaustive hearings on this question in considering my bill, and they reported unanimously.

Note "unanimously," Mr. President.

There was not a single Representative from Oklahoma on the subcommittee, you see, hence no opposition in a so patently just a case, and so they reported unanimously in favor of reopening the rolls in order to give, and to the extent of giving, the Mississippi Choctaws some of these rights for which I plead here and Representative HARRISON pleaded then.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question, merely for information?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question for information, so that I may know how to vote on this proposition. As I understand the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi the Choctaws in Oklahoma got $8,000,000 for damages done to and claims made in behalf of the Choctaws in Mississippi, and they do not want to pay damages to the people who were injured?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That particular transaction is not at issue in this amendment of mine; but I am reciting it merely as a specimen of the manner in which the Mississippi Choctaws have been dealt with. They got $8,000,000 out of the United States, put it into the fund out in Oklahoma, and the poor Mississippi Choctaws I reckon never knew, most of them, that any suit had been carried on in their behalf. This is a new thing to me. I find it in a speech made by my colleague [Mr. HARRISON] in the House of Representatives. I knew of a great many mean things that had been done to these Indians, but I did not know until this morning that they had been treated quite as meanly as this.

Mr. OWEN. I do not believe the Senator from Mississippi wants to misstate the matter, of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, certainly not; not voluntarily.

Mr. OWEN. No. The amount of the judgment to which the Senator refers was less than $3,000,000, to start in with; but while it is true that it related to various citizens, people who might have been called Mississippi Choctaws, Murray & Vroom found that there were 4,100 of those people, and the muster rolls showed that 3,400 removed from Mississippi to the Indian Territory, and afterwards that there were over 700 more who removed. So that more than the number that Murray & Vroom found have since that time been transferred to Oklahoma. It is only because of the increase of population that there are any remaining at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the 4,000 Mississippi Choctaws who went to Oklahoma went, according to the statement of the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], prior to 1855, and therefore, of course, this matter of 1881 did not relate to them.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It did? Well, how much of it did the Mississippi Choctaws of Mississippi ever get?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did they get a red cent?

Mr. OWEN. They got all they were entitled to, I suppose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, now, do not suppose it. I presume my colleague in the other House looked into it, and he is a mighty careful man. As a fact, not a Mississippi Choctaw in Mississippi ever got a cent. If any Mississippi Choctaws got anything, it was the so-called "Mississippi Choctaws" who were living in Oklahoma and had been living there, or in what we used to call the Indian Territory, probably ever since 1855 and 1856.

Mr. GORE. That claim originated or was first preferred, I think, in 1858 or 1859. In fact, the Senate once adjudicated the claim.

Mr. OWEN. In 1855.

Mr. GORE. The Senate adjudicated the claim in 1859 or 1860.

Mr. OWEN. It was under the treaty of 1855.

Mr. GORE. When the Senate rendered its award?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. GORE. And I think that related to lands which the Choctaws had transferred to the Government in Mississippi, the final payment, as I understand, for them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have never read the case.

Mr. OWEN. It has no bearing on this matter, however.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has this bearing upon it: It is a part of the general scheme; it was just what the Senator said in that brief. It is a proof of the insidious or "underhand" influence that has been operating all the time, as the senior Senator from Oklahoma has so well said, to rob the Mississippi Choctaws; it is a part of it. This is one of those cases where you can not make out very much of a legal case by a statute, but where, as a justice of the peace once said, "The statute itself air rotten"; and where Congress, being honest, just, and right, ought to remedy the deficiencies of the statute. That is what I am trying to have done.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this is not really a very involved matter. The United States in 1820 undertook to get the Choctaws to remove from Mississippi to the Indian Territory, and made a treaty with them of that date. Afterwards the United States made another treaty in 1830, inviting them again to remove. There were quite a good many Mississippi Choctaws then living in Mississippi who were not willing to go to Indian Territory, but their chief, Greenwood Le Flore, who negotiated the treaty of 1830, agreed with the Government that if the fourteenth article were introduced in that treaty the treaty would be made. The fourteenth article was introduced in the treaty. It provided that the head of a family might have 640 acres of land in Mississippi and other members of his family 320 acres and 160 acres by age. It provided also that those Indians refusing to go West might become citizens of the State of Mississippi, and they remained there with the understanding that they would be citizens of Mississippi; but it was provided that if they desired to remain they should not lose the right of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever removed they should not have any right to the Choctaw annuities.

The question as to the meaning of this language was passed on by the United States court. I read a few moments ago from Judge Clayton's decision of 1897, but I will just quote a few words more from his decision, showing that this very fourteenth article was definitely passed upon by this court of competent and special jurisdiction. He gives the reasons at considerable length which led to that decision; and the decision is substantially just, because if a people desire to be members of a community, obviously they ought to be willing to make themselves a part of the community by living with the community.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the Senator goes on, if I understood him a moment ago——

Mr. OWEN. I wish the Senator would let me finish my argument; I am not going to occupy over 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But in connection with the fourteenth article, I want to read that language, because the Senator, if I understood him, is mistaken about it.

Mr. OWEN. Very well, let the Senator read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator says that if they removed, they were not to lose the rights of Choctaw citizenship. On the contrary, it says:

If they reside upon said lands, intending to become citizens of the States—

They would not reside there after they were removed, of course——

Mr. OWEN. I wish the Senator would read the section.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am reading it—

If they reside upon said lands, intending to become citizens of the States for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue; said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family, or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article—

Which I have just read—shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove—

"But if they ever remove"— are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

That is where the annuity comes in.

Mr. OWEN. I can state this case in five minutes, if I am permitted to do so. It is perfectly simple and easy. The Government tried to get these people to move west in 1820. They tried again to get them to move west in 1830; but there was a certain portion of them who would not move, and the fourteenth article of the treaty of that year, just read by the Senator from Mississippi, was construed by Judge Clayton, the United States district judge having authority from Congress on this very matter. In rendering his decision he said:

To permit men with, perchance, but a strain of Choctaw blood in their veins, who 65 years ago broke away from their kindred and their nation and during that time, or most of it, have been exercising the rights of citizenship and doing homage to the sovereignty of another nation, who have borne none of the burdens of this nation and have become strangers to the people, to reach forth their hands from their distant and alien home and lay hold of a part of the public domain, the common property of the people, and appropriate to their own use, would be unjust and inequitable.

It is therefore the opinion of the court that absent Mississippi Choctaws are not entitled to be enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation.

During the various years from 1820 to 1830 and thereafter the Government tried to get these people to remove. The Senator from Mississippi justly stated that the agent, Ward, did not make the proper register of the fourteenth-article claimants; he made no adequate register at all, but Murray and Vroom were sent there by the Government of the United States immediately afterwards to remedy Ward's neglect, and they registered 4,100 of these people, giving each of them certain scrip entitling them to land. The western Choctaws got no scrip.

Mr. WHITE. When was that?

Mr. OWEN. That was between 1842 and 1855, when this distribution was made, and a great many of these Mississippi Choctaws then moved to the Indian Territory. The muster rolls of the Indian Office show that 3,400 out of the 4,100 registered by Murray & Vroom moved to the Indian Territory; afterwards over 700 more moved; so that ultimately the total number of those who moved, according to the muster rolls, was shown to be 4,128.

The western Choctaws from time to time passed resolutions inviting the Mississippi Choctaws to come to the Indian Territory. From 1830 to 1889, before the tribal government was broken up by the United States, the Choctaws desired to enlarge their number; they wanted to be of more consequence as a nation; they were not then jealous of the disposition of their property, and they therefore repeatedly invited the Mississippi Choctaws to join them, and even as late as 1889 they memorialized the Government of the United States and asked the Government to help to move the Mississippi Choctaws.

When the United States determined to break up the tribal government in 1893, it sent out the Dawes Commission, headed by Senator Dawes. That was in 1893—21 years ago. The Government thereafter, in 1906, passed an act directing the Dawes Commission to make up these rolls. I have the law here, and it will only take a moment to read it, and I should like to call the attention of the Senate to it. The Dawes Commission were instructed in 1896 as follows:

That the said commission, after the expiration of six months, shall cause a complete roll of citizenship of each of said nations to be made up from their records, and add thereto the names of citizens whose right may be conferred under this act, and said rolls shall be and are hereby made rolls of citizenship of said nations or tribes, subject, however, to the determination of the United States courts as provided herein.

That was in 1896—18 years ago—and attorneys have been trying to get the Mississippi Choctaws on the rolls every since. Many were enrolled prior to 1907 on the final rolls who moved to and established residence in the Indian Territory or Oklahoma.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Did the act creating the Dawes Commission make any reference to the Mississippi Choctaws at all?

Mr. OWEN. I was going to explain that. Immediately afterwards, in 1897, the Dawes Commission were instructed to pass upon the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws, and they made a report in 1897 taking the same view of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 that was taken by Judge Clayton in his decision. Judge Clayton's opinion of the Mississippi Choctaw case went to the United States Supreme Court in the so-called Stephens case, and the court held broadly that the decisions of the lower courts were final under the terms of the act, and therefore that the decision rendered by Judge Clayton was final.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, that they had no jurisdiction.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; they had no jurisdiction to set that decision aside. The Supreme Court had jurisdiction to declare Clayton's decision final, and did so. The Dawes Commission, in an independent statement which they sent to Congress, made the same declaration as that made by Judge Clayton. They were a tribunal expressly authorized by Congress to declare the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. I will not pause to read that decision; it is to the same effect as Judge Clayton's opinion, and is based upon common sense, because the Mississippi Choctaws had voluntarily, deliberately, and willfully separated themselves from the other members of the nation because they refused to move in 1830.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. Were they not treated with up to that time as a tribe, and by this severance were not the tribal relations destroyed?

Mr. OWEN. Well, they were to the extent that they took up citizenship in Mississippi.

Mr. WHITE. Were not these Indians treated with by the National Government as a tribe rather than as individuals?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; they were treated with as a tribe, with certain expressed exceptions. The treaty made with the tribe dealt with individuals by the grant in the tribal agreements of certain individual rights; for instance, they gave the chiefs certain particular lands and certain particular rights.

Mr. WHITE. That was simply a grant of land in severalty.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is what that was.

Mr. WHITE. Did they treat with them as individuals at all?

Mr. OWEN. No; they did not. Only with them as a tribe.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The treaty expressly said that the Mississippi Choctaws were to be treated as citizens of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. OWEN. The Indians unwilling to go West were so numerous and powerful that Greenwood Le Flore, representing them, said that the treaty could not be made without their consent and that their consent could only be obtained by putting in the fourteenth article.

Mr. WHITE. That gave them the right to take land in severalty in Mississippi.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it did.

Mr. WHITE. And they took it.

Mr. OWEN. They took it, they sold it, and enjoyed the benefits of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It not only gave them the right to take lands in severalty, but it also recognized their citizenship in the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. OWEN. I have already called attention to that language.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator from Alabama did not understand it.

Mr. OWEN. The United States court and the Dawes Commission, which was appointed by Congress as a special tribunal to pass on the matter, both held that unless the Mississippi Choctaws had removed they were not entitled to citizenship.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to have a little elucidation of the statement that there went into the treasury of the Choctaws in Oklahoma $8,000,000 on account of the injury done the Choctaws in Mississippi.

Mr. OWEN. Not one dollar went into the treasury of the Choctaws in Oklahoma on any such account—not one cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Where did it go?

Mr. OWEN. The records, of course, show it went to the individual claimants and in expenses. The Mississippi Choctaws who in 1830 refused to move were invited time after time up to 1889 by the western Choctaws to come West; and after 1889, when the United States negotiated an agreement with these people in 1897–98 and in 1901–2, there were a series of agreements, the final agreement being in 1902.

Mr. WHITE. Was not the real consideration of the agreement between the Government and the Choctaws and Chickasaws the removal of the Indians from Mississippi to Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; but an exception was made in the interest of those who wanted to remain in Mississippi.

Mr. WHITE. That was a grant of land in severalty, was it not?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it was a grant in severalty, of 640 acres to each adult, 320 acres to children over 10 years, and 160 acres to children under 10 years. In the so-called Curtis Act of 1898, it was provided that no person claiming to be an Indian should be recognized as an Indian belonging to the Five Tribes unless he had previously to that time moved into the tribe where he claimed citizenship and established bona fide residence. That was obviously necessary for the protection of the Choctaw Indians against tens of thousands of people who had a trace of Indian blood and who would otherwise claim to be Indians in order to enjoy the rights of citizenship. That was the long-debated, well-considered Curtis Act of June 28, 1898. The Mississippi Choctaws had an exception made in their favor, that if they moved before the completion of the final rolls—March 4, 1907—they might nevertheless be entitled to the rights of citizenship. So they had from that time, June 28, 1898, until March 4, 1907, nine years in which to move, but the Indians, for whom this eloquent plea is being made, did not avail themselves of it. It is stated in their behalf that they were poor and did not have the means to remove, but they had nine years at least in which to move, if they wanted to move, and, since they walk from one end of Mississippi to the other without the slightest difficulty, if they were really anxious to go they could just as well have easily walked to Oklahoma without any more trouble.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And we appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of assisting them in removing.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; the Government appropriated $20,000 to help move them, and many private individuals provided them money in the hope of renting lands from them—in the hope of getting a fee out of them, in all sorts of ways—so that finally there were a good many who moved—nearly 2,000. When the Dawes Commission reported that they were not entitled to enjoy the benefits of citizenship unless they did move, Congress instructed the Dawes Commission to identify the people who had a right to move, and they tried to do so. They went down to Mississippi and found that the Choctaws there had kept no family records; that they had not kept the patronymic names; but each man had a Choctaw name and each woman had a Choctaw name, and these names were so confused that persons who claimed to have the right to be called Mississippi Choctaws and descendants of fourteenth-article claimants could not prove, in the first place, that their fathers were enrolled by Murray & Vroom or by Ward; and they could not prove, in the second place, that they were the lineal descendants of such persons; and the Dawes Commission therefore made their report, and said:

> We find that they can not do this, and therefore we have done the best we could; and we here submit a roll of 1,900 people whom we think are of Indian blood.

That country was full of runners going out and telling the Indians to "come in and be enrolled, because you have got a chance to be admitted to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation, and it is of great value to you." As the Senator from Mississippi says, there were a lot of attorneys urging these people to come forward and be enrolled, and 1,900 of them were enrolled.

Mr. WHITE. The lawyers were trying mainly to enroll them, were they not?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; the lawyers were trying to get fees out of it, and therefore they were strenuously trying to get all these people enrolled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The report of the Indian Bureau shows that 1,440 were enrolled.

Mr. OWEN. That is wrong, because there were over 1,900. I know better than the alleged report. I know what the true report is. There were over 1,900. The Secretary of the Interior refused to enroll them, however, because he said the report of the Dawes Commission acknowledged on its face that there was no evidence that justified it; that it was only guesswork. They might have been of Creek origin; they hight have been of any of the tribes of the Mobile Basin. There are a good many Indian tribes there. They might have been Choctaws, descendants of nineteenth-article Choctaws; they might not have been Choctaws; they might have been Chickasaws. They speak the same language, practically.

So these poor people were in a very weak position. They were not able to furnish the necessary proof, and I sympathized with them; but when the Choctaws and Chickasaws came to make the final agreement of 1902 they said to the United States: "We will agree to waive this legal evidence as to those who are full-blood Indians of Choctaw blood, waive the fact that they may be nineteenth-article claimants and all other doubts, provided they will move within six months and establish bona fide residence in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country." Under sections 41, 42, 43, and 44 of the Choctaw agreement of 1902 there were 1,642 of these Indians recorded as citizens of the Choctaw Nation, and they are now on those rolls and enjoying all the rights of other citizens of the Choctaw Nation, regardless of the fact that they could not prove themselves descendants of the fourteenth-article claimants or that their ancestors had ever been recognized as entitled under the fourteenth article. Murray & Vroom reported 4,100 of these Indians entitled under the fourteenth article, and 4,128 moved west before 1889. The recent list shows 1,642 additional names put upon that roll, making nearly 6,000 of these Indians on the Choctaw rolls west under color of the fourteenth article.

Now, nobody pretends that any Mississippi Choctaw who, after all of this urging from 1830 down to this date of 1907, has refused to remove, or has not removed for any reason, has a legal right to citizenship; but the time has come when it can not be asserted justly, I think, that he has any real moral right, because the Government has been inviting him to remove since 1830, and obviously the promise to the Choctaws and Chickasaws west that they should have a distribution of their lands and of their property and that the money should be paid to them individually can not be carried out until you fix a common denominator. You must know how many people there are to whom this land and property shall be distributed.

The Government, therefore, having authorized the Dawes Commission in 1896, 18 years ago, to make up these rolls, and the Dawes Commission having spent 10 years making the rolls, the Congress of the United States finally, in 1906, passed an act declaring that no one should be put upon these rolls after March 4, 1907. I want to call the attention of the Senate to that law:

> Provided, That the rolls of the tribes affected by this act—
> That is, the Five Tribes—
> shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907; and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after that date.

It has been claimed that some of these people who had been agitating a claim for citizenship during the preceding 10 years were not given the right of appeal to the Secretary of the Interior at the last minute of March 4, 1907, that they came up too late. To meet that claim the Interior Department made a careful investigation and has reported about three or four hundred people who seemed to be equitably entitled to enrollment. The Oklahoma delegation has requested that those people be enrolled, and a provision has been put upon this bill providing for their enrollment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator a question there. Does that number embrace the 1,100 and some odd Mississippi Choctaws of whom the Senator spoke, whose claims have been sent up here, who were enrolled by the Dawes Commission, and their enrollment pigeonholed here?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is confusing the report of the Dawes Commission of 1898, which was presented without evidence, and which was entirely rejected. A large number of people on that rejected list were enrolled afterwards as full-blood Choctaws and are on the rolls and are in Oklahoma now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The 1,100 to whom the Senator refers?

Mr. OWEN. There is no such roll as the 1,100 roll. The Senator will have to look that up, because there is no such roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I read just a moment ago a part of the Senator's brief, in which he mentioned, I think, 1,100.

Mr. OWEN. There were about 1,900 in the schedule of March 10, 1898.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the Senator said, in that brief, 1,100; but whatever the number is, they are not recommended to be put upon the roll now, are they, by the committee?

Mr. OWEN. A large number of them are included in the 1,642 I have just mentioned, who were put on the final rolls of 1907.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator remember how many?

Mr. OWEN. I do not remember just the number; I suppose something over a thousand. That is just a broad guess.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not know that any were.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; there were large numbers; all of those who were willing to remove and comply with the conditions and who were full bloods.

The question of moral right comes down to this: Have these Mississippi Choctaws, even if they are full-blood Indians, who were unable to prove that they are descendants of the fourteenth-article claimants—because it must be remembered that the descendants from the nineteenth-article claimants of the Mississippi Choctaws are not entitled; it is only the descendants of the fourteenth-article claimants that could by any possibility claim—have persons of the full Choctaw blood who have been invited from 1830 down to 1907 to remove, and who have refused or evaded or not cared to remove, a right now to say that the obligations of the United States, entered into nearly 20 years ago, with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, west, for the distribution of their property, shall not be carried out until they are put upon the roll? Have they a moral right to make that claim?

I think they have not. I think they have neither a moral right nor a legal right.

I ask permission to print, at the end of my speech, a brief statement on this subject by the attorneys of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, west.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oklahoma will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE ALLEGED CLAIM OF MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS TO CHOCTAW CITIZENSHIP.

A group of attorneys with large contingent fees are pressing the alleged claim of alleged Mississippi Choctaws to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation and vigorously lobbying in their interest.

This case is simple and easy to understand.

Every person entitled as a Mississippi Choctaw has been enrolled by the Dawes Commission, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and the matter was settled conclusively and finally by act of Congress with the approval of the President of the United States as of March 4, 1907. (Stats., 1907.)

By the treaty of 1830, article 3, the Choctaws agreed to remove to the Choctaw country west. (7 Stat. L., 335.)

By article 14 certain Choctaws reserved for themselves the privilege of becoming citizens of Mississippi without relinquishing the right to remove to the Choctaw Nation west and thereby acquire citizenship in the Choctaw Nation (7 Stat. L., 335.)

The number of the fourteenth article claimants was determined by Murray and Vroom under act of Congress of August 23, 1842. (5 Stats., 513.) They ascertained the number amounted to 1,153 adults, and including their children amounted to 3,885, and 143 families who received patents, making a total of about 4,110 persons. (See H. Doc. 898, 61st Cong., 2d sess.)

The emigration between 1838 and 1855, shown by the muster rolls of emigrating Choctaws in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, shows that more than 3,400 Choctaws removed to the Indian Territory and that they were paid for the land relinquished by them under the fourteenth article and were paid in the Choctaw Nation west. (See Muster Rolls, Indian Office, by Douglas Cooper, U. S. Indian agent.)

Many of the 700 remaining Choctaws subsequently emigrated, leaving very few, if any, fourteenth-article claimants. Some of the Mississippi Choctaws having gone west and exhausted their right to remove under the fourteenth article, moved back and intermingled with other Indians of Creek, Chickasaw, and of other bloods, so it is no longer possible to tell what the blood is. Some are mixed with negro and white blood.

Up to 1889 the Choctaws west freely admitted to citizenship those whom they knew to be of Choctaw blood and who actually complied with the condition of bona fide residence. On March 4, 1890, Congress sent the Dawes Commission to negotiate agreements for winding up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

On October 16, 1895, the General Council of the Choctaw Nation passed a general law requiring all persons claiming the right to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation west to file their petitions on or before November 15, 1895, or be forever barred. (Laws of the Choctaw Nation, session 1895 and 1896.) This law was obligatory upon the United States officers subsequently charged with perfecting those rolls under act of Congress June 10, 1896, requiring the Dawes Commission to recognize the tribal law. (See 29 Stat. L., p. 321; see also Eastern Band of Cherokees v. United States, 117 U. S., 288.)

In 1897 Congress passed an act authorizing the purging of the rolls.

In 1898 the Curtis Act was passed, providing for abolishing of tribal governments, subdividing the tribal land, completing the rolls, with the following provision:

"No person shall be enrolled who has not heretofore removed and in good faith settled in the nation in which he claims citizenship: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to militate against any rights or privileges which the Mississippi Choctaws may have under the laws of or treaties with the United States."

Congress thus recognized the general principle that prior residence was essential to citizenship (reserving the status of the Mississippi Choctaws temporarily pending adjustment), and this rule has been rigidly enforced by both the tribal and Federal authorities, to wit, that no person should be enrolled who had not satisfactorily established residence prior to the grant of citizenship.

In July, 1896, Jack Amos and 97 other Mississippi Choctaws appealed to the Dawes Commission for enrollment as Choctaw citizens of the full blood residing in Mississippi. On December 1, 1896, the Dawes Commission rejected the claim of Jack Amos and other Mississippi Choctaws by blood, on the ground that they were not residents of the Choctaw country west. This decision was appealed to the United States district court for the central district of Indian Territory, and the court sustained the Dawes Commission in an elaborate opinion entitled "Jack Amos v. The Choctaw Nation" (Rept. of Commission to Five Civilized Tribes, 1899, p. 92), in which Judge Clayton held as follows:

"Adopting these rules in the interpretation of article 14 of the treaty of 1830, I arrived at the conclusion that the 'privilege of a Choctaw citizen' was the right to renounce his allegiance to the Commonwealth of Mississippi, move upon the land conveyed to him and to his people, and there, the only spot upon earth where he could do so, renew his relations with his people and enjoy all the privileges of a Choctaw citizen, except to participate in the annuities."

He held, in effect, that those who had not so removed were barred by failure to remove.

This decision of Judge Clayton was virtually affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, which held that the act of Congress gave final jurisdiction to the district court and that the act itself was constitutional. (See Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S. Rep., p. 445.) In the Supreme Court of the United States the matter was expressly argued in the case of Emma Nabors and others, appellants, against the Choctaw Nation, appellee, at the same time with the Stephens case, October term, 1898.

Notwithstanding this decision by the Dawes Commission, subsequently affirmed by the United States district court and the Supreme Court of the United States, the attorneys of the Mississippi Choctaws, having a large contingent fee, urged upon Congress to authorize the Dawes Commission to make a special finding, and in the Senate, on February 26, 1897 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2337), it was provided by an amendment of the Indian appropriation bill, as follows:

"That the commission appointed to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory shall examine and report to Congress whether the Mississippi Choctaws, under their treaty, are not entitled to all the rights of Choctaw citizenship except an interest in the Choctaw annuities." (30 Stats. L., 83.)

Thereupon the Dawes Commission rendered their decision, and held (H. Doc. 274, 55th Cong., 2d sess., Feb. 2, 1898) that the Mississippi Choctaws had "the right at any time to remove to the Indian Territory and, joining their brethren there, claim participation in all the privileges of Choctaw citizens save participation in their annuities; still, if any person presents himself, claiming this right, he must be required by some tribunal to prove the fact that he is a descendant of some one of those Indians who originally availed themselves of and conformed themselves to the requirements of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830."

On June 28, 1898, Congress directed the Dawes Commission "to determine the identity of Choctaw Indians claiming rights in the Choctaw lands under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830," and to report to the Secretary of the Interior.

The Dawes Commission made its report on identification, March 10, 1899, using the following language:

"The commission therefore, finding it impossible to trace the full-blood Choctaws now residing in the State of Mississippi bearing an English name with any degree of certainty to his ancestors bearing Indian names, and to establish the fact that such ancestors performed the duty of signifying to the United States agent within the limited period their intention and desire to remain and become citizens of the States, has believed it to be its duty to report the names of all full-blood Choctaw Indians who might appear before it in said State for identification as Mississippi Choctaws, and it accordingly makes such report, having taken the names and identification of each of such persons and prepared a schedule of them from the data obtained by the commission recently within said State, which schedule accompanies this report as a part hereof."

The commission further stated (report of Dawes Commission, 1899, p. 78, last paragraph):

"It is impossible to trace descendants now bearing English names to ancestors bearing Indian names, upon whom was imposed the duty of complying with the treaty at that time, and to connect persons now living with the fulfillment of the requirements of the provisions of article 14 of said treaty."

The Secretary of the Interior declined to approve this work, based upon the confessed lack of evidence, and subsequently disapproved this schedule, which contained, in fact, the names of many who were confessedly not full bloods.

Congress, on May 31, 1900, enacted the following:

"Provided, That any Mississippi Choctaw duly identified as such by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes shall have the right at any time prior to the approval of the final rolls of the Choctaws and Chickasaws by the Secretary of the Interior to make settlement within the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, and on proof of the fact of bona fide settlement may be enrolled by such United States commission and by the Secretary of the Interior as Choctaws entitled to allotment." (31 Stat L., 221.)

No person claiming citizenship in the Cherokee Tribe, in the Creek Tribe, in the Seminole Tribe who had not, previous to the Curtis Act of June 28, 1898, established bona fide residence was admitted citizenship, but in the case of the Mississippi Choctaws the extraordinary opportunity was given them on May 31, 1900, to remove to the Choctaw country and establish residence and duly identify themselves until an additional right was granted them under the Choctaw supplemental agreement, with the consent of the Choctaws and Chickasaws of July 1, 1902, which waived legal proof of the identification, but upon certain specified conditions.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws who owned the Choctaw and Chickasaw country west adjusted this whole controversy with the United States by sections 41, 42, 43, and 44, in which the Choctaws and Chickasaws waived their right to demand legal proof of compliance with the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 by any person claiming citizenship under that article, and waived the proof further required by a descendant of such person that he should demonstrate by legal proof his lineal descent from such ancestor who had so complied with the fourteenth article.

It must be remembered the Dawes Commission held explicitly that the claimants under the fourteenth article could not furnish this proof.

Except for this great generosity on the part of the Choctaws and Chickasaws in waiving proof of descent from a fourteenth article claimant, practically none of these claimants could have been enrolled. As it was, it was agreed by section 41 that all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of the full or mixed blood, who received a patent of land under the said fourteenth article of the said treaty of 1830, who had not removed to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, should be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws entitled to admission as citizens of the Choctaw Nation, on the express condition, however, that they should within a limited time remove to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country and establish and maintain bona fide residence.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws bought their peace by this concession, waiving their right to demand legal evidence on the part of such persons and thus ended a strenuous contest of six years with the attorneys of the Mississippi Choctaws. This settlement was confirmed by Congress July 1, 1902, as a final settlement of this controversy, now 12 years ago.

An organized lobby is now engaged under large contingent fees trying to tear down the settlement of this controversy of 1902 by appealing to Members of Congress from Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana, in which some persons who claim to have Choctaw blood still reside.

The Choctaws in 1897 agreed with the United States to wind up their tribal affairs, and the United States pledged them a prompt settlement, a distribution of their lands, and a division of the proceeds derived from the sale of the residue. The Choctaw-Chickasaw rolls and the rolls of the Five Tribes were finally closed by Congress April 26, 1906, as of March 4, 1907—over seven years ago. Every Choctaw and Chickasaw has received his allotment, and a large part of the residue has been sold. It is now over 15 years since Congress agreed with the Choctaws and Chickasaws to make this distribution, and the lobby representing the Mississippi Choctaws are now urging Congress to hold up the distribution of this property as a means of extorting from the Choctaws and Chickasaws further concessions, and they openly threaten the representatives of the Choctaws and Chickasaws with their power to prevent action by Congress in distributing this property unless the representatives of the Choctaws and Chickasaws will make further concessions to them.

Respectfully submitted.

P. J. HURLEY,
Attorney for the Choctaw Nation.
REFORD BOND,
Attorney for the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I call for a vote on the pending question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Page	Thomas
Borah	Hollis	Pittman	Thornton
Brady	Jones	Robinson	Tillman
Bristow	Lane	Shafroth	Townsend
Bryan	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Vardaman
Camden	McCumber	Shively	Warren
Catron	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	West
Chamberlain	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.	White
Clapp	Myers	Smoot	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Norris	Sterling
Dillingham	Owen	Swanson

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] on official business, and his pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. SHIVELY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KERN] on important business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent on official business, and that he is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary proceeded to call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, as it is quite obvious that we shall not have a quorum before 5 o'clock, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ASHURST. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made upon the last roll call of my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but under its terms I have a right to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 2, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—2.

	Bristow	Vardaman

NAYS—48.

Ashurst	Gore	Page	Stone
Borah	Hollis	Pittman	Sutherland
Brady	Hughes	Ransdell	Swanson
Bryan	Jones	Robinson	Thomas
Catron	Lane	Shafroth	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Thornton
Chilton	McCumber	Shively	Tillman
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Md.	West
Dillingham	Norris	Smoot	White
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Sterling	Williams

NOT VOTING—46.

Bankhead	Goff	McLean	Saulsbury
Brandegee	Gronna	Martin, Va.	Sherman
Burleigh	Hitchcock	Newlands	Shields
Burton	James	Oliver	Simmons
Camden	Johnson	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Kern	Penrose	Stephenson
Crawford	La Follette	Perkins	Walsh
Culberson	Lea, Tenn.	Poindexter	Weeks
du Pont	Lewis	Pomerene	Works
Fall	Lippitt	Reed
Gallinger	Lodge	Root

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call having disclosed the presence of a quorum, the question is——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to make just one statement in explanation of the judgment referred to by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

In the case of the Choctaw Nation against The United States he referred to the judgment as aggregating $8,000,000. It is true that the gross finding aggregated $8,000,000, but there were countercharges and deductions for expenses of the removal of Indians, and so forth, aggregating $5,000,000. The net judgment was $2,985,000. Of that, $417,000 went to 191 families of Mississippi Choctaws who did not receive lands, but who subsequently removed to the Indian Territory.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the amendment of the committee. All in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [After a pause.]

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to move to table the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If that is the purpose, the Chair will be compelled to rule that it is too late now.

Mr. OWEN. I do not insist upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those opposed to the amendment to the amendment will say "no." [After a pause.] The Chair is unable to decide. All in favor of the amendment to the amendment will rise. [After a pause.] Those opposed will rise. [After a pause.] The amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. GORE and Mr. OWEN called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senators can not call for the yeas and nays now, after the result of the vote has been announced.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, we could not have any way of knowing whether we have a quorum or not. I was trying to secure recognition before the result of the vote was announced, but I did not quite succeed in doing so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not believe the yeas and nays can now be called for. There was an opportunity for it and a division. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before the question is put on the adoption of the amendment as amended I desire to move the following amendment, to be inserted after the last word of the recently adopted amendment to the amendment:

Provided further, That the interest accruing from tribal funds and deposited in the banks in the State of Oklahoma may be used as authorized by the act of March 3, 1911, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to defray the expense of per capita payments authorized by Congress.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, reserving the right to raise a point against the amendment, I make no objection at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment being withdrawn, the question is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended. [Putting the question.] The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is rejected.

Mr. OWEN. Let us have a rising vote

Mr. NORRIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OWEN. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the amendment as amended will rise. [After a pause.] Those opposed to the amendment as amended will rise. [After a pause.] There is no doubt that the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Do I understand that the Chair has announced the adoption of the amendment as amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. At this juncture I am going to ask the chairman, in behalf of the committee, to offer an amendment on page 32. It appears that there has been a cyclone or tornado at Pipestone, Minn., at which the buildings were badly damaged and two of the pupils were injured. The department asks to strike out, in line 22 of page 32, the words "in all" and the figures "$48,675" and to insert "$6,500 for repairs on buildings and purchase of equipment to replace that destroyed or damaged by tornado on June 10, 1914; in all, $55,175."

Of course there can be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment be read. We did not hear it in this part of the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, under the heading "Minnesota," strike out the words "in all" and the figures "$48,675" and insert "$6,500 for repairs on buildings and purchase of equipment to replace that destroyed or damaged by tornado on June 10, 1914; in all, $55,175."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand that the department has called attention to this item?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; the department has called the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

Mr. THOMAS. If the buildings have been destroyed by tornado, should not the appropriation of $6,000, in line 21, for general repairs and improvements be stricken out?

Mr. CLAPP. No; that is to cover the general repairs and improvements. The department thinks there should be a general clause appropriating $6,500 for repairs and purchase of equipment without limitation.

Mr. THOMAS. That would make $12,500 in all.

Mr. CLAPP. Exactly; but the item of $6,000 has already been placed in the bill for contemplated repairs.

Mr. THOMAS. For repairs upon buildings that have been destroyed by tornado?

Mr. CLAPP. The department does not know just what buildings were destroyed or the extent of repairs, and asks for $6 500 under the general provision of repairs and purchase of equipment to replace that destroyed or damaged by the tornado. There can be no objection to it, it seems to me.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems that the appropriation now proposed covers something already in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 10, to insert:

For the salaries and expenses of not to exceed six oil and gas inspectors, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to supervise oil and gas mining operations on allotted lands leased by members of the Five Civilized Tribes from which restrictions have not been removed, and to conduct investigations with a view to the prevention of waste, $25,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. ASHURST. I move to amend the amendment on page 78, line 12, by inserting after the word "inspectors" the words "in addition to those now employed."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I think I will make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation and is not germane or relevant to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish, of course, to discuss the point of order, but I wish to have read a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee from the honorable Secretary of the Interior urging this amendment and showing the necessity for the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That would not settle the question as to whether it is general legislation or not.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 7, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am much concerned about the extensive and unnecessary waste of natural gas and the loss in the value of the oil production from the inflow of underground water on the Indian lands and adjacent private lands in the State of Oklahoma, and I am writing to ask attention to those problems in connection with your consideration of the Indian appropriation bill now before your committee.

This department has had three men investigating these subjects during the past year, and their investigations have brought out the following facts:

(1) That there is a constant and unnecessary waste of natural gas from the Indian lands and adjacent private land in the State of Oklahoma, which during the year 1913 is estimated to have reached not less than 200,000,000,000 cubic feet of gas.

That with the average price of natural gas to the consumer in Oklahoma during 1912 about 7.6 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, this means an economic loss to the people of that State during this one year equivalent to not less than $16,000,000, according to reports by the Bureau of Mines. It is estimated that at least 30 per cent of this waste occurred on restricted Indian lands.

(2) That in addition to the waste of natural gas, the oil resources on Indian lands in Oklahoma are being seriously damaged through the inflow of underground water from oil wells penetrating the oil-bearing strata, and which water is not being properly imprisoned within its own strata, and is being allowed to penetrate the oil-bearing strata and to reduce the value of the oil, not only by driving the oil back from the wells, but is further mixing with the oil, so that in the case of pumping wells an increasingly large quantity of water must be brought to the surface in order that the oil may be secured.

This situation as to both oil and gas in Oklahoma not only involves this loss to the Indians, but it is discreditable to our national intelligence.

The Indian Office of the department as now organized has no adequate inspection force with which it can prevent this embarrassing and wasteful situation. To adequately meet this situation in such manner as will both protect the interests of the Indian landowners and also save for the use of the people of Oklahoma these invaluable oil and gas resources, it will require an inspection force of six men, whose combined salaries and expenses will not exceed $25,000 per annum, to bring about this saving of more than one-quarter of a million dollars for the members of the Five Civilized Tribes. The present waste of gas is so inexcusable and is such a serious detriment to the interests of the tribes, as well as to the people of the State of Oklahoma, that I can not too strongly urge that your committee make provision for such an inspection force in the pending Indian appropriation bill.

I am attaching herewith a draft of amendment which will accomplish this purpose. I believe that an adequate inspection force, organized under these provisions, will mean a net saving to the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes for some years to come of not less than $200,000 per annum, and I believe the good results to come from such an inspection will be of far greater service to the people of Oklahoma and to the country at large in connection with the practical conservation for present-day use of the oil and gas resources of that State.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken. It is not general legislation; it has to do exclusively with the lands of the Five Civilized Tribes. On the point of order that it is not germane to the bill the Chair understands the rule to be that that question shall be submitted to the Senate. The question is whether the amendment is germane.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the salaries and expenses of not to exceed six oil and gas inspectors, in addition to those now employed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to supervise oil and gas mining operations on allotted lands leased by members of the Five Civilized Tribes from which restrictions have not been removed, and to conduct investigations with a view to the prevention of waste, $25,000, to be immediately available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment germane?

Mr. ASHURST. The question is not debatable, and I do not wish to debate it, but I wish to have the letter from the Secretary of the Interior read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must be decided without debate. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. The Senate decides that the amendment is germane. The question in on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 17, to insert:

That in all payments hereafter made by any officer of the United States to heirs of deceased citizens of any of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma of tribal or other funds, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause to be heard and determined the question of heirship, and the findings so made shall be final and conclusive, and thereupon he may cause to be paid to such persons as may be found to be the heirs of any deceased allottee, under such rules, regulations, and restrictions as he may prescribe, the distributive share to which the allottee would, if living, be entitled: Provided, That all payments due deceased allottees may be made to the legally appointed administrator or executor of the estate of such deceased allottee in cases where an executor or administrator has been appointed: Provided further, That if no legal guardian is appointed all amounts of $100 or less due living minors may be paid to the natural guardian, and all sums in excess of such amount shall be paid to the legal guardian, but in case no legal guardian is appointed such money may be held or deposited in some solvent National or State bank in Oklahoma for the benefit of such minors. All such deposits and disbursements shall be made in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the amendment contemplates that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall exclusively determine the question of heirship.

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the question propounded by the Senator from Utah I will state that the amendment the Senator will observe carries no appropriation, but is authority to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to determine questions of heirship as to per capita payments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is a question which is usually determined by the court when it involves citizens of a State.

Mr. OWEN. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I understand these Indians now have become citizens of the United States, and it seems to me that a question of this character ought to be relegated to the courts.

Mr. OWEN. The reason for the amendment is that some of these per capita payments, as in the case of the Cherokees, are only $15, and to require heirship to be proved up in these small matters would cost more than the amount distributed. It relates to per capita payments; that is all it does relate to; payments made by any officer of the United States to the heirs of deceased citizens of any of the Five Tribes of tribal or other funds. They are distributing these funds from time to time by per capita payments, and if they have to go into court and hire a lawyer and pay him $50 and pay the expenses of probating it will cost more than the amount of the distribution itself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not follow the reading of the amendment very carefully.

Mr. OWEN. It relates to distribution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is limited to a small amount?

Mr. OWEN. It is limited to cases under $100.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the last proviso, commencing on line 6, page 79, and continuing down to line 16, is not good legislation. I think it is legislation that is open to a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator objects to that part, he might move to amend the amendment by striking out that portion, and there will be no objection made, so far as the Senators from Oklahoma are concerned.

Mr. PAGE. Then I move to strike out that portion of the amendment just read included between line 7, on page 79, after the word "appointed," down to and including the word "Interior," in line 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 79 in the committee amendment strike out the additional proviso beginning in line 7 and ending in line 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, recurring to the vote taken a few moments ago on the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the amendment of the committee, I wish to say it was my purpose, before the Chair announced the result, to ask for the yeas and nays in case the amendment to the amendment prevailed. Failing in that, I wish to prefer this request. It is the purpose of the Senate today to adjourn until Monday. I have made my arrangements to leave to-morrow, and I can not be here when the amendment finally comes up in the Senate. There will be a roll call on the amendment in the Senate after the bill has been reported to the Senate. I wish to ask unanimous consent that that yea-and-nay vote may be had now, without waiting until the bill comes into the Senate. If the Senate will grant this request, I will appreciate it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I doubt if the Senator can do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would be glad to accommodate the Senator from Oklahoma if under any known principle of parliamentary law it could be done, but there does not seem to be any.

Mr. GORE. I am not asking the Chair as a matter of accommodation to do it; I am simply asking unanimous consent, because the only point is whether a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken now or when the bill comes into the Senate. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that it is the purpose of the Senate to adjourn from to-day until Monday; I have made my arrangements to leave the city, and I can not remain until the amendment is voted on in the Senate. There will be a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, and I was wondering if the Senate would not consent to take a yea-and-nay vote now rather than wait until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Provided it were not taken again in the Senate?

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to that proviso.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That can not be done until after the bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not see how it can be done. If it is impossible for me to add that much to the agreement, then it is impossible for me to give unanimous consent.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GORE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will raise the question. The Senator from Oklahoma moves to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi moves to lay the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma to reconsider on the table.

Mr. OWEN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. In his absence I would not feel like voting unless my vote should become necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I inquire whether the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. He is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and my transfer that I made upon the last roll call, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote, because of a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is not present.

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Borah	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Townsend
Bristow	Martin, Va.	Smoot	Vardaman
Catron	Nelson	Sterling	Williams
Chamberlain	Norris	Sutherland
Cummins	Ransdell	Swanson
Lane	Shively	Thornton

NAYS—19.

Ashurst	Hollis	Page	Stone
Brady	Jones	Robinson	Thomas
Bryan	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Thompson
Camden	Myers	Sheppard	White
Gore	Owen	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—56.

Bankhead	Fletcher	Lippitt	Saulsbury
Brandegee	Gallinger	Lodge	Sherman
Burleigh	Goff	McLean	Shields
Burton	Gronna	Newlands	Simmons
Chilton	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Clapp	Hughes	Oliver	Smith, Mich.
Clark, Wyo.	James	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson	Penrose	Stephenson
Colt	Kenyon	Perkins	Tillman
Crawford	Kern	Pittman	Walsh
Culberson	La Follette	Poindexter	Warren
Dillingham	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Weeks
du Pont	Lee, Md.	Reed	West
Fall	Lewis	Root	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the question to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, the yeas are 21 and the nays are 19, a quorum not having voted.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senate adjourns I want to raise a point of order and submit it to the Chair. Before the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] made his motion to reconsider the amendment offered by me the amendment had been adopted and the amendment as amended had passed the Senate. The query is whether the Senator can move to reconsider as to my amendment to the amendment without first moving to reconsider the amendment as amended. I do not think he can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rules provide that no business can be done except to put the question to adjourn; but the Chair will state, for the information of the Senator from Mississippi, that the motion to reconsider is to reconsider the amendment as amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I was misinformed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WARREN. I call for a division, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until counted. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise and stand until counted. [A pause.] The motion to adjourn is lost. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Norris	Stone
Borah	Gore	Owen	Swanson
Bristow	Hollis	Page	Thomas
Bryan	Jones	Ransdell	Thompson
Camden	Lane	Robinson	Thornton
Catron	McCumber	Sheppard	Townsend
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Shively	Vardaman
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Clapp	Myers	Smith, Ga.	White
Cummins	Nelson	Smoot

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent from the session of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. STERLING, Mr. TILLMAN, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 20, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 19, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the center from whom all pure conceptions, worthy thoughts, and kindly deeds flow, so move our hearts that with clearer vision, holier intent and purpose, we may move forward unperturbed. For if Thou art with us, who can be against us? Thus may we think Thy thoughts and act in consonance with Thy purposes, that Thy will may be done in us to the good of all mankind. In Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—MICHAEL J. GILL AGAINST L. C. DYER.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the privileged report on the contested-election case of Michael J. Gill against L. C. Dyer.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. My colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MORGAN], is a member of the Committee on Elections

No. 3, which considered the Gill-Dyer case. He has been called home, and before leaving he prepared some remarks, which he asked me to have incorporated in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] asks unanimous consent that he may have printed in the RECORD some remarks prepared by his colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MORGAN], on the Gill-Dyer case. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY].

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker, last evening the House adjourned when I was in the midst of the recital of the fraud alleged in the second precinct of the fifth ward, and I had reached No. 5 allegation of fraud in the second precinct, where the judges and the clerks returned 199 votes for Mr. Dyer and 5 for Mr. Gill; and in this precinct, when the ballots were examined on the recount, it was found that Mr. Dyer had received only 106 votes while Mr. Gill had received 73. Judge Bishop's ballot, which was straight Democratic, was not found in the box when the recount was made. (Record, pp. 75, 1926, 333, 348.)

Eichholz, a voter, testified that he wanted to vote the straight Democratic ticket, and repeatedly called for one, but that one of the judges interfered. He refused, however, to scratch Gill's name. When his ballot, 173, was examined on the recount Gill's name was scratched and Dyer's written in.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible of performance for this committee to go to St. Louis or for the contestee to bring before this committee the electors who voted those ballots, notwithstanding the ballots can be identified. The testimony in this case, from beginning to end, shows that when the witnesses were called and the ballots corresponding with the ballots they cast disclosed by reference to the rolls of the election officer shown them, they would examine the ballot and reply, "I am not certain this is my ballot." Under the election laws of the State of Missouri it is not a difficult trick to substitute for the legal ballot an illegal ballot and give it the same number. These electors in their testimony again and again said, "This ballot contains Mr. Gill's name scratched and Mr Dyer's name written in; we voted the straight Democratic ballot." I challenge the contestee to carry out what he offers by the report of the minority and the resolution they have framed: and it should be remembered that this contestee from the very day of the filing of the notice of contest had notice of the fraud alleged, and upon the recount taken within a few months after the election also had notice that the election officers had tampered with the ballots and made a fraudulent return. From that time until March, when he asked this committee to make a virtual recount of the ballots, the contestee knew of the character, quantity, and quality of the fraud alleged, and now, at this late day, when the passage of this minority resolution will result in the contestee filling the full term of his office, the minority on the committee asks that we agree to a resolution which, in the judgment of your committee, on a 7 to 2 vote, will accomplish nothing.

Precinct No. 4 returned—132 Dyer, 49 Gill; recount, Dyer 110, Gill 68. Precinct No. 5 returned—186 Dyer, 23 Gill; recount shows, Dyer 148, Gill 51. Ninth precinct returned—183 Dyer, 3 Gill; recount, Dyer 149, Gill 14. Fourteenth precinct returned—148 Dyer, 68 Gill; recount gives, Dyer 128 and Gill 71. The committee also set aside precinct No. 3, where the returns were—67 Dyer and 49 Gill; recount shows, Dyer 72 and Gill 82. In rejecting these precincts Mr. Dyer loses his plurality of 349 votes and Mr. Gill gains a plurality of 67 votes. Precinct No. 7 should have been set aside for the following reasons:

First. All the judges and clerks voted for Mr. Dyer.

Second. Fourteen ballots not returned.

Third. Ballots scratched and Dyer written in in same handwriting, affecting 72 Democrat ballots as scratched against Gill.

As Mr. Dyer received the vote of this precinct and Mr. Gill's plurality was 67, it should have been increased 144, making a total plurality of 221. The condition in the seventh precinct is found in all precincts in this ward, except the sixth and twelfth, and your committee could have reached this same decision through all the precincts, to a greater or less degree, thus increasing Mr. Gill's plurality by many hundred votes.

This action is taken in accord with well-established principles and precedents, to wit:

When the result in any precinct has been shown to be so tainted with fraud that the truth can not be deducible therefrom, then it should never be permitted to form a part of the canvass. The precedents, as well as the evident requirements of truth, not only sanction but call for the rejection of the entire poll when stamped with the characteristics here shown. Washburn v. Vorhees (2 Bartlett Cont. Cases, 58).

And the same principle in this case you find decide in Dodge v. Brooks, Thirty-ninth Congress (2 Bart., 78 Rowell's Dig., 203); Finley v. Walls, in Forty-fourth Congress (Smith, 389; Rowell's Dig., 714), wherein the law is clearly stated:

Where fraud is proved to have been committed by the officers of an election no reliance can be placed upon any of their acts, and their return must be rejected as wholly unreliable. The party claiming under the election must prove the actual vote in some other way.

In Bisbee v. Finley in the Forty-seventh Congress (Rowell's Digest, 716), it was held that—

Any considerable number of votes proved for one candidate in excess of the number returned for him has always been regarded as evidence of fraud and a legitimate method of impeaching the return.

Also Aldrich v. Robbins, Fifty-fourth Congress (Rowell's Digest, 718), Aldrich and Underwood in same Congress, Wise v. Young, Fifty-fifth Congress (Hinds' Precedents, 650), and other cases.

Cases relied upon in the minority report are all along the line where evidence of fraud is not sufficient to overthrow returns. Contestant charged in this case that in a large number of precincts ballots cast for him were fraudulently counted by election officers for contestee. This charge the committee found to be correct, but in many precincts not sufficient to overthrow the returns. In Walker against Rhea in the Fifty-sixth Congress the committee reported frauds and irregular practices in interest of the contestee, but that they fell short of being sufficient to change the result.

This is also found true of a Virginia case in the Fifty-seventh Congress, which case is very similar to Gill against Dyer which shows colossal fraud in nearly all of the 17 precincts of the fifth ward, fraudulent returns, scratched ballots, willful and deliberate participation in these frauds by election officers, assistance to voters in marking ballots, voting without oath as to illiteracy as required by Missouri law, leaving ballot box unguarded, ejecting watchers from polling places, signing the election returns before the vote was counted and polls closed, filling in vote without its being verified with the count, one election officer marking more than 50 ballots for electors, and so forth. In other words, plain fraud was rampant inside the voting places in the fifth ward of the twelfth congressional district of Missouri in 1912, the place where a candidate's rights are supposed to be safeguarded.

Your committee by a 9 to 2 vote declared after a careful and deliberate examination of this case and under their oaths of office that Hon. L. C. Dyer was not elected to a seat in the American Congress from the twelfth Missouri district, and that Michael J. Gill was elected and should be given his seat.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to rerefer H. R. 13825 to the Committee on Claims, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands. It undoubtedly belongs to that committee.

The SPEAKER. Where is it now?

Mr. FERRIS. It is before the Public Lands Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is it a public bill or a private bill?

Mr. FERRIS. It is a private bill.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary to have unanimous consent to do that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, be taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments disagreed to, and a conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent to have the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill taken from the Speaker's table, to disagree to all Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Mr. SHARP, and Mr. COOPER.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—MICHAEL J. GILL AGAINST L. C. DYER.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Michael J. Gill, the contestant, has submitted a request to the Committee on Elections which I now convey to this House. He desires to be heard, and I yield to him five minutes, if it be in order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] had the floor a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa had the floor when the point of order was made. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. There will be no objection to the request of Mr. Gill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say he has no objection to hearing Mr. Gill.

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference whether anybody makes any objection, the gentleman has a right to make a speech.

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have not the honor to be a member of the Committee on Elections, and profess no intimate familiarity with the testimony which has been taken in this case. However, when the reports of the majority and minority were laid upon my desk I took occasion to examine them somewhat carefully and to ascertain, if possible, just what questions were to be submitted to this House. I was struck somewhat with the peculiarity of the minority report, and I was interested in the discussion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] yesterday afternoon when he commented upon its form. It seems to me that the correct solution of the question that is presented to this House by the minority report does not require an intimate familiarity with the evidence that has been taken. It seems to me that a great deal has been said in debate here that goes wide of the real question that is to be submitted to this House, and that is whether or not the contestee is entitled to have his request respected for permission to take testimony.

In the report of the majority it is shown conclusively that Mr. Dyer had 349 plurality over Mr. Gill, so on the face of the returns, if the returns are to be respected, there is no question as to his title to his seat. The majority undertake, however, to overcome that conceded plurality by the invocation of a principle of law. They say that because, at the close of all the evidence, they are justified in drawing the inference that the judges and clerks of election were guilty of fraud and conspiracy. Under the law the burden of proof in this case shifts to the contestee, and he is obligated to show that, notwithstanding that fraud and conspiracy, there were sufficient votes cast at the election in 1912 to elect him over Mr. Gill. Now, that presents a very interesting legal question, a question of the burden of proof in this case, and this case should be determined upon the question of the burden of proof. If the burden of proof rests upon the contestant in this case from the beginning to end, then it is clear that Mr. Dyer is entitled to his seat.

If the burden of proof has shifted and rests upon Mr. Dyer to go out into the fifth ward and bring in the voters to show that a majority of all the voters of that district voted for him, then there may be some question as to his right to a seat on this floor. One of the fundamental principles of the common-law practice, and that practice is made applicable by the statute of the United States to the case which we are considering to-day, is that when fraud or conspiracy is relied upon it must be laid forth in the pleadings specifically and particularly. One of the other fundamental principles of legal procedure is that the burden of proof in a trial rests upon the contestant, or the plaintiff, and that it never shifts except in response to an issue tendered by the pleadings. Therefore if we are to observe legal procedure, under the law of the land which protects Mr. Gill's title, we must hold that the contestant in this case bear the burden which the law places upon him.

Now, when those matters had occurred to me, it seemed to me logical, it seemed to be necessary, that I first turn to see what issue had been tendered in this case by the contestant, and I turned to the notice of contest; I turned to that pleading required by the statutes of the United States to set forth the ground particularly and specifically upon which the contestant relies, because here was a case where fraud and conspiracy upon the part of the judges of election were relied upon for the purpose of nullifying the solemn returns of that body and casting the burden of proof upon Mr. Dyer. I was astonished when I examined that notice to find that neither the word "fraud" nor the word "conspiracy" could be found anywhere within its four corners. I was astonished to see that nowhere within that entire instrument was there a single charge made against either the judges or the clerks of election. I was astonished to realize that no such issue was presented in the pleadings as the contestant now assumes to stand upon; but that notice, that pleading, drawn and filed by the contestant, fastened the burden of proof by its very terms upon him from the beginning to the end of this case. And that burden can not shift under the law until he, after discovering the fraud and conspiracy, applies to the committee or to the House for leave to amend.

Mr. POST. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SCOTT. Not now. When he has done that, then the tribunal before which he appears fixes the terms, and the terms are fixed in such a way as will do justice to both parties. Then the contestee will not be out of his right to meet the prima facie case that is to be made in response to the new issue that is to be tendered. Because when that amendment is made, when the specific charge of fraud or conspiracy on the part of the judges of election is tendered, the contestee must be ready to go out into the wards among the electors and bring them in to meet the prima facie case made. Because under that rule of law the contestant only has to make a prima facie case, and he may do it with one or two witnesses, and then sit back and rest and say to the contestee, "Now the burden is upon you; go forth and get your testimony."

Now, the very reason that lies behind these rules of procedure to which I have referred is that that can not justly be done after all the evidence is closed, after the day has passed when the contestee has his opportunity to meet that new issue. When that notice was filed they failed to charge fraud and conspiracy upon the part of the judges of election. And I want to make the point here that there is a distinction between the charge of fraud made against an outsider which never shifts the burden of proof and a charge of fraud against the election officials. It is only when you attack the integrity of the tribunal that the burden of proof is shifted. Now, that was not done. Here is the condition which confronts this House: A contestant comes in at the close of all the evidence—and mark the statement of the learned chairman of the committee yesterday as he stood upon the floor when he said only after a most careful examination of all the evidence did they come to that conclusion, referring to the question of fraud and conspiracy upon the part of the judges of election. Only, then, after all the testimony was taken did they come to that conclusion. Then was the first time that they undertook to shift the burden of proof to Mr. Dyer. Then was the first notice he had officially upon this record that he was required to go out into the wards and subpœna all those voters, because upon the pleading adopted and filed in this case by the contestant he proclaimed the burden of proof assumed by himself throughout the entire trial. The precedents in this House make clear the distinction between illegality, unlawful action, and fraud upon the part of judges of election. The mere plea of illegality, illegal votes, illegal or erroneous counting, does not shift the burden of proof. You must by an allegation of direct moral turpitude attack the integrity of the tribunal, and that even yet has not been done. There was but one way, I say, that the contestant could do that, and it was at the time when he first discovered the fraud and the conspiracy, if there was such, upon the part of the judges of election, and that was to apply for leave to amend and ask the terms to be fixed.

But if we are to respect the recommendation of the majority of the committee in this case, we must at the end of the trial shift the burden of proof, nunc pro tunc, as we say, giving no opportunity to Mr. Dyer to meet the charge. Under these circumstances there seems to me but one of two courses which this House should pursue—either seat Mr. Dyer directly or grant his request to take more evidence.

Mr. BOOHER. The minority of the committee do not ask that Mr. Dyer be seated?

Mr. SCOTT. The act of the committee does not control the discretion of this House. If the contestant was not able to make a case under the law, it is the duty of this House to seat him, unless in the exercise of our full discretion the House may see fit to grant further time to take testimony.

Mr. BOOHER. Is not the fact reasonably deducible from the report of the minority of this committee that the minority of the committee found there was fraud committed there, and they want an opportunity to go there and prove it was not sufficient to unseat the contestee? Is not that the object of the minority of the committee?

Mr. SCOTT. It may be there was fraud, but the point I make is that Mr. Dyer has the legal right and opportunity to go forth and get the testimony and disprove that fraud, if it was fraud, or show that it did not operate to change the result of the election.

Mr. BOOHER. Why did not the contestee in this case make this proof in the year and three months in which he had the opportunity to do it?

Mr. SCOTT. Because the contestant laid down the pleading which would govern the rule of conduct of this House whereby he assumed the burden of proof, and all that. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BOOHER. Now, upon that proposition the committee disagreed with the gentleman from Iowa, and I agree with the committee. That is the difference.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a matter upon which each individual Member of this House must entertain his own opinion.

Mr. BOOHER. Certainly; I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. SCOTT. But I simply state my views, my understanding of the law in this case, after a brief investigation of two or three days' time, hoping, if I am right, that the membership of this House may accept whatever statement which I may make that appeals to them.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to yield five minutes to the contestant in this case, Mr. Gill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] asks leave to yield five minutes to the contestant in this case. Without objection, the contestant, Mr. Gill, is recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives of the United States, I did not care to say a word upon this question, but have concluded, after the remarks of yesterday, that it would be advisable that I do so. I have always been willing to leave the question with the high-minded men who had the contest under consideration. I was willing to let those men render a verdict and pass it up to you men, that you might put it to the test of your reasoning—your best reasoning—and form an intelligent conclusion, and whatever that conclusion should be I would accept it as a good American citizen. [Applause.]

I have stayed off the floor of this House; I have not bothered the Members on that side at all; not a one of you. I have appealed to very few of you on this side. I am willing that the question should be settled upon its merits. I do not believe in abuse. Abuse gets nobody anything in this world. My attorneys, as high-class men as God ever put life into, were accused yesterday on the floor of this House by the contestee, or at least he intimated that they were the ones that tampered with the ballots in this case. What a pity. The election commissioners in St. Louis are a body of men composed of Democrats and Republicans, and their employees are also equally divided; and I say to you gentlemen here this morning that nobody was permitted to touch those ballots excepting those employees and the commissioners themselves.

Now, there is a question about my votes. I say this to you, paraphrasing the language of Robert Emmet when he appealed to his judges, if the souls of the faithful departed have anything in common with those in this transitory life, then I ask you, my beloved mother, who has long since gone to the world beyond, to appeal to Almighty God to look down in my heart and there, if there ever was a thought in my mind that deviated from the principles of Democracy or ever supported a Republican for office I hope it will exhibit itself here on my face, so that you men on the Democratic side will be not deceived. [Applause.]

It is true you will find in the record that I said I scratched a few Democrats. The question was put to me bluntly and quickly, and I knew I had scratched, but I did not know whom; but after thought I find that there were four or five men running for the United States Senatorship on the Democratic ticket, and in order to make that ballot legal it was necessary for me to scratch about four of them.

Mr. RUCKER. And vote for one?

Mr. GILL. Yes; and vote for one. So that if you find it in the record that I scratched a Democrat, that is what I had in mind when I said so.

Another thing I want to say to you here this morning: Emphasis was put upon the fact that the postmaster in the city of St. Louis, appointed by the President of the United States, had told me so-and-so, and that I was guilty, and that he was going to vote against me. I ask you men to take this statement, that the postmaster in the city of St. Louis never testified in this case, and he never told me any such a thing as the contestee remarked yesterday; never.

There are men in this House who have known me for 25 years, and I have been a consistent, honest, hard-working Democrat, and never took a dollar in my life for the effort I put forth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. If nobody wants to speak——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] use some time now?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I yield 20 minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I am always oppressed with a feeling of dissatisfaction, when confronted with an election case, and required to render a decision upon the merits, without adequate opportunity of investigation. We should deal with these cases as judges, not as partisans. What judge, what supreme court, would determine a case upon the argument of counsel, without any inquiry on its part into the facts contained in the record, or the questions of law presented in the briefs of counsel? And yet that is practically what we are compelled to do with respect to these election controversies. They are investigated in the first instance by committees of the House, who dig into the law, and make their explorations into the testimony. The members of these committees often reach different conclusions, and later they come before us, and present these conclusions in oral arguments. We follow these arguments, as best we can, and in large measure, upon what is thus presented, grope our way to a conclusion, unaided by those personal investigations, so essential to a determination upon the merits. This being so, we should err on the side of caution in reaching a conclusion, and omit nothing that will enable us to arrive at the very right of the controversy.

I have been through this case, so far as I have been able to do so. I have examined both the majority and the minority reports, and subjected them to a careful comparison. In large measure, I have examined the precedents, and in this connection, I will say that so far as contested-election precedents are concerned, you can prove anything by them. They constitute a history of extensive wrongdoing, a history which acquits neither one of the great parties of fault. [Applause.] In referring to these precedents I will content myself with those citations which contain the fundamental principles that appeal to the sense of justice innate in every man. All will agree that the principles hereafter to be cited are sound, not because they have been announced by a partisan committee in some particular case, but because, as I have said, they appeal to our fundamental sense of justice, and are recognized as axiomatic.

The first proposition that I ask this House to consider is this, that the possibility of grave injustice is always present, when it is proposed to reject bodily the entire return of election officials.

It has been well stated in Second Hinds, page 127, that the entire poll is not to be rejected, except after the fullest attempt to purge it of illegal votes, and to ascertain the real vote by all possible means. The innocent should not be made to suffer with the guilty, and nothing short of the impossibility of ascertaining for whom the majority of the votes were given, ought to vacate an election. (American Laws of Elections, section 304, 2 Hinds, p. 134.) When an entire poll is rejected on the ground of fraud, or misconduct on the part of the election officials, such, for instance, as manipulating the returns, or tampering with the ballots, the candidates suffer, and the public interests suffer, for the misconduct of officials over whom the voters have no control. If the ballots of properly entitled voters have become intermingled with fraudulent ballots dishonestly inserted by corrupt officials, diligent effort should be made to eliminate the fraudulent additions, and thus preserve the rights of the honest voters who constitute the residuum. Another authority states this principle as follows: The election should be set aside only when it is impossible from any evidence, in reach, to ascertain the true result. (2 Hinds, p. 151.) The doctrine of throwing out entire returns for fraud of the election officials while tolerable in theory, is most unhappy in application, if nothing further is done to eliminate the fraud, and thus arrive at the true result.

No effort ought to be spared on the part of the committee, or of this House, to secure those facts which will enable an intelligent judgment to be formed. After reading both the majority and minority reports, I am prepared to say that accepting their statements, as to what occurred at the precincts under investigation, the record does not afford sufficient evidence to enable us as judges, to determine whether Dyer, or Gill was elected. Misconduct on the part of the judges is fully proved, but in large part the effect of this misconduct has been corrected by the recount, leaving only the improperly manipulated ballots to be corrected, or excluded. No sufficient effort has been made to do this, and as there were confessedly a number of honest ballots cast for both Gill, and Dyer in the excluded polls, this House is unable to determine who, on the whole, received a majority of the honest votes in the congressional district, and is unable therefore to determine who was elected. The committee rejected the returns from seven precincts, as follows: The second, third, fourth, fifth, ninth, fourteenth, and seventeenth. As a result of this action, a large number of properly entitled voters, who cast their ballots for the candidate of their choice, have been disfranchised. It must be admitted, even by those who contend for the exclusion of these polls, that the excluded votes, were in large measure the votes of citizens who voted as they intended to vote, and whose ballots have not been tampered with. This must be true, because the record shows that a large proportion of the ballots must have been scratched by deliberate choice, and in such cases when the name of Gill was replaced by that of Dyer, it was not the corrupt act of another, but the direct act of the voter, or of an election official acting under his directions.

I do not take issue with the gentlemen who assert that when a return is so tainted with fraud, or misconduct of the election officials, that the truth can not be deduced therefrom, the same must be rejected. That is undoubtedly true. The precedents to this effect, are as old as the hills. But permit me to call your attention to the fact that there is an essential difference between rejecting a return, and rejecting a poll. The return is merely the primary evidence as to how the voters voted. When a return is rejected, legal votes are not thereby lost, for they may be proven by secondary evidence. The voters may be called as witnesses (2 H., p. 202). There are numerous precedents for this proposition. In the case of Wise v. Young (2 H., p. 654) the returns were rejected, but the testimony of over 5,000 voters was taken to prove that they voted for the contestant. To the same effect, Waddill v. Wise (2 H., p. 470), and Thorp v. Epes (2 H., p. 644). Nor will I take issue with the proposition that the evidence of false counting at most of the above precincts is so strong, that it vitiates and overthrows the value to be attached to the return of the election officials. The errors in the count at the above precincts, save precinct 17, and perhaps precinct 14, are too serious to be attributed to honest error. I am willing to agree that in five of the above precincts there is no possibility of an honest count having been made in the first instance.

But may I call the attention of this great appellate court before which this matter is now in issue, to the fact that these errors which have been corrected by the recount, may be relied upon to show that in large measure, the wrongdoing of the election officials was confined to manipulating the returns. If, in the first instance, these officials had falsified to any considerable extent the individual ballots, to secure the result desired, there would have been no occasion to falsify the count, for the count would have conformed to the ballots as changed by the judges. Hence the recount having in all likelihood eliminated the major portion of the fraud, it furnishes the greater reason therefore for taking the evidence of the voters, in the effort to arrive at the true result at these precincts.

Permit me to call your attention to another fact in this connection. If the suggestion of scratching creates in your mind the idea that there was fraud at those precincts, that idea is largely repelled by the fact that the evidence amply shows that an angry state of mind on the part of many Democrats at those precincts, not only made scratching likely, but even inevitable. These incensed and angry Democrats were determined to scratch Gill, because they believed that he had scratched the Democratic candidate at the previous congressional election. I am not going to charge Mr. Gill with having actually scratched that candidate. It is unnecessary to take up that controversy. While the report is to that effect, it is a matter of indifference for the purposes of this case, whether the charge is well, or ill, founded.

The material fact is that the Democratic voters of those wards firmly believed that Gill was guilty of this imputed wrongdoing. All parties are agreed on that point. All agree that the brother of the former Democratic candidate for Congress, the ward committeeman, and other friends of the dead man, firmly believed that Mr. Gill had scratched Kinney when he was a candidate for Congress. Hence this deeply rooted belief on their part furnishes ample explanation of the activity of the Democrats of those precincts, in their effort to take revenge upon Gill for his supposed defection to their former idol.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HARDY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that a wrong count of 50 votes would be sufficient in the gentleman's judgment to hold the judges corrupt, and to throw out the returns?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I say that errors in the count, where the errors were as great as they were shown to be at some of these precincts, would justify the committee in rejecting the returns, but would not justify the committee, or this House, in refusing to make inquiry by proper evidence aliunde, as to how the voters at those precincts actually did vote. [Applause.] I think that is a sufficiently clear statement of the situation. I wish to say that in scores of election cases this inquiry has been made. Time and time again returns have been rejected and the contestant seated by this body, because the evidence aliunde, satisfied the committee that a majority of the honest votes had been cast in his favor.

I wish to call the attention of the House to another fact: It is argued, in opposition to the request that opportunity be given to take additional testimony, that such a course would be useless and futile, on the ground that the voters are so ignorant and illiterate, that their testimony would furnish no aid to an intelligent conclusion. Yet it is stated in the report, as an evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the judges at certain precincts, that the judges at these precincts marked the ballots of a large number of voters who were not illiterate. The two statements can not stand together, and both be true. Certainly the testimony of these literate voters might be taken. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WATSON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; I have not very much time. I am not averse as a rule to being interrupted, but it is very hard to make a connected argument in 15, or 20 minutes, when you yield for interruptions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Of course I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WATSON. I would be very much obliged to the gentleman if he would point out anything in the majority report of this committee which states that all the people in that ward were illiterate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, I never said that.

Mr. WATSON. Of course——

Mr. SAUNDERS. I said that the argument advanced was that this inquiry would be futile, on the ground of the ignorance and illiteracy of the voters. It does not seem to me that I ought to be interrupted by my colleague's inquiry, when I made such a clear statement of my position. I never said that the report stated that all the people in the ward were illiterate. I said that the argument had been made that this inquiry into the actual vote of the electors would be futile on account of the illiterate character of the people of those wards. That is certainly the argument that has been made on the floor.

Further I called the attention of the House to the fact that the report makes the charge against the judges that at more than one precinct, they had marked the ballots of people who were able to sign their names to the register, and who were therefore not illiterate. That in full was the statement that I made. If therefore, Mr. Speaker, the argument is made that fraud is to be presumed because so many Democratic ballots were scratched in favor of the Republican candidate—and I will admit that standing alone and unexplained that fact might create a suspicion of wrongdoing—bear in mind that the likely explanation of this scratching is to be found, not in the imputed rascality of the election officials, but in the inflamed state of mind of the Democratic voters of that ward toward Gill.

Whether or not that hostile attitude was justified, is not material. If it existed, and both reports fully show that it did, then it furnishes an explanation of the scratching that is entirely consistent with an honest conduct of the election in this particular. The testimony of one of the active antagonists of Gill is to the effect that the word to defeat Gill was passed around at a meeting at which 500 people were in attendance. (See record, p. 1192.) Burke, another witness, testifies that the local feeling against Gill seemed unanimous. (See record, p. 423.) This witness states that he had his mind made up to scratch Gill, because the latter had "double-crossed," the Democratic ticket two years before.

I wish to say another thing, and the truth of it will be recognized by every man to whom I speak, because you have all had experience as candidates, and that is that nothing enrages the average party voter to the same extent, or is more likely to turn him against the candidate of his party, than an apparently well-sustained charge that this candidate has been guilty of treachery to some former party candidate. Whatever may be said about the character of the population in the precincts in question, it is none the less true that it is precisely in a population of that character that the fires of prejudice burn the fiercest, and the flames of party wrath are the more readily kindled, against a man who is accused, and in their judgment, convicted, of having knifed a former idol.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am sorry, but I can not yield now. Take such a population, not altogether illiterate, but a rude, rough population, a democratic population, because this is a Democratic ward, and it is among such party voters, and party workers, that our own experience in party matters tells us, that the suggestion of wrongdoing against a former Democratic candidate would run like wildfire. If these people were satisfied that the man then asking their ballots, had voted against the Democratic candidate, two years before, and voted for the then Republican candidate, that fact would furnish sufficient ground for them to say, "If Dyer two years ago was good enough for Gill, Dyer to-day is good enough for me." That was just exactly what they did say. Michael Kinney testifies (p. 1910) that the "story was circulated that if Dyer was good enough for Gill to vote for two years before, he was good enough for them to vote for this year."

I refer to this, why? Merely to show that the record furnishes a valid and sufficient explanation why ballots were scratched, and why it was to be expected that ballots would be scratched, in the precincts which have been rejected by the report of the committee. This explanation supports the bona fides of the scratched ballots.

I have already called the attention of the House to the fact that while the rejection of entire returns may be tolerable in theory, it is often most unhappy, and productive of injustice in application. The innocent and the guilty suffer alike for the wrongdoing of others. We are not concerned so much in this case with Mr. Dyer, or Mr. Gill, as we are concerned to do justice. If the state of the record is such, that it is insufficient for a just conclusion, then we should exercise the power afforded by law, to secure the evidence which will enable us to arrive at the very right of the controversy.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not like to yield at this point. I have very little time.

Mr. WEBB. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's argument, but I wanted to ask him a question about precinct 17.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I intend to discuss precinct 17, in the progress of my remarks, and point out the weakness of so much of the report as relates to this particular precinct.

While it is perfectly true as a matter of law, that upon a proper state of facts a committee may reject the returns of a poll, and while it is further true that the committee was justified in rejecting the returns from at least six of the seven precincts rejected, yet it does not follow as a universal proposition that when you reject a return, you are justified in seating the candidate who has the majority in the remaining precincts.

Many years ago at a time when election committees were far more partisan than they are to-day, this House decided an election contest from South Carolina. The entire poll of the city of Charleston was rejected by the committee, and that rejection was sustained by the House. With Charleston rejected, the contestant had a clear majority in the other precincts of the district. Was the contestant seated? Not at all. The committee concluded, and very properly, that while the evidence of fraud and wrongdoing at Charleston was so overwhelming that no value could be attached to the returns, they could not determine what proportion of the undoubted legal vote of the city had been cast respectively for the contestant, and the contestee. Hence they could not determine whether on the whole, the contestant, or the contestee, received a majority of the legal vote of the district. This being so, the House unseated the contestee, but did not seat the contestant. The seat was declared vacant. See the case of Buttz v. Mackay (12 H., p. 163), the syllabus of which is as follows: Gross frauds perpetrated in such a way as to show connivance of election officers, caused the rejection of the returns of all the precincts of a city. One-third of the votes of a district being rejected, the House did not seat contestant, but declared the seat vacant.

The principle upon which this was done is manifest. The committee being unable to determine how many of the votes cast in Charleston which were legal, were cast for the contestant, and how many for the contestee, was not justified, in that state of uncertainty in declaring that the contestant had received a majority of the legal votes. A report seating him, would have been tantamount to such a declaration.

There are many precedents to the above effect, and many to the contrary. As I have said, you can prove anything by the precedents in election cases.

Is there a Member of this House who has listened to the arguments for the majority and minority reports, who has any doubt that many of the votes in the rejected polls, were honestly cast for Gill? Have you any doubt that many of the votes at these precincts were honestly cast for Dyer? Have you any doubt that many of the ballots in the rejected precincts were scratched either by the voter, or by the judge in conformity with the direction of the voter, and were therefore honest votes, representing the choice of those voters, in the exercise of free volition?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I would like to have a few minutes more time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS. When you reject these polls bodily, what happens?

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. For a question for information. In the judgment of the gentleman, would it have been possible to ascertain by investigation what proportion of those votes and which of those votes which were scratched were scratched by the voters themselves and which were scratched by the inspectors?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Undoubtedly. I will discuss that phase of the case later. In this connection I wish to answer the question of the gentleman from North Carolina. The precincts in this ward were of course disconnected precincts, and the fraud and wrongdoing in one precinct, can not be imputed to the officials in another. Under the law of Missouri the ballots are numbered, so that in the case of a contest you can trace down, and ascertain the ballot cast by a particular individual. It appears that in precinct 17, three votes for Gill were improperly marked for Dyer, but the inquiry into illegal marking goes no further, though it was competent to take the testimony of all the voters, voting scratched ballots. It appears further that at this precinct one judge scratched 37 ballots, but that in itself does not indicate fraud.

Doubtless the local politicians who were interested in defeating Mr. Gill, instructed the voters as they went in, to ask for this particular judge. It happens frequently in elections where there is no suspicion of fraud, that one judge marks many more tickets than do the others. It further appears that at some time during the election day, the watchers were ordered from the polls by the judges of election, but were afterwards readmitted on the order of the election commissioners. See report, pages 4–5. Upon the foregoing facts as to this precinct, as they appear in the report, the committee rejected the entire precinct. Plainly as to this precinct the facts do not justify the rejection of the returns, and the elimination of the entire vote cast.

In this connection the following precedents are cited: The return should be rejected only when it is so tainted with fraud, or misconduct of the election officials that the truth can not be deduced from it. (2 H., p. 151.) In the case of Goodwin v. Cobb, in which it appeared that great frauds had been committed at certain precincts, the votes of certain properly entitled voters were received, and the others rejected. (1 H., p. 721.) In other words the illegal votes and the misconduct of the officials, did not cause the exclusion of the legal voters. An entire poll should not be rejected when it is possible to purge it of illegal votes. (2 H., sec. 880.) Although the fraud in a district may be extensive, the House prefers to purge the returns rather than declare the seat vacant. (2 H., sec. 1103, sec. 1095, sec. 1080.) The recount at precinct 17 practically agreed with the original count, and gave Dyer 62 majority. Accepting the statements of the report, the evidence cited to justify the exclusion of this precinct, is certainly far from satisfactory. If this precinct had been counted, even excluding the others, Gill's ascertained majority would have been about 11.

Mr. POST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. POST. I want to ask the gentleman if under the laws of Missouri, in the event this case should be sent back for further testimony, a committee of this Congress could compel the voter to tell how he voted?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes. I imagine there would be no trouble about that. The testimony of a number of these voters has already been taken.

Mr. POST. Under the law of Missouri?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No statute of a State can limit the power of the House of Representatives in dealing with the election of its own Members.

Mr. POST. I desire to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not wish to be discourteous to my friend but I can not yield further. I have only two or three minutes remaining. The proposition submitted in the views of the minority, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3, or a subcommittee thereof, be instructed to take additional testimony in the contested-election case of Michael J. Gill v. Hon. L. C. Dyer, touching the election of November 5, 1912, in precincts 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 14, and 17, of the fifth ward of the city of St. Louis, with particular reference as to whether or not the Democratic ballots in those precincts, which had Michael J. Gill's name scratched, were the correct votes of the voters in question, or whether some person or persons had fraudulently scratched the name of the said Gill without the knowledge and consent of the said voters; and that the said committee, after it has taken and considered this additional evidence, in connection with testimony heretofore taken, make its report to the House, with its recommendations, within 30 days after the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. POST. Unless the committee was able to compel the voter to tell how he voted, how could it be done?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It appears that a number of witnesses have deposed as to their ballots. The contestee takes his chances in this respect. If with the opportunity afforded, he is unable to make good his title to his seat, clouded as it is by the misconduct of the election officials, he will be the loser. This House at least, will have done its full duty, and omitted no effort to arrive at the very right of this controversy.

The statement of Mr. Dyer's offer to the committee, is found in the views of the minority, on page 10, to the effect that if he was given 30 days, in which to take the additional testimony, the expense to be borne by him, he would forfeit all pay as a Member of the House, in the event he failed to secure such testimony as would satisfy the committee, that he was entitled to his seat. Should the House hesitate to afford the time to take this testimony, having in mind that the votes cast at the excluded precincts amounted to over 1,500? Undoubtedly many of these votes were honestly cast for Gill, and many for Dyer. Who can determine with the material before him, what is the proportion of fraudulent votes to be excluded, and the proportion of legal votes to be credited respectively to the contestant, and contestee? At least the effort should be made to determine, as best we can, by the testimony of the voters themselves, how and for whom their votes were actually cast.

The contestee will have to take the testimony of Democrats to show that they scratched a Democratic ballot, in favor of a Republican candidate, so that the burden will be altogether upon him. This leave to take further testimony has been given in many cases. Such a case was that of Hopkins v. Kendall (2 H., p. 636). In that case after the committee had been considering the same for quite a while, it asked for and obtained from the House, authority for the parties to take additional testimony, necessary for the proper determination of the issue. With the facts now before us, we will merely give our best guess as to the candidate receiving the majority of the legal vote in this congressional district. This case should not be determined by guessing. We need more light to reach a proper conclusion, and the effort, at least, to secure this light, should be made.

I desire in this connection to call the attention of the House to the case of Jackson v. Smith (1 H., p. 711). In that case the committee not having the evidence necessary to enable it to reach an intelligent conclusion, asked for, and obtained authority from the House to take such testimony, as it deemed necessary to the determination of the questions of fact.

Mr. POST and Mr. BOOHER rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield me five minutes more?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER].

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I will not take up the gentleman's time, as his time is so short.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Then I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POST].

Mr. POST. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask if the contestee has requested the committee having his case under consideration to grant him the privilege of taking further testimony?

Mr. SAUNDERS. He did, as appears from the report on page 7.

Mr. POST. How long ago was that?

Mr. SAUNDERS. In March of this year. If the committee had afforded this authority at that time, all of the testimony now so much desired would be before us, to be passed upon according to its value.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have only a few minutes more, and wish to pursue my argument uninterruptedly.

Mr. WATSON. I know the gentleman does not want to make an erroneous impression.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, no. I do not. I do not want to get my facts mixed.

Mr. WATSON. As a matter of fact, no application was ever made to the election committee until after it had reached a conclusion.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have not stated anything to the contrary.

Mr. WATSON. And the case was tried and decided.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That stateemnt does not make an issue between us. Why does my friend inject a statement of that sort? I have not said anything to the contrary. I merely said that the request was made to the elections committee, and it ought to have been granted then, just as we ought to grant it, now that it is made to us.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. When the application was made by Mr. Dyer to the committee the committee had only expressed itself tentatively. That is to say, it had taken a tentative vote.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do no care a straw about that. I do not care if the committee had solemnly arrived at its conclusion. This matter is now before us as a body of judges, and the question is whether there is enough evidence in the record to enable us to declare that according to the very right of this case, Mr. Dyer ought to be unseated, and Mr. Gill seated? If this evidence is insufficient for a just conclusion, and additional evidence that will aid us to reach such a conclusion, may be secured within a reasonable time, then the opportunity at least, should be given to secure it.

The public interests will not suffer, the cause of justice will not be impaired, by affording the opportunity to procure this much-needed testimony. The standing of this House will be raised in the minds of all fair-minded people, should we make known by our action that we are willing to put forth every reasonable effort to reach a decision of this case on its merits, to decide it as judges, and not as partisans. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, as I have said you can prove any proposition out of the election cases, provided you go back far enough. The attitude of the partisans of other days, toward the disposition of the ordinary election case, was summed up in the flippant remark of old Thad Stevens, referring to a pending contest: "Which one of these damn rascals, is ours." [Applause.] We have measurably gotten away from that attitude. We are doing better. The election reports of the last 10 years show that when this House was in the control of the Republicans, they did full justice to many Democratic contestees. [Applause.] I see before me to-day more than one honored Member of this body whose case was tried before a Republican committee, and who retained his seat by the finding of that committee, when a partisan attitude would have afforded an adverse report on purely technical grounds. We can do one of two things with the case before us. Primarily the opportunity should be extended to take the additional testimony suggested as necessary, by the imperfect state of the record. Secondarily, should the House decide to refuse the request for this extension, and determine to act upon the present record, its action should be limited to declaring the seat in issue to be vacant. This will be in accord with the case cited, and with the further case of McDuffie against Davidson, in which the House after rejecting a number of precincts, declined to seat the contestant on the ground asserted in his behalf, namely that with these precincts excluded, he had a majority in the remainder. Whatever may be done with this case, we should seek to avoid even the suspicion of injustice. I believe in the square deal, everywhere, at all times, and under all circumstances, but somehow I believe that with respect to controversies of this character, there should be in some peculiar, special, and exceptional degree the application of such a deal, whatever may be the politics of the body which tries the issue. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield now seven minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, if the report of the majority of this committee is merely taking advantage of a technical error or a technical wrong, and seeks to seat a Democrat on a mere technicality, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], then I want the Democrats of this House all to vote to reject that report. But if it contains evidence that shows that a substantial and real crime has been committed by the officers holding the election of such a character as renders it impossible to find what was the true vote cast by the voters, then it is absolutely right to reject these boxes in the seven precincts which have been thrown out by the committee in their report, and I want to reject them, and if the result of that rejection is the election of Gill I want Gill seated. On this point they say that Gill, the contestant, has the burden of proof. I grant it. Let us see whether he sustains it. In precinct 2 Judge Bishop's case comes to my mind. His testimony is sufficient to satisfy any nonprejudiced mind that he voted ticket No. 56, and that ticket was marked and numbered and placed in the ballot box, but when the recount came that ticket could not be found, but a pretended ballot, unscratched and unnumbered, was there, and the contestee says this was Judge Bishop's ticket. Read his testimony and see. He knew his ticket was numbered, and he remembered because he asked the officer at the time, "What is the number on my ticket?" and then took his book out and put on the stub No. 56, but 56 was not found. These corrupt officers did not dare to have Judge Bishop's vote come up scratched, because he was a first-class man and had been active for the whole straight ticket, so his ticket was lost. But that is not all in reference to precinct No. 2. The judges of election in precinct No. 2 made returns in which they gave Gill 5 votes and they gave Dyer 199. The recount, had on demand of Gill, showed that Gill received 73 and Dyer 106, and, according to the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] a moment ago, he must be willing to throw out that box. He said if as many as 50 fraudulent votes are found in a box that box ought to be rejected. There are more than 50 fraudulent votes shown in this box. I have not got time to go over all of them, but I want to call attention to only a few salient points. That was in precinct No. 2. Has the contestant sustained the burden there? What about precinct No. 9. In the testimony on page 517, I believe, we find this evidence: A certain witness, who was a Republican judge of election, testified that when Maurer and Byrne completed the tally they had not given contestant a single vote, whereupon witness informed them that they must give him one vote, as witness himself voted for contestant. Witness glanced casually at a few of the Democratic ballots and saw three votes for Gill, whereupon Maurer said, "All right, give him three." That is precinct No. 9. Is the burden of proof sustained? Does not that show sufficient corruption to render the returns in that case worthless? Do you as sensible men believe that credence should be given to the returns of officers who make such a sham of their position? In precinct 2 there was a proven fraud of giving Gill 70 votes too few and Dyer 94 votes too many, even using the doctored ballots fixed up by the corrupt election officers.

In precinct 9 they were going to count Gill no single vote when a casual glance shows that there were 3 on the first bunch of the ballots right at hand when such a count was challenged. Now, let me say this. What has created some favor in this Chamber in behalf of Mr. Dyer was the charge that Gill had scratched Kinney and had gone to Kinney's friends after he was dead and told them he had befriended Kinney, and in that way gotten their support in the primary, and that after that Kinney's friends had discovered that it was false. It has been repeatedly stated on this floor by gentlemen arguing this case that Gill never denied scratching Kinney and voting for Dyer; and yet the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KENNEDY] yesterday evening late, from the testimony before the committee, read the evidence which showed that he had denied it. There, notwithstanding the statements of speakers on this floor, is the evidence before the committee. I will tell you what I think about that former contest. I think that former case in which Kinney was contesting the election of Dyer was as rotten as this. I think when Gill cast a vote in that election that the same class of officers of election took and scratched the ballot and put in Dyer's name, and elected Dyer then just as they are trying to elect him now. Who would have any regard for such officers and such judges of election——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. No; I have not the time.

When the committee found that character of officials making returns, and in whom they could not place any confidence, it was then either one of two things—either to throw out the returns or go back down there and hold the election over. Now, do you believe it was the function or the place of this committee to go back down to St. Louis and try to gather up all the voters who voted in that box? I admit that many of them actually did scratch Gill and wrote in Dyer. Here we find the judges of election falsifying the record, and we absolutely know that you can not go to a precinct in any place in the United States months afterwards and find out just how the vote was.

It was one of two things, to deny the people of that district the right of representation on this floor or to throw out those four, or five, or six, or seven rotten places; and this committee tells you they did not throw out all the rotten ones, but the rottenest. In discussing precincts 2 and 9 I have not tried to select the rottenest of the seven precincts rejected by the committee. I do not know about the others so well, but I know about 2 and 9. No man honestly wanting to arrive at a just conclusion would allow those returns to figure in the result of an election. And now, I ask, should the committee have granted contestant's request and gone back to hold that election over? They had fifty-and-odd voters of that precinct before them, and many of them were not certain how they voted. How could the committee have found out? By examining all of them? There were a few positive and a great many uncertain. How could they have found out how the vote was cast? Gentlemen, it is absolutely absurd, and I do not believe such a proposition as was sought to be maintained in this case has ever been acted on anywhere. It would have been absurd for this committee to have said that they would go down there and hold this investigation 18 months after this election was over. When the proposition was made, too, the adjournment of Congress was, we believed, only a short time away.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. I have but little more to say. Gentlemen, the whole evidence in this case is not familiar to many of us. It was gone over week after week and month after month by the Committee on Elections. That committee looked into the faces of the witnesses, having them all before them, and examined and cross-examined them, and the Democratic and Progressive members of that committee come as a unit before you and tell you that as to those seven boxes the judges of the election were so rotten and corrupt they could not believe them. Will you, because a little sympathy and prejudice has been injected into this case by the charge that Gill voted against the nominee, which he denies, overthrow the deliberate judgment of your committee, who are as honest men as we are?

I took the opportunity to ask, in talking to an old friend of mine, whom I know, "What kind of a man is Gill?" and he replied, "He is as clean as you are." I do not know how clean I am, but I know how clean I think I am. I know if that statement is true, Gill did not vote against Kinney and then lie about it. And when a clean man comes before you, the thing to do is not to eject him on the ground that he was a traitor when he denies it. And when you have got the proof of the treachery of the officers of election, who made the charge and who are guilty of all sorts of fraud, as proven here, how much credit would you give to the fact that they showed a ticket with Kinney's name scratched and Dyer's written in two or three years ago? They put up the same kind of a job on Kinney then that they put up on Gill now. It is the same kind of thing. I want to say, gentlemen, that if ever a case was rotten and reeking with corruption, if ever an election fraud deserved the stamp of the disapproval of the Democratic Party placed on it, it is in this case. I do not blame Dyer, but it was the little petty men, maneuvering with the political tricksters of that ward, who perpetrated the fraud—who, perhaps, could not do anything straight if they wanted to do so. Kinney's brother, running for the senate, traded for his own benefit, or was traded for, and got 300 votes for himself, while Dyer got votes on the other side. If there had been only a trading of votes, the validity of the election would not be affected; but if the judges were so corrupt that no faith in the verity of their returns can be had, then those returns must be rejected. In my judgment, these officers of election, in order to carry out their political trade, so falsified the ballots and the returns that there is no truth in them. The whole thing is corrupt, and corruption must not be allowed to triumph. Let it be forever known that such election officers can not elect men to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be permitted to present my argument without interruption, as my time is limited.

I have no feeling in this case whatever. I am fond of the sitting Member, my colleague Mr. Dyer, because he has proven a useful Member and an able representative of the people of his district. I also like the contestant. Before he moved into the twelfth district he was a resident of mine and ran for Congress against me. He acted honorably and decently in that campaign, and certainly I want to do him justice.

This contest differs materially from the many previous ones that have come from the twelfth congressional district of Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. How many have we had from there? Can you tell?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman answer that one question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will ask the privilege to continue, because I have only a limited time.

Heretofore these contests were mostly based on charges of irregularities and frauds preferred by Republicans against Democrats, while in this instance the Democratic contestant brings charges of this character exclusively against the election officials and voters of his own party. It is, in other words, the result of a feud in the Democratic Party, of a contest between two Democratic factions, one led by contestant and the other by the Democratic boss of the fifth ward of St. Louis, Michael E. Kinney. Not a single Republican vote is questioned or challenged, and no blame whatever attaches to the contestee, my colleague Mr. Dyer. This is frankly admitted by the majority of the committee who state in their report—

> That no charge of misconduct or impropriety attaches to Mr. Dyer personally; that he was not a participant in the conspiracies, irregularities, or frauds which gave rise to this contest, and has served as an honorable Member of this House.

At the outset, then, it must be put down as an incontrovertible fact that if frauds were committed at the election which resulted in the return of my colleague to Congress they were Democratic frauds perpetrated exclusively by adherents of that party. The majority report therefore and every Democratic vote cast for that report in this House is a distinct indictment against Democrats.

Before I proceed to tell the House what I know as a Representative of St. Louis of the Democratic family feud to which I have referred let me briefly analyze the majority report to ascertain what these alleged frauds consist of. It is claimed that the Democratic judges and clerks of election in seven precincts of the fifth ward had entered into a conspiracy to defeat their own party candidate and had accomplished this purpose in the first place by false counts and, secondly, by scratching contestant's name and inserting that of contestee on ballots in the hands of alleged illiterate voters, many of whom, it is asserted, were really not illiterate. Contestant's case rests entirely on these allegations. Now, let us see. Who are those judges and clerks? Are they representatives of the dominant faction or of a political ring? No; they are official appointees of a bipartisan board of election commissioners selected for a term of years upon the recommendation of the party central committee. This fact certainly does not support the theory of a conspiracy, and, what is more, there is nothing in the evidence to support it. It is true that discrepancies were discovered between the original count and the official recount of the ballots, but, considering the intellectual caliber of these election judges and the totally unaccustomed and difficult task they had to perform during 22 or 24 consecutive hours, these discrepancies might have been unintentional mistakes just as easily as a result of a conspiracy to defraud. If the latter, would these judges not have guarded against detection, knowing that an official recount would be had, by making the tally sheets correspond with the ballots? And how will the majority reconcile their theory with the fact that in several of the seven suspicious precincts which they propose to throw out contestee actually gained votes on the official recount? In other words, he had been credited with less votes by the judges than he was entitled to. Does that look as if the poll judges had been in a conspiracy to count him in? The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that what the majority of the committee mistakes for a conspiracy was simply a consensus of political opinion among certain Democrats to the effect that their candidate for Congress should be beaten because they had found him to be disloyal to their party candidate at the previous election. I shall refer to that more fully later on.

The second ground on which the majority base their decision is the manner and extent to which the Democratic judges of election in the seven precincts heretofore mentioned assisted illiterate voters of their own party in the preparation of their ballots. The assumption of contestant, accepted by the majority, is that these judges usurped the rights of the voters by substituting Dyer's name for Gill's on the ballots, and it is further assumed that they did this whether or not called upon to assist in the preparation of the ballots. It was incumbent on the contestant to substantiate this charge by irrefutable evidence. In this, however, he has utterly failed, and his whole case has collapsed right here. So weak and unsatisfactory was the evidence adduced by contestant on this point that the majority of the committee, endeavoring to shift the burden of proof in the last minute, asked the contestee why he had not furnished proof to the contrary, but when he asked for an opportunity to do so, offering to adduce the evidence within 30 days, the majority, by a vote, denied him this opportunity. It is proper to state in this connection that there was one Democrat on the committee who refused to lend his hand to this palpable denial of justice. It was the distinguished gentleman from New York, the honorable chairman of the committee, Judge GOLDFOGLE. He had seen distinguished service on the bench and, acting as a judge rather than a partisan, was determined to administer evenhanded justice in this case. As mentioned in the majority report he did not only vote in favor of allowing contestee to furnish the lacking evidence, but afterwards made a motion himself to have the committee take "such further testimony as it shall deem necessary to the determination of the questions of fact." But this motion, too, was voted down, although in the very precedent which the majority cite in justification of their action (Giddings v. Clark, in the Forty-second Congress), it is laid down as a rule that the right to take further testimony shall be granted to a sitting Member if thereby he would be enabled "to obtain such material evidence as will establish his right to the seat." This is exactly the case here.

Although I hold that on the evidence presented the House should here and now decide this contest in favor of the sitting Member, I shall willingly assent to the taking of further testimony, because, in my judgment, this would enable every fair-minded Member of this House to come to the same conclusion. In fact, if ever the rule just cited should find application it is in this case. And this brings me back to the evidence now before us.

The total vote cast in the seven precincts of the fifth ward—the vote in all other parts of the district being unchallenged—was 1,537, which, according to the official recount, were distributed as follows: Dyer, 825; Gill, 406; Progressive, Socialist, and scattering, 231; and "no vote," 75. There is no complaint as to the 231 for the Progressive, Socialist, and so forth, so we can deduct those from the total of 1,537, leaving 1,306. Of these the contestant received 406, which, naturally, he does not challenge; hence, taking off 406 from 1,306, we have left 900 votes to further analyze. Now, the contestant complained only of Democratic ballots cast in those seven precincts; hence we should deduct as absolutely unchallenged the 388 Republican ballots, which will leave a balance of 512 votes to explain—the difference between 1,025 undisputed by contestant and 1,537, the total vote in these precincts. "These 512 votes," says the minority report, "constitute the entire number of Democratic ballots in these precincts which had Gill's name scratched." On 437 of these Dyer's name was written underneath, while on 75 Gill was scratched, but no name substituted. As the 75 were counted for neither one nor the other of the candidates, the whole controversy reduces itself to the question of the reliability of 437 votes. It was the sole matter to be decided by the committee. And how did they decide it? By throwing out all of the 437 ballots? Oh, no. Even of these votes, they knew, there are too many whose integrity and correctness had already been established to risk awarding the seat to the contestant on such a showing. Therefore, to be on the safe side they decided to throw out all the 1,537 votes cast in all the seven precincts, the 1,100 honest ones together with the 437 whose reliability has been questioned, and by doing so they succeeded in squeezing out a majority of just 67 for contestant. The excuse given for this attempted wrong is that the returns from all those seven precincts were—I quote the language of the majority report—"so tainted with fraud that they must be considered as utterly unreliable," a statement which is refuted even by the known facts. If 1,100 ballots out of 1,537 are conceded by both sides to be straight and honest votes, unreliability can, at the most, be asserted against the balance, namely, the 437, but not against all 1,537. Yet the committee asks this House in all seriousness to disfranchise 1,100 citizens the integrity of whose votes no one has called in question. It is in your power, gentlemen, to accede to this demand, but the only possible excuse you will have for it is that contestant is a Democrat, and that the Democratic majority can do what it pleases.

I could rest the case right here, but let us see about those 437 ballots which are alleged to be tainted. They are Democratic ballots, as I said before, on which Gill's name was scratched and Dyer's written in. We are not without evidence as to those ballots. It was the duty of contestant, as I said before, to submit evidence as to every one of them. He had the names and addresses of all these voters, and more than that, he knew from the recount and the poll books how each had voted and what Democrats had scratched him. The record shows that before he started to subpœna witnesses he circularized the whole ward with letters asking for information from those who had voted against him, and how many did he finally subpœna as witnesses? A total of 56. And what about the other 381 who had scratched him? We do not know, the committee does not know; in fact, nobody knows, except perhaps Mr. Gill, and he will not tell us. But I ask you are we not justified in concluding that the reason why contestant did not summon them as witnesses was that their answers did not suit him? And what about those 56? Why 24 confirmed their ballots, 14 were uncertain, and 18 contradicted their ballots. If the same relation held good throughout all the seven precincts, and we deducted all the contradicted ballots from the majority for contestee, he would still have a majority of several hundred votes. In the absence of actual evidence this would be the only fair way of reaching a conclusion. But what the committee and the House should insist upon is the evidence. To throw out 1,537 votes upon testimony questioning about 1 per cent of them would, as is justly pointed out in the minority report, be a grosser fraud than any supposed to have been perpetrated at the polls.

To make a case the majority points out that voters were not sworn as to their illiteracy. That is true; but ever since the Supreme Court of Missouri has decided that the statute requiring oaths is only directory, oaths have not been administered in any St. Louis elections, and the judges frankly testified to this fact. Why so many voters were assisted, even some who were not really illiterates, is lucidly set forth in the minority report. To scratch a ballot correctly, everyone will admit, requires more than a mere ability to write your name.

The more ignorant voters—and that class naturally abounds in a cheap lodging-house ward like the fifth—did not know how to scratch, yet they wanted to get even with Gill because of his party disloyalty to Thomas Kinney, who had been their leader and friend. Hence they asked the judges to assist them from fear that if unassisted they might invalidate their ballots. The scratching was usually done by the same judge in each polling place in accordance with an old practice whereby Democratic judges assist Democratic voters and Republican judges Republican voters. This accounts for the fact that so many of the scratched ballots show the same handwriting in each precinct. The judges frankly admitted this to be a fact, and made no attempt at concealment.

So much for the minor facts in the case. I say minor facts, because the thing of real importance and which alone furnishes an ample explanation for Mr. Gill's defeat I have so far touched only slightly. It was not a conspiracy of the election officials, but a state of mind of the voters of the district, and especially of the fifth ward. The majority in their report admit it and other speakers have referred to it, but as a St. Louisian I can testify to it from a knowledge of the local situation. The contestant had incurred the enmity of a powerful element in the Democratic Party, because in the 1910 election he had scratched the Democratic candidate for Congress, the late Thomas Kinney, and had voted for Dyer. Tom Kinney, as he was familiarly called, was the Tim Sullivan of the fifth ward. He had befriended the poor and needy and was always willing to help those in trouble. In a ward where there are so many of this class you may imagine what this means, especially when you remember that this very class is as strong in their affection as in their enmity. Tom quite naturally became a political leader by whom they swore, and after his death his memory became sacred to them, and they naturally transferred their allegiance to his brother, Michael, who, politically, stepped into Tom's shoes. When it became known in St. Louis that Gill had knifed Tom Kinney there was not a Democrat who was willing to bet a dollar on his election. The consensus of opinion was that "his goose was cooked." In order to save the day, the congressional committee was called together and in formal meeting demanded his withdrawal from the ticket, several committeemen informing him that there was no chance of his election.

It is unnecessary to go further, Mr. Chairman, except to record the result which was that the contestee ran behind his ticket in every ward of the district and lost the fifth ward altogether. In that ward meetings had been called in which the word was passed around to defeat Gill, and considering all the circumstances it is surprising that he received as many votes as he did. That he was fairly and squarely beaten by Democrats refusing him their support will be corroborated by prominent leaders of the St. Louis Democracy, and it may, indeed, be said that he has no one but himself to blame.

Reverting to the charge of conspiracy among the Democratic election officials, let me ask what reason could they possibly have to defeat their own party candidate, except that he had proved unworthy of their friendship? They had loyally supported him at the primaries, but as soon as they had discovered that he had deceived them with his professions of friendship and admiration of Tom Kinney, they had a double reason to turn against him, one being that he had knifed their erstwhile leader, and the other that he had, not to use the short and ugly word, posed as his friend. Instead of a conspiracy to defraud, it was a more or less concerted action dictated by honest convictions, and while these men, typical as they are of the population of the ward, might be very plain people, their example of indignant resentment of political duplicity, in my judgment, deserves high commendation rather than criticism from every standpoint of good morals. A St. Louis jury, it seems, has just indorsed this view by acquitting one of these election judges who had been indicted as a result of the Dyer-Gill contest. It was the first, and will no doubt be the last, of these trials, for it is to be presumed that the prosecuting attorney had selected the strongest case to secure a conviction.

My conclusions are that contestant has failed utterly to establish by evidence his right to the seat now occupied by my colleague Mr. Dyer. If such evidence is available he has not adduced it. As it is known that he did address the 437 Democrats who scratched his name, the only logical conclusion is that the answers of at least 383 were not only not satisfactory to him but were favorable to contestee. Under these circumstances, not to allow contestee an opportunity to procure this testimony will amount to a denial of justice and to a determination, on the part of the majority of this House, to oust a Republican, right or wrong. The only other construction that could be placed on such a verdict will be that, in the opinion of the majority, Democratic voters have no right to scratch their tickets, and when they do that the Democrats in Congress arrogate to themselves the right of correcting the will of the people. Such usurpation is bound to be resented by the honest voters of this country, and I trust there will be enough self-respecting Democrats on this floor to make such an outrage impossible. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the evidences of fraud so clearly and vividly portrayed yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON], I want to suggest that this House and every man in it who has served here during the last 10 or 12 years has other proof, strong, irresistible, convincing proof, that fraud was committed in the fifth ward of St. Louis at the election held in November, 1912. I unhesitatingly give it as my judgment that there has not been an honest congressional election held in the fifth ward in St. Louis in 12 years. And it is not Republicans that are at fault, nor is it Progressives, nor is it Democrats.

The shameful conditions, so long existing, due to the facts that the community there has been and is blighted by the political boss described by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], and is populated by a lot of miserable underlings who are subservient to the will of the boss. Three times has the seat of one Democrat from that district been challenged since I have been a Member of this House. Twice the occupant of that seat was ejected and driven in shame from this House, although he came here with apparently six or seven thousand majority of the votes to his credit. In his third contest, by reason of a promise that he would never run again, as I understand, he was permitted to hold his seat, which no doubt would have been taken from him, and justly so in all likelihood, if he had not made that promise. That man was followed by another Democrat, whose seat was also challenged for frauds committed in the fifth ward, and he by the vote of this House was driven from this Chamber. I am not certain as to whether the next gentleman's seat was challenged or not; but I do know that the present sitting Member, Mr. Dyer, had his seat challenged in the Sixty-second Congress by Mr. Thomas E. Kinney. That contest never was decided by the House, for the reason the contestant, Mr. Kinney, died before it was reached. And now Michael J. Gill contests the seat of the sitting Member from that district, Mr. Dyer, making at least six contests in 14 years from that district, and in every one of them fraud was charged and fraud was proven to have been perpetrated by the political bosses who dominated those precincts. My colleague [Mr. BARTHOLDT] refers to these same bosses as the "idols" of the people.

The distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] took the floor a few minutes ago and by his argument succeeded in convincing me that he is of that class of "doubting Thomases" who must put his finger in the wounded side and must see and examine the pierced hand before he can or will believe. He is such a great lawyer, so rigid and judicious in all his views, that he spurns the judgment of his colleagues who constitute the committee that investigated and reported this election contest, though that committee is composed of able and distinguished lawyers, who are justly recognized for their ability and integrity and whose seats have never been contested. There are gentlemen here, perhaps, whose seats have been challenged and against whom adverse reports have been made by a Republican committee of a Republican House, but which adverse reports were subsequently, for some reason, by the action of a Republican House, recommitted to the Republican committee, and there the contest was permitted to sleep the sleep that knows no waking. We find a gentleman here insisting on abstract propositions of law and demanding abstract proofs which he knows or ought to know, from the very nature of things, can not be produced. He must remember that recently, in his own State, a man suffered the extreme penalty of the law upon circumstantial evidence. Oh, the gentleman would have us prove all of these things by direct, conclusive evidence, which, as a lawyer, he knows, and every gentleman who advocates the proposition knows, is impossible. Fraud is seldom proven by direct and positive evidence. It ought not to be required in cases like this.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. RUCKER. I regret I have not the time to yield. But I will not now seem to be discourteous to the gentleman. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Just for a question.

Mr. RUCKER. Then I will yield. Make it short.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will ask the gentleman to explain to the House what he thinks about the acquittal of those same election officers by a jury in St. Louis, Mo.?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Dyer, was frank enough yesterday to say that although the ballots were exhibited it was impossible to identify the voters, because under the order of the Supreme Court of Missouri the trial judge was instructed that the ballots must be pasted on a cardboard, so that the number on the ballot corresponding to the voter's number on the poll book could not be seen; and hence nobody could tell who cast a given ballot which was assailed, and, besides, the State had to rely for its evidence very largely upon the very scoundrels who perpetrated the fraud in its effort to establish fraud. The gentleman knows that there could not be a conviction under such circumstances. However, I do not want to be diverted to the discussion of that question——

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. RUCKER. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RUCKER. Gentlemen argue that a reason for this great slump of votes in the fifth ward is found in the wondrous power and personal influence of Thomas E. Kinney, a man strong among his fellows, a hard-working man, a man who sprang from the humble walks of life, and who, by uprightness of character and fidelity to duty, won and held the esteem and friendship of the voters of the fifth ward. They say he was a just and true man. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to reply that in the last congressional election the people had a chance to vote for such a man in the person of Mr. Gill, a man who has earned his livelihood by the dripping of sweat from his brow as he bent over the workbench, a man who, even during the pendency of this contest, has gone to the neighboring town of Alexandria, Va., and there worked over a heated furnace blowing glass, in order to earn by his daily toil the dollars necessary to support his devoted wife and the children God has given him.

I appeal to you for justice and fairness to such a man, a man whom Dr. BARTHOLDT truly says is honorable and decent, and everybody who knows him knows this to be true. They say the wondrous influence of Thomas Kinney over the minds and actions of men, and which lost none of its power when Kinney died, was put in action by Mike Kinney in order to avenge the alleged wrong that Gill had done Tom Kinney, and that influence took the votes from Gill.

Let me call your attention to the fact that in the twelfth congressional district of Missouri, outside of the fifth ward, Mr. Gill received within 10 per cent of the number of votes cast for the Democratic candidate for governor. The shortage of votes suffered by Mr. Gill, outside of the fifth ward, possibly measures the influence of the great power over men that was held and exercised by Tom Kinney. It may be that that 10 per cent does reflect his power; but I say to you that when it comes to the fifth ward—that one ward which has given so much trouble, that has been so productive of election contests, which has cost the people so much in dollars and cents; that one ward against which more fraud has been charged and proven than in any other district in the whole United States—in that ward the slump of more than 60 per cent of the vote represents the perfidy, the shame, and the corruption of those judges and clerks of election. I am a Missourian, and I will talk plainly. I have no respect for men such as most of those judges and clerks are, nor do I fear them. Consider all this dodging around as to how these judges and clerks were appointed. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] a moment ago said, in effect, that they were appointed in order to revenge the wrongs done some one. Upon whose recommendation were they appointed? The brother-in-law of Tom Kinney, that man Egan, that man who shamelessly and arrogantly boasted that the judges and clerks "know their business"; that it was not necessary to see them all because "they know their business" recommended them. Oh, yes; they do know their master's voice; they were subservient to the superior will and the superior minds of this political boss, who succeeded the "idol" who they say sprang from obscurity into local political power and prestige in that community, and they did the bidding of their new boss. Justice and decency will be unknown in that community until all bosses are dethroned and shorn of power.

But let me say, do you Republicans think—and let me ask the same question of my Democratic friends—that these frauds that have been committed and these outrageous things that have been shown here are the result of influences that survived the death of Tom Kinney? Do you really think so? They tell us Kinney was a good man. I am willing to admit it. I have no harsh word for him. I assume he was a good man, because all of Mr. Dyer's friends say he was. Under the law, from time immemorial, it has been held in all jurisdictions in enlightened civilization that statements made by one in extremity are admissible in evidence, though not under oath, because made in the presence of death. Hear what Mr. Kinney said about Mr. Dyer just a short time before this contest began. Kinney, whose contest was unsettled at the time he died, said in specification 47 against Mr. Dyer—and he had a whole book of charges against his friend Mr. Dyer, this splendid young man, against whom I have no word of complaint. Mr. Kinney charged—

That in said congressional district there were a large number of voters who were legally and lawfully registered and entitled to vote at said election who had expressed and declared their intention of voting for contestant at said election and were using all lawful and honorable means at their command to assist contestant—

That is, Kinney—

but contestee—

That is, Dyer—

who was a member of Gov. Hadley's staff—

A Republican governor of Missouri, the last we will ever have—took offense at the action of such voters in supporting contestant, informed them of his official position, and threatened and bullied a large number of such persons by threatening them with arrest and locking them up in jail.

That is what Tom Kinney said about Mr. Dyer. He said that he, Mr. Dyer, had police officers of the city of St. Louis following around after people who were supposed to be his friends; that a Republican politician who owned a saloon—directed such police officers to take such voters to headquarters of contestee—

To Mr. Dyer's headquarters—and that he, the said contestee, arrogantly, insolently, and unlawfully interrogated and cross-examined such voters, and demanded to know the reason why they were working against him, and threatened them with being arrested, put in jail, and prosecuted.

In another place he charged that Mr. Dyer had detectives following his friends, and so forth.

Gentlemen of the House, that is what Tom Kinney said of Mr. Dyer just before he bade this world farewell. He never retracted these grave accusations. He left them as a part of the permanent record of this House. He said solemnly that Mr. Dyer was guilty of all those odious things; and yet, in the twinkling of an eye, as soon as Tom Kinney's spirit had taken its flight to the God who gave it, the whole atmosphere changed, and with a rumbling noise we find it going forth, surging throughout the district, in the hearts of all voters, that this man Gill betrayed Kinney, and therefore, according to the edict of the boss, it was agreed, "We will betray the Democracy of the district. We will not only vote against Gill for his alleged offense; we will not only do that, but we will take this herd of voters, body and soul, and deliver them into the camp of the Republican Party." Great God, you know that is not true! It is true, perhaps, that when a man does you wrong, when a man has betrayed you, your friends may resent it to the extent of scratching his name from the ballot; but a man who has ever pronounced the name of Democracy and received approval from on high will not be guilty of such a horrible thing as voting the Republican ticket, even in passion and for revenge, and it is nonsense to say he will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why should a man blight his political hopes by doing such an unrighteous act as that? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

But, they tell us, that is exactly what was done by some of these election fiends, these men whose only province in life is to do the bidding of superiors—these wharf rats, if you please. I want to say in passing that I have no doubt there are good men there; some good men who vote the Republican ticket and the Progressive ticket, and many good men who vote the Democratic ticket. But you can not make me believe they would commit such a heinous political sin. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], who has returned to the room, is unable, with all his legal ability and astuteness, to make me agree to his contention, that we must in contested election cases prove our case as you would have to prove a murder case. He can not make anyone believe that. You do not have to prove grounds of contest beyond a reasonable doubt. When we show fraud on the rampage, fraud here and there; when we find fraud roaming over the district and permeating this precinct and that precinct; when we find evidences of it here and yonder; when we discover its loathsome presence in the polling place; when we find those who were sworn to obey and support the majesty of the law of that great State becoming willing tools in the hands of men who are bent on destroying the hopes and ambitions of men; when we find all these things the law of reason and justice, of decency and integrity, of purity and honor, demand that—when fraud has so permeated the election and returns and so controlled the conduct of those charged with conducting the election as to make it impossible for mortal man to separate the good from the bad, impossible to determine how many votes were honestly cast for one or the other—our duty is to cast all the polluted ballots aside.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. GOLDFOGGLE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri five minutes more.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me appeal to this House as a citizen of Missouri, and not alone in behalf of Mike Gill, for the Lord knows he can go back to the blast furnace and again blow glass to earn a living for his wife and children if this House so decrees. It is not for him only that I plead, but in part for the imperial State of Missouri, whose escutcheon has been tarnished by the oft-repeated criminal practices and conduct of political bosses in the fifth ward of St. Louis. I appeal to you by your votes to-day to do as the Republican Party did when it was in power, and say to those people back there that before any man can sit on this floor to represent that great district of Missouri he must come with the majority of votes cast for him outside of the fifth ward, until such time as public sentiment, decency, honesty, and integrity shall crystallize and drive the political boss into hiding and permit honest men in that community to have an opportunity to cast their votes as their judgment directs and have them honestly counted as cast. I appeal to you in behalf of the State of Missouri. I appeal to you in behalf of the purity of elections everywhere. And you, my Republican friends—the Lord knows you have done wrong often enough—I take this opportunity to warn you. Now is the day and time for repentance. I appeal to you to cast a vote here in harmony with your best judgment. Did you really think Jim Butler, with 6,000 majority, practiced fraud, and for that reason vote against him? If so, cast a vote to-day to repudiate fraud and justify the action of the Democracy of the twelfth district in choosing the Representative of their choice. The distinguished lawyer from the great old Commonwealth, the mother of States and of Presidents, tells you that a special reason ought to be shown before we vote to cast out these fraudulent votes and give Mr. Gill the seat to which he was elected. He makes the specious plea that conclusive proofs must be offered. He advises that we go back to Missouri and take evidence again. We did not do that in other cases. I say to this House we have no right to hold another election in the twelfth district of Missouri at the suggestion of the gentleman who does not even claim the record before the House entitles him to hold the seat he has so long held without just warrant for doing so.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Make your question very short, please.

Mr. ANTHONY. Did the gentleman vote to unseat Jim Butler?

Mr. RUCKER I think I did not.

Mr. MANN. I know you did not.

Mr. RUCKER. I will accept your statement and admit you are right. But, Mr. Speaker, it is always right to vote against Republicans when any question of politics is involved. Suppose, however, I voted wrong then, will you retaliate by voting wrong to-day?

Mr. MANN. No; I will not; but the gentleman will a second time, though. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RUCKER. I am inclined to think the gentleman has previously made up his mind to do that which his conscience may hereafter upbraid him for doing. I hope he will vote right once, but fear he will not. But I care not. I appeal to those whom I believe will do the right. I appeal to you gentlemen, and I tell you these things which the gentleman from Virginia says may have happened accidentally did not happen accidentally. The thief does not run his hand in your pocket accidentally; he does it deliberately. Did those judges and clerks make false returns accidentally, did they? You know they did not. I do not believe that the true version has been given. I do not believe this wrong was done Mike Gill because Tom Kinney understood and believed that Gill had voted against him. I believe it is the result of a conspiracy to elect a Republican Member of Congress and a Democratic State senator. Gill is a good Democrat, an honest, conscientious man, and he has stated in this solemn presence, his future at stake, with every aspiration and ambition of his life dependent upon the action of this House—he has stood here and told you in the presence of his God, invoking the presence of his sainted mother to witness the declaration, that he never voted for a Republican in his life. That is enough to establish his Democracy and refute the charge against him. I say to you gentlemen of the House, in my judgment the wrongs we complain of were not accidental; they were deliberately perpetrated. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining on both sides?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has 60 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Illinois has 52 minutes remaining.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE].

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted me I can only refer to some of the more important features of the case.

The contested-election case of Gill against Dyer is being considered without regard to party affiliation and will bring the members of all parties together on common ground, for the reason that the seat of a sitting Member in Congress is involved who in no way was connected with the alleged fraud or conspiracy. This fact was recognized by the majority of the committee, who, in their report, say:

The voluminous testimony in the case, comprising 2,205 pages of closely printed matter and a multitude of exhibits, was given careful reading, searching attention, and painstaking consideration. In view of the fact that no charge of misconduct or impropriety attaches to Mr. Dyer personally, that he was not a participant in the conspiracies, irregularities, or frauds which gave rise to this contest, and has served as an honorable Member of this House, the discharge of the serious and important duty of this committee was rendered the more difficult.

In the consideration of the evidence, listening to the arguments of the parties to the contest and their counsel, and an examination of their briefs, it is clearly evident that the real cause for the defeat of Gill can also be found in the report of the majority on page 5, which says:

The conclusion at which the committee has thus arrived is strengthened by the fact, contended for by the contestant and deduced from the evidence, that some of the judges and clerks of election entertained what might well be called a political factional antagonism against Gill for what they conceived he had done as a voter in the election of 1910. In that election Thomas Kinney was the Democratic candidate and Mr. Dyer the Republican candidate for Congress in the twelfth district of Missouri. Dyer was declared elected and took his seat. Kinney contested the election. Subsequently and in 1912 Gill was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Congress, receiving Kinney's support at the primaries. While this Kinney-Dyer contest was in progress a recount of the ballots was had.

An examination of Gill's ballot revealed the fact that he had scratched Kinney and voted for Dyer. Thomas Kinney died before the disclosure was made, and Michael E. Kinney, his brother, succeeded him in the Democratic leadership of the ward. Gill was called before the congressional committee of the ward to make an explanation of his scratched ballot. He stated that there must have been some mistake. That explanation was not accepted, and Kinney and his brother-in-law, Thomas Egan, Democratic committeeman for the fifth ward, thereupon made known to their followers that they were strongly opposed to Gill's election and desired his defeat.

See page 59 of hearings.

Now, let us examine the evidence offered before the committee:

Those two pages—

And so forth.

Those two pages of the record, 2084 and 2079, gentlemen, show very plainly that in the November, 1910, election, when Kinney ran as the Democratic candidate for Congress, that Gill scratched Thomas E. Kinney's name, the Democratic candidate, and voted for the Republican candidate.

When this information reached Michael Kinney, a brother of Senator Thomas E. Kinney, and who had recently died, Michael Kinney and his friends immediately stated that with this corroborative proof of Gill's duplicity and deceit in their possession that they would not under any circumstances support Gill for election.

So at Michael Kinney's request a meeting of the Democratic congressional committee for the twelfth district was called at once, the members of this committee being, ex officio, also the members of the Democratic city central committee for the seven wards and parts of wards comprising the district. This meeting was held about two weeks before the November election at the Democratic headquarters, and six of the seven committeemen attended, only Daly, of the seventeenth ward, being absent. Thomas Eagan, of the fifth, and John Clooney, of the sixteenth, from whom Kinney had gotten the records showing Gill's vote, were both there. By invitation of the committee Kinney remained at the meeting, and Gill was present by request.

Kinney asked Gill if he had ever voted for any Republicans, and was answered that he had voted "for maybe five or six for minor offices." Asked if he had voted for the congressional nominee, Kinney—two years ago—said that he thought that he had. The records showing his vote were then shown to Gill by Kinney, who asked Gill if he had not voted for Dyer. Gill answered that he thought "it was a mistake." All present then looked at the records, and Gill said, "I still say it is a mistake," but would not say "yes" or "no" whether he voted for Dyer. Kinney then asked Gill if he had taken any interest in the election two years ago. Gill answered that "it was an off year," but that he "went around and made a couple of speeches." Kinney asked him where, and he said "in Fitzsimmons's ward"—the fifteenth—which statement Fitzsimmons, who was present as committeeman from that ward, promptly denied. Gill said nothing further, and Fitzsimmons said to him, "The best thing I could say about it, you ought to withdraw from the ticket"; but Gill said he would not withdraw. Then Griffin, a member of the twenty-third ward and chairman of the committee, got up and said: "Tom Kinney had a great following in his ward; he was well liked down there, and this talk and record here is bound to get to the people down there, and they surely are not going to vote for a man who voted against Tom Kinney; the people would not vote for a man who had voted against Tom Kinney."

Griffin also asked Gill to withdraw, in which request he was joined by Rice, the committeeman from the seventh ward, but Gill still refused to withdraw. The testimony in detail covering what happened at this meeting is set out in the record on the pages referred to on page 10 of brief of contestee.

However, the minority of the committee draw an entirely different conclusion and dissent to the finding of the majority of the committee. The minority contend that there was no intended fraud or conspiracy on the part of anyone in the fifth ward or elsewhere in the twelfth congressional district of Missouri to defeat Gill and elect Dyer. It was simply a psychological condition of mind that existed in the fifth ward. The strange and complex people, residing largely in boarding houses, lodging houses, and tenements, honestly believed that they had a serious grievance against the contestant in this case. They were extremely wrought up in their belief that Gill had "knifed" their leader, Kinney.

Tom Kinney said:

"I don't know how he (Gill) got as many votes as he did; he must have stolen them." And (p. 1193) "I knew we had enough to beat him, and that is all I was concerned with." And (p. 1192):

"Q. You testified that you had a hundred or more people at your meeting when you gave out the words to defeat Mr. Gill?—A. We did, we had more than that; we had one that went about 500, after we gave the same order out at one of our regular meetings."

Other witnesses also testify that they had plenty of votes to defeat Gill long before the election. State Senator Michael Kinney, whose brother Gill scratched two years before, testified, at page 1250:

"Just as soon as that report (of Gill scratching Kinney in 1910) went out, why it was around—they were up in arms—everybody that met me and asked me, I told them about it * * *. The story was circulated; if Dyer was good enough for Gill to vote for two years ago, he was good enough for them to vote for this year * * *. I voted for Dyer, the first Republican I ever did vote for, and I hope it will be the last."

Other witnesses to the preelection uprising against Gill are Judge Bishop (above mentioned), now Democratic assistant circuit attorney, who said (p. 318): "It was noised all through the ward; had been for some little time before the election." And Thomas Burke, a voter (p. 422), said: "I just told him (the judge) to scratch Mr. Gill's name * * * I had my mind made up"—because Gill had "double-crossed" the Democratic ticket two years before. And (p. 423) Burke testified further:

"Q. Did that seem to be the unanimous feeling up there?—A. Yes."

This was in precinct 17, which the majority would throw out, on testimony, about only 4 contradicted ballots out of 200 cast.

Then William Hoppe, another voter and not an election official, though active in the ward, testified (p. 1301):

"Q. So that there was a general or widespread feeling among the Democrats, as far as your knowledge extended?—A. The whole ward and outside the ward, any place you go to."

So the word went over the district, and the very thing happened that has happened many times before, that a wrong, real or fancied, has caused people to vote against one supposed to be the wrongdoer.

Again, referring to the report of the majority on page 7, the committee says:

After the committee in the month of March last had taken a tentative vote on the question what, if any, precinct returns should be rejected, and a majority had expressed their views favorable to the proposition that the polls of the seven precincts mentioned ought to be set aside, the contestee, Mr. Dyer, applied in writing to the committee for leave to give further testimony to show what votes were actually cast for him and for Mr. Gill, respectively, in these excluded precincts. After hearing the contestee, the committee denied the application, the chairman of the committee and Messrs. McKENZIE and SHREVE dissenting. A motion by the chairman that the committee recommend to the House the adoption of a resolution authorizing and empowering the committee to take such further testimony as it shall deem necessary to the determination of the questions of fact in this contest, either by it or by subcommittee, was likewise denied.

As has already been stated, there was a recount of the votes under the laws of the State of Missouri, and the contestant had received the benefit of all of the errors made by the judges in counting the ballots, and it is held by the minority that the case should rest there as regards this feature of the contest.

The majority failing to concur in our contention leads us to feel that the request of Mr. Dyer to take further testimony should have been granted. This contention was concurred in by the distinguished chairman of the committee, who made a motion to have the Committee on Elections take this further testimony. This was also voted down, as set forth in the majority report. Chairman GOLDFOGLE has seen distinguished service as a judge in New York City and has served with distinction as a Member of this House for 15 years, and the fact that he took the position that he did on this request shows that it was reasonable and just and ought in fairness to be granted. The House should, without question, overrule the majority in this request and order the committee to take further testimony, as indicated, to clear up the point to the satisfaction of the membership of this House, and that no injustice be done to Mr. Dyer.

Now, what is the excuse given in the majority report for the denying of this request of Mr. Dyer to take further testimony? The report says it would leave Mr. Dyer in office during the time it would take to allow him to examine the witnesses in question; that he would be drawing the pay, and so forth. But it is not denied that Mr. Dyer's request was for only 30 days, the expense to be borne by him, and in case he did not get the testimony to satisfy the committee that he (Dyer) was elected, then he (Dyer) would forfeit all pay as a Member of the House. In view, therefore, of these facts, the excuse given by the majority report is not entitled to consideration.

Now, I would like to say a word about the character of the officials and how they were selected. First, there has been an impression or intimation that these officials were selected about the time of this contest, about the time it was first discovered, and that Gill was charged with knifing the Democratic ticket. As a matter of fact, this meeting was, as will be seen by the evidence, called two weeks prior to the election. Here is what Mr. Blevins, the able counsel for the contestant, has to say on the subject:

Mr. SMITH. I understand the charge is made that those election officers were selected because they were for Dyer and against Gill?

Mr. BLEVINS. Oh, no. They would not have been appointed if the election board had known that they were not straight party men; they would not have been appointed at all, because my late associate, Mr. Jamison, who is now general counsel of the M., K. & T. Railway Co., was a member of the election board and was at the time these judges and clerk were appointed, and they all made a fair showing that they were straight party men, or they never would have been appointed.

* * * * * * *

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Blevins, will you permit me a question right there?

Mr. BLEVINS. Certainly.

Mr. MCKENZIE. When are these judges and clerks of election recommended—at what time?

Mr. BLEVINS. Well, they are recommended—under the law they are appointed for two years.

Mr. DYER. Ninety days before the election.

Mr. BLEVINS. Ninety days before the election, and they hold over until after the election, until about 90 days before the following election; but, as a matter of fact, vacancies occurred right along to almost the very day of the election, and to fill them appointments were being made constantly right up to the time of election.

Mr. MCKENZIE. May I ask you another question?

Mr. BLEVINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENZIE. In order that we may get something clear in our minds, when was this meeting held by the Democratic congressional committee in which Mr. Gill was present and the question of his having voted against some of the Democratic candidates at previous elections brought up and discussed? When was that meeting held?

Mr. BLEVINS. I understand that there was said to be some sort of a meeting of that kind held by the members of the committee a week or ten days before the election.

Mr. MCKENZIE. That was long after the recommendations had been made for judges and clerks?

Mr. BLEVINS. Oh, yes. Probably there may have been a few judges and clerks recommended and appointed after that, but very few.

Now, gentlemen, that completely disproves the idea that these election officers were appointed after the fact had become known or that it was noised about in regard to Mr. Gill's conduct at the previous election.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. I will.

Mr. COOPER. I understand it to have been claimed on the part of the contestant here that there was a conspiracy among the judges, and that they were appointed in pursuance of that conspiracy in order to wreak a vengeance on Gill because he had voted for Kinney. As a matter of fact, these judges were appointed a long time before anybody knew or even claimed that Gill had voted for the Republican candidate?

Mr. SHREVE. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. COOPER. That is an exceedingly important point and disproves the whole argument.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, this completely dispels the theory that has been injected into this case, that these men were appointed at about the time it was learned that Mr. Gill bolted the Democratic ticket. As a matter of fact, these men were selected 90 days before that time. Even the contestant himself comes before you and tells you of the high character and standing of these men who comprise this election board. These men were selected because they were straight party men. We must stop and consider the class of people from whom these selections have to be made. They may be poor, but they are honest. They may be unable to read and write, but they are honest; and they might not be able to run up the figures with such mathematical accuracy as some other men, but they are still honest. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, take the case as it stands to-day, and the very inconsistencies which you find in the records go to prove that there was no conspiracy. Every lawyer who has had experience in the criminal side of the courts knows that when a criminal starts out to do a piece of work he does a better job than was done anywhere in this district. The court in St. Louis has already purged the second district, and so all we ask of you to-day is to let us go back and take the testimony of those other 412 men; let us determine whether they scratched their ballots or whether they did not. It is only fair and reasonable to do that, and I trust and sincerely hope and believe that this body will take this fair and impartial view of this case and that we will be allowed to take additional testimony. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Colorado will not insist upon that. It was understood yesterday that there were to be no points of no quorum made.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this discussion is very important and that these arguments should be heard by the jury.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I agree with the gentleman in that respect; but, as a matter of fact, when the Members come in and answer to their names, they will go right out again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER. On this vote 240 Members have responded to their names—a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is worth while to discuss the question of fraud in this case, because the report of the majority and minority of the Committee on Elections admits the fraud, and say that fraud was committed in certain precincts, and the minority of the committee are asking for an opportunity to disprove that the fraud was sufficient to vitiate the election in these certain precincts. Now, this fraud is admitted, so that the argument of our friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] that the action of the judges in the questioned precincts was a mistake falls. My friends, their action was not a mistake, it was not considered so by a single member of your Committee on Elections, but it was considered fraudulent conduct or the committee never would have been asked to go down there and take testimony to disprove it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOOHER. Just for a question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. How did the jury consider that which has just been sitting on this case?

Mr. BOOHER. I do not know; I am not familiar with that case. I am not responsible for what juries do. We are not going to decide this case by what a jury did. I understand that the point made yesterday about that case before a jury that the ballots were exhibited to the jury and they saw the numbers and that they compared them with the poll book is not borne out by the facts. The decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri that allowed those ballots to be shown was that the numbers should not be shown, and before these ballots were exhibited to the jury, I am told, there was a piece of paper pasted over the ballot so that nobody could see what the number was.

Now, that was done in order to secure the secrecy of the ballot, and nobody was permitted to compare the ballots with the poll books to see how anyone had voted. I am not going to discuss that question. If the defense was made in that case, as I understand, yesterday, then it is an impeachment of the election board of the city of St. Louis. The board of elections in St. Louis appointed these judges, believing them to be honest and efficient, and not the scoundrels they proved themselves to be. We are told the defense in that case was that if these ballots were changed from the original count, they were changed by the contestant in this case and his attorneys when the recount was made. Now, the man who made that statement before a jury or before this House knew that neither the contestant nor his lawyers could touch one of those ballots. The election commissioners read the names off of these ballots and the clerks appointed by the election board made a tally, and the contestant or his lawyers or the contestee or his lawyers, who were present, could not touch a ballot or handle them in any way. Why bring that up in this case? Now, in reference to the story about Mr. Gill having voted for Mr. Kinney, I say there is not a word of testimony in all this record, in all the hearings they have had, that Mr. Gill did so. All of it is hearsay from start to finish. Here is the start of it. Now, this man Egan, who commended these judges to be appointed, testified:

Q. How did you come to learn this fact that he had not done so?—

That is, that Gill voted against Kinney—

A. Well, the first that I learned of it was through this man that I spoke of, Canty. He told me he had met a fellow——

Q. You learned it from Canty?—A. From the customhouse, that had told him that he had heard about Mr. Gill scratching Kinney.

Now, three or four times throughout the record, throughout the testimony, it appears that is the way the information got out, and in spite of the denials made by Mr. Gill in public speeches in St. Louis, the denials published in the newspapers, his denial made in the record in this case, which was read yesterday, and his denial this morning, gentlemen talk about that, and if these denials in this case and the source of information are not sufficient to condemn it, then I do not know how you can condemn a statement of that sort. Now, my good friend from Missouri stated that the action of the election officers in the disputed precincts in their count were mistakes. Was it a mistake when these election judges violated every provision of the State statute of Missouri in regard to the count of votes? I am going to put in the RECORD the section of the statute, and it is as follows:

SEC. 6224. Vote, how canvassed: The judges of election shall first count the whole number of ballots in the box. If the ballots shall be found to exceed the number of names entered upon each of the poll books, they shall reject the ballots, if any, found folded inside of a ballot; and if the ballots and the poll list do not agree after such rejection, they shall reject all ballots not numbered, and no ballot not so numbered shall be counted. The ballots so rejected shall be inclosed in an envelope marked "rejected ballots," and returned with the ballot boxes to the election commissioners; and the ballots or poll lists agreeing or being made to agree in this way, the board shall proceed to count the votes in the following manner: Said judges shall open the ballots and place those which contain the same names together, so that the several kinds shall be in separate piles, or on separate files. Each of the judges shall examine the separate files which are, or are supposed to be, alike, and exclude from such files any which may have a name or any erasure or in any manner shall be different from the other of such file. One of said judges shall then take one file of the kind of ballots which contain the same name and count them by the tens, carefully examining each name on each of said ballots. Such judge shall then pass the 10 ballots aforesaid to other judges, who shall count them in the same manner and call the names of the persons named in the 10 ballots and the offices for which they are designated, and the poll clerks shall tally 10 votes for each of such persons. When they shall have have gone through such file of ballots containing the same names by tens in that way, and when the clerk shall have tallied all the votes by tens for each of said persons, they shall then take up the next pile of ballots containing the same names and shall count them by tens in the same way, and shall call the names of the persons named in said ballots and the offices for which they are designated, and the clerks shall tally the vote by tens for each of said persons in the same manner. When the counting of each file of ballots which contain the same names shall be completed, the clerks shall compare their tallies together and ascertain the total number of ballots of that kind so canvassed, and when they agree upon the number, one of them shall announce it in a loud voice. The said judges shall then canvass the other kind of ballots which do not correspond, those containing names partly from one kind of ballots and partly from another, being those usually called "split tickets," and those from which the names of the persons proper to be voted for on such ballots had been omitted or erased, usually called "scratched tickets." They shall be canvassed separately by the judges, and each name called out to the clerks and the office for which it is designated, and the clerks making tally of the same. When all ballots are canvassed in this manner, the clerks shall compare their tallies together and ascertain the total number of votes received by each candidate, and when they agree upon the number, one of them shall announce in a loud voice the number of votes received by each candidate on each of the kinds of ballots containing his name. (Laws 1903, p. 170.)

From the evidence in this case every one of these election officers guilty of this fraud ought to be in the penitentiary from the day they are convicted until their last hour has come on this earth. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOOHER. There is nothing that could go so far to destroy this Government as corrupt elections, and I do not care whether the man is a Democrat or a Republican. An election judge who will falsify the count is not fit to run at large in this country, but he ought to be in the penitentiary. Now, turn to the record the election officers made. I merely want to call my good friend's attention to it—he is a Republican. In the ninth precinct 63 ballots for alleged illiterates were made up by Edward J. Maurer, Democratic judge, in plain violation of the law, which requires that the illiterate voter shall be sworn, and he admits he never swore one of these men. Why, the law says that these judges shall be appointed for their intelligence, knowledge of the law, and their supposed honesty.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. No; the gentleman would not yield to me, and the gentleman will have to take his own medicine.

Oh, yes; it was a mistake. W. H. Gibbons testified that—

No oath was administered to those whose ballots were prepared by Mr. Maurer. Upon opening the ballot box Maurer and Byrne, Democratic judges, handled and counted the Democratic ballots.

This witness also testified that when Maurer and Byrne completed the tally they had not given contestant a single vote.

Now, listen, Members of Congress:

Whereupon witness informed them that they must give him 1 vote, as witness himself voted for contestant.

Now, that was a Republican judge. They had not given him a single vote, and yet one of the judges had voted for him.

Now, what did these dutiful judges do? Listen:

Witness glanced casually at a few of the Democratic ballots and saw 3 votes for Gill, whereupon Maurer said, "All right, give him 3."

A mistake, was it not? I want to read you what this Congress has decided time and again in regard to cases of this kind. The brief says further:

Witness did not go through the whole pile of ballots to see if there were more for Gill, explaining that it was getting so late he wished to hurry away. Oscar Hanserman, Republican judge, testified that no oath was administered to illiterates, as required by law, but that Mauer, Democratic judge, would fix up the ballot and put it into the box, without asking the voter how he desired to vote.

A mistake, was it not? Is it possible that Members of this House will by their vote justify that kind of a fraud? If this is not sufficient to throw out the poll, how would you throw out a poll? There is not a respectable court on earth that would hesitate for a moment on a contest in court to throw out that entire poll. Men go in and vote, the judge takes the ticket and does not ask them how they want to vote, but scratches it and puts it in the ballot box.

And there was Judge Bishop's ticket. They did not dare miscount it. They did not number it. These election officers were not poor, ignorant fellows. They knew the law, and they knew that the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri had decided that a ballot found in the box without a number on the back of the ballot was a fraudulent vote and could not be counted for anybody, and they did not dare change Judge Bishop's vote, and so they put it in the box without numbering it.

It was not counted and could not be counted. They say these were honest fellows!

Another accident in this long chapter of accidents:

Thus, James Thomas desired to vote a straight Democratic ticket and did not scratch Michael J. Gill. His ballot shows the name of Michael J. Gill scratched with no name written in.

They did not have time to write in the name even. And a remarkable thing is that 73 of them show, in one precinct, the handwriting of one man, and did not put Mr. Dyer's initials on any one of them. They wrote "Dyer."

Now, I acquit Mr. Dyer of any wrong in this matter. But it was done in his interest and he must pay the penalty for what these fellows did.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] if it is not perfectly legal to simply write the name "Dyer" on a ballot without the initials?

Mr. BOOHER. No; it is not perfectly legal.

Mr. McKENZIE. Has it not been so held?

Mr. BOOHER. No; the courts have held that such ballots might be counted, but they have never held that they ought to be counted, if there was another man running by that name for the same office.

Fraud, misconduct, and willful disregard for the election laws, tampering with ballots, substituting the will of precinct election officials for the will of the voters, and deliberate conspiracy against contestant is so plainly evident that not the slightest faith or credence can be placed in the return of the judges and clerks. Rejection of the entire votes of these precincts is fully sanctioned by the authorities.

The following quotations from the authorities governing contested-election cases in this House shows clearly that the law is with the majority report:

While it is well established that mere neglect to perform directory requirements of the law or performance in a mistaken manner where there is no bad faith, no harm accrued, will not justify the rejection of an entire poll it is equally well settled that where the proceedings are so tarnished by fraudulent, or negligent, or improper conduct on the part of the officers, that the result of the election is rendered unreliable, the entire returns will be rejected and the parties left to make such proof as they may of votes legally cast for them. (Covode v. Foster, 41st Cong., 2 Bart, 602.)

Where it was clearly shown that the contestant received 170 votes and the return only gave him 143 votes, and there was other evidence tending to show actual tampering with the ballot box the return was set aside. (McCrary on Election, 377. Washburn v. Voorhees, 2 Bart, 54.)

And it is truthfully said in Thompson v. Ewing that the whole conduct of election officers may, though actual fraud be not apparent, amount to such gross and culpable negligence, such a disregard of their official duties as to render their doings unintelligible or unworthy of credence and their action unreliable for any purpose. (McCrary on Election, 382, 383. Weaver v. Given, Id. 140. Gibbons v. Stewart, 2 Brewst., 1.)

The law is that where fraud is proved to have been committed by the officers of an election in conducting the election no reliance can be placed upon any of their acts, and their return must be rejected as wholly unreliable. (Finley v. Walls, 44th Cong., Smith, 389.)

Fraud can rarely, if ever, be proved by direct evidence, and the rule is that whenever a sufficient number of circumstances which point to its existence are clearly established a prima facie case of its existence is made, and if this case is not met with explanation or contradiction it becomes conclusive. (Mitchell v. Walsh, 54th Cong., Rept. 1849.)

Returns from precincts where it was proved that more voters voted for contestant than were returned for him were rejected, and only the votes proved aliunde counted. (Wise v. Young, 56th Cong., Rept. 186.)

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] use some of his time?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, one can only make a brief statement within the time granted to me, and that I shall only attempt to do. I have reached the conclusion in my capacity as a trier of this case that I could not vote for the resolution embodied in the report of the majority, and will briefly state my reasons.

The sitting Member comes here as the result of the election machinery of the State of Missouri, under the authority of the State, and is prima facie entitled to his seat. The burden is upon the contestant to show that he is not so entitled, and that burden under the evidence of this case rests upon the contestant up to this time. And the question to be determined is whether, with that burden upon him, he has removed the presumption of the validity of the election of the sitting Member, Mr. Dyer. The majority report attempts to overcome that presumption by setting aside the entire poll in seven election precincts of the fifth ward of this congressional district, and by doing so thereby reach a result giving the contestant 67 majority. In order for them to have done so they should have resorted to every possible method in order to have so purged the returns as to show that the contestant was elected or that the election was so tainted with fraud that it was impossible to arrive at a result.

In the minority report are some very interesting figures which bear upon this phase of it. In these seven precincts there were 1,537 votes cast. Of these, 231 were scattering, and in 75 of them the name of Mr. Gill was stricken out, and there was no vote at all. Deducting 231, leaves 1,306 votes, and deducting the vote—406—which the contestant will not deny that he received, because it appears upon the recount, leaves 900 votes. There were 388 straight Republican ballots on which Dyer was voted for. This leaves 512 votes to be explained or investigated in these seven precincts. These 512 were Democratic ballots which had Gill's name scratched, and of these the name of Dyer was written thereon in substitution on 437. There were 75 of these ballots simply scratched and no name substituted. These 512 votes were subject to investigation and attack by the contestant, but only 54 were examined, and only 18 of these contradicted their ballot. In other words, the contestant only sought to attack 54 of these alleged fraudulent ballots and succeeded only as to 18 ballots.

Now, it was incumbent upon the contestant in the case of these 512 voters, whose ballots could be plainly identified—voters who could be located and presumably could be brought forth to testify—to interrogate them as to the manner of their vote and as to whether the ballots which appeared to be the ballots cast by them represented the vote which they intended to cast. Now, that is practicable. It was not only incumbent upon the contestant, but it was his duty to seek those votes, which are the only ones which are contested, in order to satisfy the committee and satisfy this House that he received a sufficient number of them to have himself declared elected. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, in five minutes one can not more than touch one or two of the many important phases of this case, and I shall only attempt to touch two. One, and first, as to the question of whether or not the contestant, Mr. Gill, voted for "Tom" Kinney or scratched "Tom" Kinney's name, and voted for Mr. Dyer. The contestant has been heard upon this floor to-day. He discussed that subject. He quoted very eloquently from Robert Emmet, but this House is ignorant as to whether he did vote for Mr. Dyer or whether he scratched Mr. Kinney's name. He did not tell us. Now, it is not important, so far as this case is concerned, whether he did or not, except that if, appearing before us as he has, this House to-day believes he did vote for Mr. Dyer and against Mr. Kinney, it is fair to assume that the voters of this fifth ward in question came to the same conclusion that this House must have come to, and that is that he bolted his party ticket. And that being so, we have reason enough and excuse enough for the vote that was shown in this fifth ward, giving Mr. Dyer an overwhelming majority.

Now, the mere fact that he voted for Mr. Dyer would not have counted against him in that ward any more than it would in my ward or the ward of any of you. But when he went into that ward afterwards in the primary fight and secured the assistance of Egan and of Kinney upon the claim that he was the friend of Tom Kinney and voted for him, when he had not so voted, and got their assistance under false pretenses, is it to be wondered at that those men did everything in their power to defeat him at the November election following, just as I would have done, just as you would have done, just as any man with a drop of red blood in his veins would have done?

Now, assuming that in six of these election precincts fraud has been shown—and I will assume that—that the returns were fraudulent in six of the precincts, inasmuch as it is admitted by all that Mr. Dyer is innocent of that fraud and was not a party to it in any way, it is agreed by both sides that unless that fraud was of such a character that we can not determine which of these men received a majority of the votes, unless it was so mingled that we can come to no conclusion, then only must we throw out these precincts. But assuming that the returns were fraudulent, if we can still ascertain whether Mr. Dyer had a majority, and, if he did, whether it was sufficient to overcome that of Mr. Gill—if we can ascertain that and come to that conclusion, it is agreed upon both sides that, whatever the fraud may have been on the part of these judges, it can not affect the result, and Mr. Dyer still should be seated. There is no question upon that.

The question is, What do these facts show? The majority of the committee thinks that as to 10 of the 17 precincts there was no fraud. The majority of the committee finds that as to those precincts Mr. Dyer's conceded majority is 599; that is, out of one-half of the votes in this fifth ward they concede Mr. Dyer has a majority of 599. Now, as to the balance, these 7 precincts that they throw out, Mr. Dyer needs only a majority of 68 in order to entitle him to a seat in this House.

Now, is it not fair to say that of the votes, regardless of the count of the judges, regardless of any conspiracy on the part of the judges, Mr. Dyer will receive the same proportion in those 7 precincts that he did out of the 10? Would anyone say that that is not fair?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have one minute more.

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course not, because the fact is that in these 7 precincts, where these friends of Tom Kinney were so active, Mr. Dyer's proportion would be much larger than in the 10 precincts that the committee says are free from fraud; and applying that same proportion, instead of giving Mr. Dyer a majority of 67 it will give him a majority of more than 200.

And, my friends upon that side, if you will throw partisanship aside, if you will take this case and consider it as you would if you were sitting upon the bench, or as you would if you were sitting as jurors in a jury box, I insist you would have to come to that conclusion, that upon this showing, made by the majority of the committee itself, Mr. Dyer is entitled to his seat upon the votes shown.

But they do not ask that. They ask only that which the chairman of the committee himself asked last March, namely, that this committee should be empowered to proceed and take further testimony, in order that further facts may be shown; and that is asking little enough. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how the time stands?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has 23 minutes, and the gentleman from New York has 55.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask that the gentleman from New York use some time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I knew Tom Kinney. I served in the Missouri Senate with Tom Kinney. He and I were personal friends. I knew him well enough to believe that if Tom Kinney had been alive at the time that this election was held and this crime was committed against the contestant, Mr. Gill, the things done, the frauds committed, would never have been committed with the knowledge or consent of Tom Kinney.

Kinney had a contest pending in this House against the contestee, Mr. Dyer, and in his contest he made charges of wrongs perpetrated against him. Some of them have been referred to by the distinguished Member from Missouri, my colleague, Mr. RUCKER. Additional charges were made by Tom Kinney to the effect that hundreds of negro votes were brought into St. Louis in the interest of Mr. Dyer, and that Mr. Dyer became the beneficiary thereof.

The death of Kinney ended that contest. After he had died a conspiracy was entered into to defeat the present contestant, Mr. Gill, who ran against Mr. Dyer.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. DICKINSON. Just for a question.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he means that the contest between Kinney and Dyer was ended by the death of Kinney, or did not Congress act upon it prior to the death of Mr. Kinney, seating Mr. Dyer unanimously?

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, I gave it according to my recollection. But that is not very material.

Here in this contest the majority of this committee have said in their report not one unkindly word against Mr. Dyer, and there is no disposition here on the part of anyone to attack Mr. Dyer. He, however, is the beneficiary of a wrong so infamous, so notorious, and so fully known that the act, immediately after the wrong was known, became public property, and those who have violated the law of Missouri have robbed by their returns Michael J. Gill of his seat. So far as their action was concerned, these parties were indicted and arrested and prosecution was commenced.

Michael J. Gill has been guilty of no wrong. He was attacked at this election by these judges and clerks seeking to defraud him of his seat. Michael J. Gill stands before this body absolutely clean. No man stands higher in the city of St. Louis or in Missouri than Michael J. Gill. First, he has been honored by his party as the nominee for Congress. He stated here in your presence to-day that the Democracy of the district in which Dr. BARTHOLDT lives honored him with the nomination, and so strong was this man in the hearts and in the affections of those people that he ran far ahead in his district. He afterwards was nominated in the twelfth district, and the contest was between Gill and Dyer. Mr. Gill was nominated because of his high character and standing; nominated in a Democratic district, and he lost his certificate of election in a district that had approximately a thousand Democratic majority. The returns gave approximately a thousand majority, I believe, to Mr. Dyer.

Now, this conspiracy and wrong did not extend throughout the entire congressional district. Men who commit wrongs against the ballot box select some limited territory in which to do their devilish deeds. In that way they are easier of concealment. It is not claimed here that Mr. Gill lost those wards and that district by the mere scratching of Gill's name and the writing in of the name of Mr. Dyer by the act of the voters. It it admitted, it is known, that at least a large per cent of them were the deliberate act of the judges and clerks. Everybody knows it to be true that they have wronged Gill, wronged the honest voters, wronged the great city of St. Louis and the people of Missouri. Ah, they say that when these men were arrested and tried one of them, and they say the worst one, was cleared the other day. They defeated Gill, as far as withholding from him the certificate by their own deliberate wrong.

The same gang were able to prevent the conviction of the men who had been a party to this wrong; and now they come here and hope in this body to get a third approval in Congress by confusing the issue, asking this body to turn down the majority report of seven men who have carefully gone over the entire testimony. It is in evidence that Gill has all the time been pressing for an early hearing and decision of this case. The contestee has sought by every effort to delay and put off the decision. He and his friends appeal for further delay. They ask it of this body of Congressmen, who have not read the evidence except to a limited extent, but who have merely read the reports. The majority report in favor of seating Mr. Gill has been kindly to Mr. Dyer. It might well have been written in stronger language and been justified. The case of Mr. Dyer has been presented by the minority in the very strongest possible manner, and he comes before this House in the most favorable attitude.

Ah, they say this case ought not to be tried along partisan lines. It does not come well from those who in other cases have seen fit for partisan reasons to wipe out much larger majorities in the past. I know the timidity of some gentlemen on this side who respond to the appeal, "Let us not be partisan here," and now and then on this side of the House there are some gentlemen, who in their zeal to be fair, bend the other way and lend their hands and voice to put the seal of approval upon as outrageous a fraud as was ever committed in the city of St. Louis. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] use some time?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will ask the gentleman from New York to use some of his time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I prefer to continue the order heretofore followed.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from New York has a great deal more time than we have on this side.

Mr. HEFLIN. How does the time stand?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] has 40 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has 23 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, this question is one which ought to appeal to the highest honor of every Member of this House. I would not cast my vote or my influence for the purpose of doing a wrong to either the contestant or the contestee if I knew it. I rise more for the purpose of giving testimony to what I do know about the character and fitness of the contestant than for any other purpose. In 1893 in the Illinois Legislature I met a blue-eyed boy just old enough to become a member of that legislature. I served with him in that House for nine months, and I say without any fear whatever of contradiction that no member of that body won in the hearts of the members of that legislature a higher place for honor, integrity, and devotion to Democratic principles than did Michael Gill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have followed that young man from his early inception into politics, and I never have heard a word against that high and noble record which he won in the Illinois Legislature. He was one of the cleanest men in that body. He was one of the most devoted to the duties of the legislature. He was one of the most persistent in hunting down fraud and standing up in his manly courage for decent legislation. I went to the home of that young man in Alton during that session of the legislature. I went to where he had worked as a private in the ranks of that great body of men who stand around heated furnaces for long hours, where he formerly earned his living as a glass blower in the sweat of his face. That young man has come before this body, in my opinion, as clean-handed as any man ever came before a court or a jury, presenting his case for a hearing. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to speak for this young man and to say for him that if any wrong was done in the election of 1912, in my opinion, it was not done by Michael Gill or by his permission. It is admitted that fraud was perpetrated in the fifth ward of the twelfth district of Missouri. A principle of law is that fraud vitiates everything, and if that ward has committed fraud against Gill or against Dyer it ought to be discarded and not taken into consideration in making up our verdict on the fairness of that election. If fraud is as rank in the fifth ward of this district it ought to be disfranchised. If any good men live in this ward, they ought to be disfranchised for remaining in it.

I have read most of the evidence. I have read both of the reports, and I have come to the conclusion that if these reports and that evidence be true, the very same hand that changed the vote of Michael Gill against Tom Kinney changed the vote of other honest men who cast their votes for Michael Gill in 1912 and placed them on the other side of the poll in favor of his opponent. Such conduct can not and ought not to be tolerated. Let us be clean and stand for clean men in Congress, elected by the ballots of clean men. Fairness in elections can not be preserved without punishing those who commit frauds at the polls. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Now, I trust the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] will use some of his time.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

[Mr. HOWARD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, can I ask the gentleman from New York, chairman of the committee, a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is it?

Mr. RUCKER. Can not the gentleman give the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] 10 minutes?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am trying to do the best I can by all the Members. If the gentleman from Missouri can carve out the time for me, I will be exceedingly grateful.

Mr. RUCKER. I could carve it out so as to divide it up among those who wanted to sustain your report.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen are out of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, some of the ablest lawyers in this House have investigated this case. One of them is not only an able lawyer, but he is one of the ablest judges in public life to-day. I refer to the gentleman from Virginia, Judge WATSON. [Applause.] There is no man in my acquaintance in service here that I would rather follow in a matter of this kind, no man more conscientious and painstaking, than this able and distinguished gentleman; and after investigating this case for months, analyzing every feature of it, he has reached the deliberate judgment that this man Dyer is not entitled to his seat, and that this man Gill is entitled to the seat. [Applause.]

Back of him in that position is Judge SMITH, of Texas, and Mr. WHITACRE, of Ohio. These men have investigated every phase of this case, and it is their judgment that there was so much corruption in the seven precincts, that by throwing out the rotten, corrupted, and illegal vote this man Gill is clearly entitled to his seat. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, what are you going to do in this case? You are going to do one of two things—declare Mr. Gill entitled to the seat or declare the seat vacant. I will not vote to declare the seat vacant, but I will vote to sustain the judgment of the committee of this House in the matter. [Applause.] If you take the judgment of the committee, which eliminates the fraudulent and corrupted vote, Gill is entitled to the seat by 67 majority of the honest votes cast all over the unquestioned territory of the entire district. [Applause.]

Gentlemen talk about depriving the people of a sovereign State of the right to a Representative in this House, when this Republican who has come here upon a certificate based on fraudulent returns now asks the House for time that he failed to ask the committee for until it rendered judgment in his face and against him on facts that he and the contestant had submitted.

What would have been the course of a court under these circumstances? The moment Mr. Gill made the showing that he did, making out a prima facie case, the burden of proof shifted, and what did Mr. Dyer do? Did he ask for more time? No; he rested his case and waited for the judgment of the committee on the whole case as submitted by himself and the contestant, Mr. Gill.

Then, when the committee did finally act, what did he say? Why, he said "I want more time." This demand for more time is now really amusing to me. It is a Republican trick for delay. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If that district elected a man, and in my judgment it did, this man Gill is entitled to that seat. But some of the Republicans tell us that he scratched a Democratic ticket on one occasion. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time during my service in this House that I have ever found Republicans pleading for Democratic regularity and exercising guardianship over the Democratic Party. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Gill made a statement in the House to-day, and what did he say? He practically asked God Almighty to strike him down if he had ever voted anything but the Democratic ticket. [Applause.] He says now in private conversation and everywhere else that he never scratched the Democratic nominee, Mr. Kinney, and that he has always voted the Democratic ticket; but gentlemen are appealing to this side now to give them a little more time over there, not because of newly discovered evidence—oh, no—but in order to give Mr. Dyer time to discover evidence. He could have obtained time at the hands of the committee or from the House if he had requested it in good faith and in due time.

Mr. COOPER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield at this time. He could have obtained time, but he did not seem to want time until the committee had finally decided the case. What are we to do gentlemen—declare the seat vacant? No. Let us have the courage to stand by the expressed judgment of the majority of this committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

First, the testimony shows that the election laws of Missouri were disregarded by the judges and the clerks of election in those precincts. Second, the testimony shows that the judges deliberately counted hundreds of votes for Dyer that were cast for Gill, as shown in the recount. Third, the testimony shows that ballots cast for Gill were scratched and Dyer's name inserted and counted for Dyer. When Gill closed his case he had made a case that would have made it the duty of the court to throw out the returns from the wards in question. Dyer was represented by able counsel. It was his duty to overcome the case made by the contestant, and he was not prevented from doing so for want of time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, if he had lacked time, he could have secured it from the House, but he did not ask for it; and why did he not? Mr. Dyer was represented by able counsel, but he never discussed the need of further time to introduce additional testimony until the committee had decided the case against him. He now asks for a new trial and a continuance, not upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, but we are confronted with the ridiculous situation of the contestee wanting time to go out and hunt up evidence. All this is for delay. [Applause.] I want to know what he was doing from October, 1913, till March, 1914. Why did he not ask for time then?

It is stated here that this man Gill has expended what little money he had getting up his evidence and presenting his case to the committee. He is an honest Democrat and a poor man pleading for justice at the hands of this House; and in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I think I am as nonpartisan as any man in this House, and I vote the Democratic ticket with unerring precision all the time [applause], and I am sure, from the testimony, that this man Gill votes the Democratic ticket all the time; and I believe that when you eliminate the fraudulent vote he is entitled to a seat in this House, and the evidence submitted in this case bears out my statement.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the greatest surprise that has come to Mr. Dyer—and he is a good, clever fellow—is that he has not been turned out of this House long ago. He is a very clever gentleman, but we are trying this case on its merits. The judges representing the majority of the committee are positive, in their judgment, that from all the evidence Mr. Dyer is not entitled to a seat in this House, but that Mr. Gill has been duly and constitutionally elected from that district a Representative in this body; and, so far as I am concerned, I shall cast my vote to sustain the action of these able and worthy gentlemen who constitute the majority of that committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has just said, I want to read from the record in this case the testimony given under oath by Mr. Dyer, a brother of the contestee, a man 51 years of age, publisher of a magazine in St. Louis, concerning a conversation that he had with this contestant, Mr. Gill—testimony which the contestant, Gill, has never denied under oath anywhere:

Q. Now state what was said by Mr. Gill to you or in your presence on the subject.—A. I noticed the ballots there on account of my brother being made a contestant in this matter, and I just thought I would see Gill and speak to him; that is, as I was at the city hall, and I saw him inside, and the election commissioners' office was locked up; that is, the doors were shut, rather. Nobody was allowed in there, I understand, except men that were inside.

Q. You mean inside of the office?—A. Yes; so I walked up to the window, and I saw Senator Vest's son, Alec Vest. I said to Alec, "You interested in this contest?" He said, "No; I am just up here." Election Commissioner Spencer came to the window and spoke to me. I said to Spencer, "Tell Gill to come here to the window, I want to speak to him. See whether he knows me." He came there, and I spoke to him. I said, "What is the matter, Gill? You seem to be in trouble here." He said, "Yes." I said, "You voted for Dyer. You ought to be friendly with us," and so forth and so on. He said, "Well, you are the one that gave that news to the Kinney crowd." I said, "No." "Well," he said, "it don't make any difference. I am not going to admit it now, but I may admit it in Washington when they take the contest on there, and I will tell the Election Committee at that time, probably, if I do admit it, of having voted for Dyer, the kind of fellow Kinney is, the reason why I voted against him."

That is testimony in this case given under oath, and the contestant has never under oath denied it. It is true that in his speech to-day he did appeal to Robert Emmet and to the Lord, neither of whom, however, was a witness in this case. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I shall not try to make an elaborate argument in this case in two minutes. There is one phase of it to which I want to call attention. Mr. Gill's Democracy has been called into question here on the ground that he did not vote the Democratic ticket two years prior to the election at which he was a candidate.

I have known the contestant, Mr. Gill, since 1892. When I first knew Mr. Gill he was canvassing the State of Illinois for the Democratic ticket. John P. Altgeld was then the head of the ticket, and was elected governor of that State. Mr. Gill himself was a candidate for the State legislature from a Republican district. He was elected to the legislature, and it was during that campaign and during his service in the legislature, which meets in my home town, that I first became acquainted with him. No man in that body stood higher than he for conscientious performance of his duty and rectitude in every respect, as well as for Democracy, which, of course, is included under the term "rectitude." [Applause on the Democratic side.] The evidence, the undisputed evidence, here is that many tickets in the election which is now being contested were tampered with; that names were scratched out and other names written in without any warrant whatever. It is pretty clear that that condition did not come about in this ward in two years, and if it existed at this election, is it not fair to presume that it existed at the election before and that Mr. Gill's vote was tampered with and the name of Mr. Dyer written in then as it was written in in the case before us? And in view of the acknowledged rectitude of the man, his high character, his high standing, vouched for by those who know him, his statement on the floor and in the record that he did not cast that vote, absolutely convinces my mind, and I have not the least doubt that his statement here is the truth, and that the point made against him now is being made to prejudice his case with Democrats in the House; that it is not entitled to and should not have any weight whatever. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois kindly use some of his time now?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON].

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as always, I was interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. Unfortunately, he seemed not to have any judgment of his own on this proposition, but he appealed to his colleagues on the other side to stand by the judgment of those on the committee who submitted the majority report. Much as I respect the opinion of my Progressive colleague [Mr. RUPLEY], a member of the committee, I shall not vote for the resolution suggested by the majority report which Mr. RUPLEY has recommended in concurrence with the others on the majority. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the real question before us now is whether or not the proposition to give 30 days' time to secure further evidence in this case is a reasonable proposition. When the burden of proof was shifted, quoting from the chairman of the committee, from the contestant to the contestee, the contestee, according to the record, immediately offered to secure testimony which he claimed would convince the committee, and to secure it within 30 days. That offer has not been made now for the first time, but it was made some months ago, and it has been good ever since. The majority of the committee would throw out the entire vote in some six or seven precincts in the fifth ward. They would throw out something like 1,534 votes, some of which have been completely confirmed by those who cast them, men who appeared before the committee as witnesses and confirmed their ballots. Now, the authorities that are cited by the majority in sustaining that recommendation are not in point. There is a difference between all of those cases and the case in question, in that in this jurisdiction in Missouri there is not what you can call a secret ballot. It is possible to summon each voter in these precincts before the committee and produce the ballot cast at the election in his name. He can then be asked whether that ballot shows the vote which he cast for Member of Congress correctly and as he voted it. In this way the vote in these precincts can be verified and this is what the contestee requested be done, and he asked but 30 days in which to do it.

It is proposed by the majority of the committee to deny that reasonable request and instead to throw out entirely the vote of these precincts. In the case of some of these precincts they are basing that recommendation on testimony which does not call in question more than three or four votes in the whole precinct. Such a course is preposterous. They recommend throwing out over 1,500 votes on evidence affecting slightly over 1 per cent of them.

The contestant went through the fifth ward with a fine-tooth comb in search of witnesses to prove his charges. He produced 54 witnesses, and of that number who appeared before the committee only 18 testified that their ballots had been changed.

Those ballots have been thrown out, and properly so, but why throw out all the others cast in those precincts, when every voter can be put on the witness stand and can be shown the ballot bearing his number and can give the same testimony with reference to it, namely, whether the vote shown on the ballot as being cast for the candidate for Congress is correct and as he voted it? Where it is possible to produce such evidence it should be produced. The authorities on election contest cases do not sustain the disregard of all votes in a precinct where it is possible to separate the bad or fraudulent votes from those which are valid and good. It is possible to do that in this case. To refuse to do so is the rankest kind of injustice.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious problem which confronts this House of Representatives. I am fearful that gentlemen have traveled far afield in their arguments. The seat of Mr. Dyer, the sitting Member, is contested by Mr. Gill. The record in this case, stated briefly, shows that the contestant established by indubitable proof, admitted upon all sides, that fraud was perpetrated in these special precincts mentioned. It is claimed that Mr. Dyer did not participate in that fraud, and I believe that there is no claim that he did, but, Mr. Speaker, if he is the beneficiary of the fraud, the result is just the same, so far as the contestant is concerned, as though Mr. Dyer himself participated in and engineered that fraud. I have been taught that the receiver of stolen goods is just as guilty as the party who actually committed the larceny.

Here is a case, Mr. Speaker, where a gentleman is occupying a seat upon this floor as a result of admitted fraud, a fraud sufficient to change the result; but he is not to be ousted because it is said that the contestant voted at one time against a Democratic nominee. If that were a crime, then every gentleman on the other side of the aisle would be in the penitentiary to-day. [Laughter and applause.] I have never heard before, and I am certainly amazed to hear from Republican sources, that to scratch a Democratic ticket is a crime. Some of us believe it, some of us have preached that as being the correct doctrine; and I am glad that I have lived to see the day when the Republican representation in this American Congress stands upon this floor and proclaims to all the world that to scratch a Democratic ticket is a crime sufficient to deprive a man of membership here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that fraud was committed, no matter by whom. It is said that the sitting Member made a fair request of the committee. That is true; but he waited until the evidence was in, the arguments made, the verdict rendered, and when he saw it was against him, then he made the demand. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York how many speeches he has.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I think the gentleman had better occupy some of his time now. I may reserve some of my time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I came into the Congress in the Fifty-fifth Congress, having been elected in 1896. I went on the Committee on Elections No. 1 and served on that committee 12 years, 6 years as the chairman of it. There are several very eminent Members on the Democratic side of the House now in the House who can testify to the fairness of that committee; but I found when I came into the Congress a bitter and intense feeling on the Republican side of the House against the Democratic contestees, growing out of the fact that in the Fifty-third Congress the Democrats had unseated Mr. Joy, of St. Louis, in a case where the Republicans were firmly of the opinion that the unseating was wholly unjustified.

I remember that in the Fifty-fourth Congress, although I was not a Member of it, the Committee on Elections was changed from one committee to three committees, so that it might fire out Democrats a little faster to carry out the feeling of resentment and reprisal on the part of the Republican membership because of the infamy of the Democratic side of the House in the Joy case from St. Louis. When I came into the House I was told by some of the old Republican Members that we were justified, because of the Joy case, in turning any Democrat out of the House. While there may have been justification for it, I did not feel that that was the proper spirit in which to approach election cases, and I did all that was within my power for years to have these contests settled upon the evidence; fairly considered, without regard to partisanship. I believe the present case will have about the same result, if the contestee is turned out, on the Republican majority in the next House as the turning out of Mr. Joy in the Fifty-third Congress had. [Applause on the Republican side.] Every Republican Member of this House believes, after giving a great deal of consideration to the evidence, that there is no justification whatever for unseating Mr. Dyer and seating Mr. Gill. [Applause on the Republican side.] What are the facts in the case, very briefly?

They have a bipartisan election commission in St. Louis which elects the judges and clerks of election, two Democrats and two Republicans, and in each precinct they have two Democratic judges, two Republican judges, one Democratic clerk, and one Republican clerk, I believe—three on each side. These officials in the precinct are named by the bipartisan election commission, but they are named, in the main, and in this case were named, upon the recommendation of the respective political organizations—the Republican judges and clerks upon the recommendation of the Republican committeemen and the Democratic judges and clerks upon the recommendation of the regular Democratic committeemen, named before the contest which is involved here really arose.

There is no pretense that the Republicans entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of depriving Democrats of votes or of counting the votes fraudulently. The officers were selected by the regular organization. It developed in the course of the campaign that Mr. Gill had voted two years before for Mr. Dyer as against Mr. Kinney, who had been the Democratic candidate. Mr. Kinney was a strong man in this ward—the fifth ward of St. Louis. He was the idol and the boss of that Democratic ward. He had been the Democratic candidate for Congress. Whether Mr. Gill voted against him or not—though I notice he did not deny the statement to-day—it makes no difference, because the new Democratic organization—Mr. Kinney having died and his friends being in power—believed that Mr. Gill had voted against Kinney. Kinney's friends were up in arms. The judges and clerks had been selected before this was made known. Does anyone here believe that a majority of the Democratic judges and clerks, selected by the Democratic organization, voted against Mr. Gill and for Mr. Dyer, and that nobody else in the ward felt that way? It is impossible to suppose that the Democratic organization, as shown by the clerks and judges, was against Gill and for Dyer, and that all the rest of the Democrats in the ward were the other way. They were that way because that was the sentiment of the Democratic organization of the ward. I know enough about city politics—and I hope you do—to know that when the Democratic organization or the Republican organization is strong one way or the other in a ward like this it has a great deal of influence and great effect. In this case the word was passed down the line from the Democratic committeemen to knife Mr. Gill. They did not care anything about Dyer. They were not interested in him. They did not care whether he came to Congress or went to hades. The only thing they were interested in was punishing Mr. Gill, because he had knifed Mr. Kinney two years before. They did what you and I would do. The law of reprisal is one of the strongest motives which influence the conduct of man. We turned out Democrats, I am sorry to say, following the Joy case because of the law of reprisal, and when it was discovered that Mr. Gill had knifed Mr. Kinney, the idol of his ward, his friends, following the law of reprisal, said, "Very well; we will do the same. We will knife Mr. Gill." And they did. Who doubts it? Maybe they went too far. I do not know whether they committed fraud in counting the votes or not. I know that judges of election, after an all-day session, frequently make mistakes. I never have seen the time when judges of election strictly followed the law anywhere in reference to the counting of ballots.

They say because there were Democratic votes shown for Dyer, therefore that is reason for assuming fraud. Why, in the last election I ran on the Taft ticket. Mr. Taft received in the neighborhood of 10,000 votes in my district. That number of votes would not have elected me. I received over 20,000, and I do not doubt that there are many precincts in my district where the Republican judges, the Progressive judges, and the Democratic judges, and the clerks all voted for Mr. MANN. If they had not, I would not be here. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I think they showed good judgment. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. I would not enter into a controversy with the gentleman on that question at all.

Mr. MANN. Now, what are we asking? The Committee on Elections has found in seven of these precincts that there was fraud and that the vote ought to be thrown out. Nobody could tell in advance what the finding would be. There was no allegation in the pleading asking in the first place that these returns should be thrown out. There was a recount of the ballot had, and it was discovered that the returns and the ballots did not agree. That is the main reason offered by the committee for throwing out the returns. They may be justified in that; I do not undertake to say. But it was their duty and the duty of the Committee on Elections, under all the precedents of this House, when they determined without it being declared in the pleading to discard the returns from these seven precincts, to ask the House for permission to take testimony as to how the voters actually did vote. It was not within the power of the contestee to do it then. He could not determine then to take testimony. There was no warrant of law for him to take testimony at that time, and there has not been for more than a year. But when the Committee on Elections say that in their opinion the returns from these seven precincts should be discarded, justice and precedent both require that we find out how the voters actually did vote. I have seen cases repeatedly in this House, before my committee, where it was evident that some fraud had been committed. We declined to turn out the Democratic Member because, unless we took the testimony of people who had actually voted, we would be electing the Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman that 13 minutes have expired.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will yield back the balance of my time, but I take a minute, however, to say that I hope the Democratic Members of this House, with their two-thirds majority, will for a moment forget their partisanship and deal fairly with the contestee. Let us find out how the voters voted in these precincts. If they voted for Dyer, he is entitled to the seat; if they voted for Gill, there is no one on this side of the House who will raise a finger against seating the contestant. You can afford to be fair. Will you? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one minute and a quarter.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire in this half minute to introduce and have pending an amendment to the committee resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment for information.

Mr. HOWARD. The majority committee resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That L. C. Dyer was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-third Congress from the twelfth district of the State of Missouri, and that Michael J. Gill was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-third Congress of the United States from the twelfth district of the State of Missouri; and that on account of fraud and corruption practiced in the election in said district the seat is declared vacant.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, was that read in my time?

The SPEAKER. Of course it was.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wish to state to the membership of the House that this resolution was offered on the individual responsibility of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], who simply asked me for the time in which to introduce it. I did not know the contents of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It was this way: If the gentleman from Illinois yielded to the gentleman to offer an amendment, that is one thing; and if he yielded to him for debate, it is an entirely different proposition. But what the Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois is doing is to disclaim any responsibility for the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit me, I do not want to be misunderstood. I asked permission to introduce the amendment because of the fact that the previous question would probably be asked for, and I simply wanted that amendment pending as an amendment to the majority resolution. I introduced it on my own responsibility, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has nothing to do with it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry, if I may make it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The majority resolution consists of two parts. If the substitute offered by the minority should not be agreed to and a separate vote should be had on the two parts of the majority resolution, and that part unseating Mr. Dyer should prevail and that part seating Mr. Gill should not prevail, would the result be that the seat would be left vacant?

The SPEAKER. It would be, in the judgment of the Chair. It would have precisely the effect of the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKENZIE. The offering of this substitute resolution by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] will not in any way affect the taking of the vote on the substitute resolution offered by the committee, will it?

The SPEAKER. It would happen in this way: If the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia should be voted on and should prevail, there would not be any sort of sense in doing anything else. If the House declared the seat vacant, that would be the end of it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not yield time to the gentleman from Georgia for the purpose of offering the resolution to be voted upon instead of the resolution we have pending offered by the minority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The trouble is, it seems to the Chair at first blush as though you had already done it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to inquire of the Chair if the introduction of my amendment to the majority resolution would not come in between the vote on the minority resolution and the resolution as offered by the majority of the committee? I so requested it when I introduced it.

The SPEAKER. The rule is as old as the hills that you perfect the original before you vote on the substitute. So if that is in order, your amendment would be voted upon before the minority substitute.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, to be perfectly fair to the other side, I ask to withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws his amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has 18 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUPLEY] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. RUPLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, before this case reaches a vote I desire to touch upon several of the high points as brought out before your committee—fraud on the inside on the part of the election officers; Republican judges and Democratic judges and Republican clerks and Democratic clerks tampering with ballots, marking and scratching ballots in 15 precincts of the 17 precincts of the fifth ward of the twelfth congressional district of Missouri.

Only two precincts, the sixth and the twelfth, were without fraud. All the other districts showed fraud on the part of the election officers. If I understood the full force of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], he had in mind that the fraud was so colossal, was so mammoth, in the fifth ward of that congressional district that no election had occurred, and that no one—neither Mr. Gill nor Mr. Dyer—was elected to represent the twelfth district of Missouri.

But what are the facts? In all the other wards of this congressional district the returns showed that Michael J. Gill had a plurality of over 600, and it was necessary to count the 15 election precincts of the fifth ward in order to give Hon. L. C. Dyer a plurality. So that if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] was moved by reason of the existence of fraud, and if it is desired to eliminate fraud in declaring a seat vacant in this House, he has established a case beyond any doubt for Michael J. Gill, because outside of this ward Michael J. Gill was elected by more than 600 votes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

So I am going to appeal to the Democrats on this side in asking you to join with all the members of this Committee on Elections in giving force to the conclusion reached by that committee, representing this side, elected by this House, to represent the Democrats, six in number—Judge GOLDFOGLE; Judge WATSON, of Virginia; Judge SMITH, of Texas; Congressman KENNEDY, of Connecticut; Congressman MORGAN, of Louisiana; Congressman WHITACRE, of Ohio. After a number of meetings and after reading more than 2,000 pages of testimony, we reached the conclusion, taking up precinct by precinct, that at least seven precincts of this ward should be rejected.

We were not governed by proof of fraud alone, nor by the fact that there were electors that scratched out Gill's name and wrote in Dyer's name, but by the fact that the election officers themselves on their count had returned more votes for Dyer than we found in the ballot boxes when the ballot boxes were opened. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, if I know anything of regularity of proceedings—and we have just had a discourse here from that eminent gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader on the Republican side, on the question of regularity—I have found, as a member of an election committee, how difficult it is to bring all the facts adduced before a committee to the floor of this House and have them fairly presented here in nine hours allotted to a debate. We had much more of this fraud, of this taint of fraud, of this irregularity of this colossal character where neither you nor any member of your committee could separate the good ballots from the fraudulent ballots.

Now, you say it is an easy matter to go back to St. Louis and examine these ballots, because when an elector votes his ballot is numbered. But you forget that under the Missouri system of voting by separate ballots it is a very easy matter to substitute one ballot for another ballot and to give it the number. You are asking us, after these months—nearly 20—to go back and identify the electors. We may bring in a ballot, and we may bring in a man, and that man may say he is John Smith, and it may be that according to the roll he voted this particular ballot; but how is your committee to know in a ward like this that this particular individual John Smith is the individual who voted that particular ballot? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. SWITZER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. SWITZER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUPLEY. I do for a short question.

Mr. SWITZER. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that this election commission of the city of St. Louis is a crooked body—that it is dishonest?

Mr. RUPLEY. Certainly not.

Mr. SWITZER. They have charge of these ballots, have they not?

Mr. RUPLEY. They have; and permit me to continue that in this particular district the voters lived in many boarding houses and hotels, and paid 10 cents a night for beds in tiers, and they are asking us to find these electors. [Laughter.] And I want to say to you, furthermore, that from the evidence within the covers of those two large volumes of testimony, on my oath as a Member of this body, I believe that in that business district, composed of wholesale houses and of office buildings, they have not more than 1,000 legally qualified electors. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Just a short time ago, I believe in 1910, that district showed 1,000 more electors than in the election of 1912. It is a floating population, a levee district. They are moving about, on the boats on the river. They come into that city on the freight trains. They are the scourings of the earth that reach that particular district—the seventh ward of the city of St. Louis. If you vote for this minority resolution you are going to impose upon us an impossible task. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, permit me to say that if you accomplish this you eliminate a number of precincts reeking with as much fraud as these seven precincts, and nearly the same in kind, quality, and quantity.

This resolution is limited in its scope. We are to do what?

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3, or a subcommittee thereof, be instructed to take additional testimony in the contested-election case of Michael J. Gill against Hon. L. C. Dyer, touching the election of November 5, 1912, in precincts 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 14, and 17 of the fifth ward of the city of St. Louis, with particular reference—

Only with particular reference—as to whether or not the Democratic ballots in those precincts which had Michael J. Gill's name scratched were the correct votes of the voters in question or whether some person or persons had fraudulently scratched the name of the said Gill without the knowledge and consent of the said voters, and that the said committee, after it has taken and considered this additional evidence in connection with testimony heretofore taken, make its report to the House with its recommendations within 30 days after the adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. RUPLEY. In many of these precincts ballots were missing. Are we to go out there and find the ballots? Would the resolution cover that? In many precincts Socialist votes were substituted for Democratic votes—Socialist votes were given to Democrats.

So I could go on and show to you many of the evidences of fraud brought out before this committee.

And now, in closing, let me say that the majority of this committee, with all the facts before them and answering to their consciences after full deliberation, decided, by a vote of seven to two, that L. C. Dyer was not elected to this Congress and that Michael J. Gill was elected. L. C. Dyer has been here nearly 15 months. He has secured the emoluments of the office. He has had his secretary and the secretary's pay. He has had the frank of a Member of Congress. The office is nearly stripped by the time we reach a vote.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House that those who have spoken have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken have leave to extend their remarks on this subject. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I shall not attempt to review the testimony in this case. Indeed, it is quite unnecessary to review it, because, from the arguments that have been made on the floor for and against the committee report, it would seem evident that the membership of this House are quite well informed of the general trend of the testimony, and I think this House has at this time a very clear idea of what is contended for on both sides of the question.

It has been conceded by the contestee's side that there was some fraud practiced in the twelfth congressional district, and it is quite clear that returns were falsified. After a consideration of all the facts and circumstances developed by the testimony, the authorities applicable to the case made it compulsory upon the committee to direct the elimination of certain of the returns. Indeed, that the committee were required so to act was conceded by some of those who spoke on behalf of the contestee. That the contestant made a prima facie case has been practically conceded. When, on the 12th day of March of this year, a tentative vote was taken, it appeared that a majority of the committee favored the elimination of the returns from the seven precincts. On the very next day, the 13th day of March, the contestee served upon the chairman of the committee a notice of motion for leave to take further testimony. Now, this committee acted with great expedition in this case; for if you turn to the hearings you will find that those hearings began in the middle of December of this session. According to the regular procedure of the House the testimony in a contested-election case does not reach the committee until the so-called long or regular session of Congress, and in accordance with that procedure the testimony did not come to the committee until December, 1913, and the hearings were begun in that month. So that you will notice the great expedition with which the chairman of the committee acted.

As I said, in March the committee had reached a stage when a tentative vote was taken, and on the 2d day of April, on which day a meeting of the committee was held, the question came up on the motion made by the contestee.

Allusion has been made to the dissent that I entered against the decision of the committee. I regret I had to disagree with a majority of my Democratic colleagues on the committee, but I am still of the opinion I was right. The rule is quite clearly stated in the case of Featherston against Cate which was decided in the Fifty-first Congress. It is stated in Hinds' Precedents:

The rejection of the return does not necessarily leave the vote actually cast in the precinct uncounted. It only declares that the returns, having been shown to be false, shall not be taken as true, and the parties are thrown back upon such other evidence as it may be in their power to produce in order to show how many votes were cast and for whom, so that the entire vote, if sufficient pains be taken and means be at hand, may be shown, and not a single one lost, notwithstanding the falsity of the return.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the rule; and following that rule I dissented from the decision of the committee, because I concluded it was only fair and just that the contestee should have the right to offer evidence——

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly; for a question.

Mr. RUCKER. You joined with the committee in making this report, did you not?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am explaining my dissent——

Mr. RUCKER. You joined with the committee in the making of the report, did you not? And if you joined with the committee, why do you not stand up for the report?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But if you will look at the report you will see that there is an express notation of my dissent.

Mr. RUCKER. Did you not join in the report?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I trust the gentleman will not take up the few minutes I have remaining.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not like to have you make a speech against your report.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; I can not yield further. I would love to yield, but I can not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Now, I want to say that after Mr. Dyer's motion was voted down I offered a resolution in that committee, and I desire to state the form of the resolution I offered, because it was according to what I conceive to be precedents established in the House.

The resolution which I asked the committee to recommend to this House for adoption was as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3 is hereby authorized and empowered to take such testimony as it shall deem necessary to the determination of the question of fact in the said contested case of Gill against Dyer, and shall have power to send for all such persons, ballots, and papers as it may find necessary for the proper determination of said controversy, and determine the time, place, and manner of taking such testimony, which may be taken before said committee or any subcommittee thereof, or any person selected by said committee for such purpose, and the expense incurred in taking said testimony and carrying out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers certified as correct by the chairman of said committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, had that resolution——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri can not take the gentleman from New York off his feet by a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RUCKER. I simply wanted to ask if his time had expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I proposed that resolution in the interest of which I believed to be justice and fair play. I had asked the committee to recommend it for adoption to the House. That was on April 2. Mr. Dyer had offered to stipulate to limit himself in the taking of his proofs to 30 days, though he did not ask that the contestant be limited at all. The burden of proof had shifted to the contestee; and though we had reached in committee a vote on the precincts, it still seemed to me fair that the contestee should be accorded an opportunity to prove, if he could, within fair limit of time, the true state of the vote in the seven several precincts from which the returns were eliminated.

In the case of Mitchell against Walsh, decided in the Fifty-fourth Congress, it was declared that—

The House of Representatives, with its broad and limitless powers respecting the settlement of contested-election cases, is only desirous of arriving at the truth. While it will not depart from wise and well-settled rules of law, it will not hedge itself about with technical rules which may do manifest wrong.

Mr. Speaker, had my suggestion made to the committee been acceded to and the resolution been adopted by the House, we would have been enabled to reach before now probably the very stage we have now reached. The case could have been concluded by this time anyway. Dissenting, as I do, from the decision which denied Mr. Dyer's motion for a privilege I thought he ought to have, I may, however, reaffirm that the falsity of the returns by the judges and clerks of elections is clearly disclosed; and should the House, in the exercise of its judgment, conclude that further time should not be allowed the contestee to give additional evidence, it follows that, according to the findings and conclusions reached by a majority of the committee, that Mr. Dyer was not elected a Member of the House. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution reported by the minority of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the minority resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3, or a subcommittee thereof, be instructed to take additional testimony in the contested-election case of Michael J. Gill v. Hon. L. C. Dyer, touching the election of November 5, 1912, in precincts 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, 14, and 17 of the fifth ward of the city of St. Louis, with particular reference as to whether or not the Democratic ballots in those precincts which had Michael J. Gill's name scratched were the correct votes of the voters in question or whether some person or persons had fraudulently scratched the name of the said Gill without the knowledge and consent of the said voters; and that the said committee, after it has taken and considered this additional evidence, in connection with testimony heretofore taken, make its report to the House, with its recommendations, within 30 days after the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELDER. I would like to ask whether the majority resolution is divisible or not?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but we have not got to that yet.

Mr. ELDER. Another inquiry is, If the first resolution of the majority should be adopted and the second one rejected, would that leave the seat vacant?

The SPEAKER. It would leave the seat vacant.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolutions and the substitute.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The order of the House fixes that.

Mr. RUCKER. The previous question was not ordered.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. It was tantamount to ordering the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The gentleman from Missouri moves the previous question on all the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the resolution of the minority, which has just been read.

Mr. MANN. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 107, nays 136, answered "present" 23, not voting 167, as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 20, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee desiring to hold Thee first in our plans and purposes and passions of life. We desire to enter into more complete fellowship with Thee and lift our hearts that we may be instructed in Thy way. We would hold Thy name above the prize of fame or fortune, above our love for country, above our desire of life. We would glorify Thy name. We pray that we may enter this day into such perfect and complete subjection to Thy will as that Thy law will be the law of our lives and Thy spirit our constant inspiration. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. McCUMBER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 661) for the relief of the widow of Thomas McClintic, deceased.

A bill (S. 5904) granting a pension to Adolph Gross; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 5905) granting an increase of pension to Charles Gustoson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 5906) for the relief of Lloyd C. Stark; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 5907) granting an increase of pension to John R. Snook; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 5908) to provide a direct, truthful, and inexpensive means of communication between the voters and candidates for nomination and election to certain Federal offices, and to provide publicity for amendments to the Federal Constitution, submitted by Congress, and the reasons for and against their adoption; to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. THORNTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase and construction of such vessels and boats as may be necessary for use in connection with the enforcement of the laws and regulations for the protection of the fisheries and fur-bearing animals of Alaska, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SWANSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the acquisition of a site and the commencement of a post-office building at Norton, Va., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for education in Alaska from $200,000 to $250,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment providing for the reopening and adjustment of the claim of the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid for interest and premium on bonds issued for coast defense, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment relative to the termination of the indefinite appropriation for "surveying within land grants (reimbursable)" made by the act approved March 2, 1885, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SWANSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. BRISTOW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 5843) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM.

Mr. POMERENE. I give notice that I shall offer an amendment to the bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon, all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And lie on the table?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and that it lie on the table. I suggest that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The amendment was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

On page 3, after the sixth line, insert:

"Provided further, That this act shall not apply to physicians and surgeons regularly licensed to practice their profession in the State, Territory, or District where they reside, who may prescribe, dispense, or administer said drugs in good faith; nor to nurses or attendants who may dispense or administer in like good faith said drugs under the direction of a physician or surgeon regularly licensed and given in good faith as aforesaid.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that Senate bill 4160, to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, being Calendar No. 504, be taken from the calendar, as I wish to substitute therefor House bill No. 15613. I desire to give notice that immediately upon the disposition of the Indian appropriation bill I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Nevada is granted and Senate bill 4160 will be taken from the calendar and postponed indefinitely.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Goff	Oliver	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Gore	Owen	Smoot
Brady	Hitchcock	Page	Sterling
Bristow	Hollis	Perkins	Sutherland
Bryan	Hughes	Pittman	Swanson
Burleigh	Jones	Pomerene	Thomas

Chilton	Lewis	Saulsbury	Tillman
Clapp	McCumber	Shafroth	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Vardaman
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Warren
Culberson	Myers	Shively	Weeks
Cummins	Nelson	Simmons	West
Dillingham	Norris	Smith, Ariz.	White
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.	Williams

Mr. CAMDEN. My colleague [Mr. JAMES] is absent on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. He is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. SHIVELY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KERN] on important business. I desire that this announcement shall stand for all roll calls to-day.

Mr. MYERS. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KENYON]. I make the announcement for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a month ago to-day I called the attention of the Senate to the imports and exports for the month of April, 1914. I desire now to occupy about five minutes of the time of the Senate in calling attention to the imports and exports for the month of May, 1914.

The total imports for May, 1914, were $163,637,386. For May, 1913, they were $133,723,713, or an increase of importations for the month of May, 1914, over the month of May, 1913, of $29,913,673.

The total domestic exports in May, 1914, were $157,406,572, a decrease of $33,649,228 compared with the month of May, 1913.

Taking the imports and exports together, they show a loss to our commerce for the month of May of this year as compared with May, 1913, of $63,562,901.

I call the attention of the Senate to the statement I made in the Senate one month ago, showing a loss for that month, taking imports and exports together, of $63,890,849, a little more than for the month of May this year.

For April and May the loss amounts to $127,453,750. The $29,913,673 increase in our imports means idleness for thousands of our workmen. The $29,913,673 increase of imports of goods simply takes the place of that many goods made by American workmen.

From to-day's statement of the United States Treasury at the close of business June 18, 1914, received this morning, I see the revenues from customs receipts for June to that date were $14,753,811.23, and for the corresponding month and date of the fiscal year 1913 they were only $13,734,195.54, or an increase of $1,019,615.69, notwithstanding the great decrease in the rate of duties charged as compared with a year ago.

The month of June is in a fair way of making a worse showing than either April or May of this year.

I also call attention to the amount and increased percentage of importations of certain lines of goods ready for consumption during the month of April, 1914, as compared with the month of April, 1913. Mr. President, I shall not stop to read it, but I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Imports of merchandise in April, 1914, compared with April, 1913.

Products.	1914, values.	1913, values.	Increase.	Increase, per cent.
Aluminum, manufactures of	$120,981	$102,472	$18,509	18
Automobiles, parts of	94,838	24,997	69,841	279

Wool:
Class 1	6,581,569	1,658,168	4,923,401	296
Class 2	445,869	215,504	230,365	106
Class 3	1,799,657	969,440	830,217	85
Woolen cloths	1,282,786	257,533	1,025,253	398
Dress goods	321,661	226,871	94,790	42
Wearing apparel	124,996	90,684	34,312	37
All other imports of wool	1,616,989	416,294	1,200,695	288
Totals	40,653,585	17,691,945	22,961,640	129

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection I simply want to call attention to some of the increases. For instance, lace and lace articles, 104 per cent; leather and tanned skins, 114 per cent; silk and manufactures of silk, 401 per cent; woolen cloths, 398 per cent. I shall not continue further, but will simply say that the average increase on goods ready for consumption in the items named is 129 per cent for the month of April.

In this connection I wish also to read an article found in the Washington Post this morning, dated New York, June 19.

[From the Washington Post, June 20, 1914.]

FORTY-THREE MILLION DOLLARS SENT NEW YORK—SHIPMENT OF UNITED STATES TREASURY GOLD IS TO REPLACE METAL LATELY EXPORTED.

NEW YORK, June 19.

Guards of the United States Express Co., armed with repeating rifles and automatic revolvers, have delivered $43,000,000 to the Subtreasury in this city in the last week. The gold, in bars and coin, came from other branches of the United States Treasury, and constituted the greatest transfer of the precious metal ever made between Subtreasuries. The last of the gold came in over the Lehigh Valley Railroad Thursday morning. It was contained in five express cars, each bearing $5,000,000.

These transfers of gold by the Government were promoted by the fact that for the last six weeks the country has been losing gold to Europe on a large scale. Since May 1, $53,000,000 has gone out, and since the beginning of the year a total of $69,000,000.

Mr. President, considering the imports and exports, there is no wonder that gold exportation should be taking place, and if there is not a change before many months in the amount of increased imports and the amount of decreased exports, we may well wonder what is going to happen to our finances in the near future. It can not be otherwise than detrimental. We can not have this amount of trade running against us without some disastrous results.

I simply call this to the attention of the Senate now, because there was some question raised in the Senate when I heretofore called attention to the imports and exports for the month of April, and it was then contended that it merely happened for that month.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I desire to say a word about the outflow of gold. The movement of gold is a very delicate matter that is governed entirely by the rate of exchange. When any foreign country is willing to pay a small fraction of 1 per cent more for the use of gold, they can draw it from us. The reason that is ascribed by the best economists for the present outflow of gold is that foreign investors and security holders have become so frightened at the disclosures regarding the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and at the frauds that were perpetrated in the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad deal, that they are dumping over our securities and are sending them back to this country. We therefore have to send the gold abroad to pay for them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] began his statement. I came in after he had probably been on the floor some little time and came in at the request of some Senators who sent for me. I did not hear distinctly a part of the statement of the Senator from Utah after I came in. I do not therefore feel at this time that I am called upon to make any response. I will, however, read the RECORD to-morrow morning, and if there is anything in the statement of the Senator to which I desire to refer I shall do so later.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the figures from which I quoted are figures received from the department this morning. More than likely the Senator from North Carolina will also receive the same figures at his office in his mail to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has taken a very melancholy view of our commercial conditions and has indulged in some forebodings as to the consequences of a continuation of the decreases in imports and exports. Of course the depression which exists in the United States, which the Senator attributes to the condition of business as outlined in his figures, means a corresponding prosperity in other countries which have benefited by these conditions. I should like to ask the Senator what particular country of the Old World is basking in the sunshine of that prosperity and progress and indicative of the conditions there as reflected from the bad conditions here?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Colorado, I will say that the report from the Treasury Department does not show from what countries this extra $29,000,000 worth of goods were imported; but from whatever countries they were imported the foreign workmen had just that much more work than they would have had if they had not been imported into this country.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, it must be a calamity to the civilized world to know that a few workmen somewhere have been benefited. For my part, I am very glad of it.

Mr. SMOOT. As between the workmen of another country and the workmen of America, I prefer to have the workmen of America receive the benefit.

Mr. THOMAS. So do I, Mr. President; but I think if the Senator, whose knowledge of statistics is much greater than mine, had cared to do so, he could have furnished us some facts concerning the multitude of foreigners who are coming over here upon every vessel which sails from a European port, thus escaping from that prosperous condition which is there now so prevalent, that he may engage in competition with our workmen here. It is somewhat surprising to me, if our unsatisfactory situation, commercially speaking, has resulted in so much benefit to the workmen of Europe, that they should still crowd our shores in such large numbers, aggravating our own labor problems here and reducing opportunity for securing that amount of work which is still left to us. Industrial conditions, Mr. President, are not satisfactory anywhere, but are quite as good here as elsewhere.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I think there is no difficulty in accounting for the present condition of the country. Three groups of men having their headquarters in New York have been shown, through interlocking directorates and interlocking control, to have the direction of approximately $22,000,000,000 of property, and practically to have the control over nearly every railway in the country and every one of the great industrials. Those men can forbid the railroads to buy rails, to buy steel cars, to buy railroad frogs and switches, to buy lumber, and to buy crossties; those men can put out of employment thousands and tens of thousands of men; those men can constrict credits in the districts of Representatives who are to be elected in the fall and in the States of Senators who are to be elected in the fall; they can by their power make hard times in districts where they want to have a change and where they want to defeat those in sympathy with a correction of those conditions, whether those candidates be Democrats or progressive Republicans.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator's argument does not answer any statement whatever that I made. If these men in New York have made hard times, and if they have restricted credits—and I do not say that they have or that they have not done so—but, if they have, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the importations for the month of April, 1914, were over $30,000,000 more than the importations for the month of April, 1913, and the importations for the month of May, 1914, were $29,900,000 more than they were for the month of May, 1913; so that, if the prosperous times had continued, there is no telling what the increased importations might have been.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I rise to a point of order, which is that the pending question before the Senate is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. The pending question is on the motion of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to lay on the table the motion of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the committee on page 77, beginning in line 18, as amended on motion of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was agreed to. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. GORE. I think that perhaps I made the motion to reconsider not the vote which I had in mind; and, with the consent of the junior Senator from Mississippi, I will withdraw that motion to reconsider and move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the committee amendment was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amended amendment was agreed to. It can not be otherwise.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, the vote to be taken is on the motion to lay on the table, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote about to be taken is on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As I do not know how he would vote on this question if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). I desire to announce—and I will let this announcement stand for the day—that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is unavoidably absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair wtih the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LODGE], who is absent, has a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I should like to have that statement stand for the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business, and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. WEEKS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GOFF. I should like to inquire if the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. GOFF. Then I withhold my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. I announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 23, as follows:

Mr. LANE. I wish again to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The question recurs on the motion of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to lay on the table the motion of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee on page 77, beginning on line 18, as amended on the motion of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], was agreed to. On that the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LANE (when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S name was called). I wish again to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the former roll call in regard to my pair.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. In his absence I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). Again announcing the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], I vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I make the same transfer as heretofore announced and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I have received information from his colleague to the effect that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In view of the announcement made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and that the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 26, as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona desire to go back to the items relating to Montana or to continue the further reading of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Have all of the Oklahoma items been finished?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have been finished.

Mr. ASHURST. I was not aware that the amendment on pages 72 and 73 had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; that has not been agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, my recollection is that there was a certain amendment reserved at the instance of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. That Senator interposed a point of order against part of the amendment. I think it is also true that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] reserved a point of order. It may possibly be they were disposed of while I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the point of order was made to the amendment beginning on line 11, page 72, and extending to line 26, on page 75. The amendment involves different propositions and is separable. I therefore withdraw the point of order so far as the first two paragraphs are concerned—the paragraphs beginning with line 11, on page 72, and extending to and including line 10, on page 73.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, then, on agreeing to the first of the amendments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, beginning with line 6, the Committee on Indian Affairs report to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enroll on the proper respective rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, as indicated, the persons enumerated in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order to the next paragraph?

Mr. STERLING. The point of order is that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where does it begin, the Chair inquires?

Mr. CLAPP. On page 73, line 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems that the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has just agreed to an amendment, on page 73, embodied in lines 6 to 10, inclusive, but the Chair is now informed that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] had an amendment pending to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I had offered an amendment to that part of the bill, but I understood a point of order had been made against the part of the bill to which my amendment applied, and that the point of order had been sustained and it had gone out. I understand now that the point of order has been withdrawn, and it has never been decided upon. That being the case, I offer the amendment which the Secretary will read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was adopted will be reconsidered unanimously, unless there is objection. The amendment proposed to the amendment by the Senator from Mississippi will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] offers to amend the amendment on page 73, beginning in line 6 and ending in line 10, by adding at the end of line 10 the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to enroll on said citizenship rolls all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, in the roll and report of said commission dated March 10, 1899, and in subsequent reports of said commission, which persons have not heretofore been finally enrolled; and he shall also enroll all full-blood Mississippi Choctaws not heretofore enrolled, and all persons who may satisfactorily establish their rights as descendants of Choctaws to whom privileges were guaranteed by the provisions of articles 14 and 19 of the treaty of 1830, known as the "Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate to any great extent, except to explain the amendment. If this amendment is adopted, it will be to do in connection with this particular Senate amendment just what we did on page 73 and just what we did finally to the other Senate amendment on page 78. It is to conserve the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws in the same manner here as the Senate has conserved them on page 78.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi what is the necessity of having this amendment adopted here if it applies to the same Indians to whom the other amendment of the Senator applied?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other was a matter of distribution and this is a matter of enrollment.

Mr. NORRIS. It applies to the same Indians, does it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee amendment to which I offer this amendment is an amendment which opens up the rolls for the purpose of placing upon them the persons enumerated in Senate Document No. 478 of the Sixty-third Congress, second session.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My amendment is, if that is to be done, then to place also upon these rolls these Mississippi Choctaws who were enrolled by Capt. McKennon and the Dawes Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator a question. I understood that the amendment he offered yesterday, and which was agreed to, provided that this distribution could not take place until the Mississippi Choctaws had been enrolled. Is that true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true; but that was a matter of distribution. Now, this is a matter of enrollment with a view to future distribution. Does the Senator understand it?

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the amendment the Senator offered yesterday, it would necessitate the enrollment of these same Indians that the Senator now seeks to enroll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; unfortunately it would not. It would merely prevent the distribution until they were enrolled, but it does not enforce the enrollment.

Mr. OWEN. This amendment would enroll them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say if we are going to open up the rolls in order to put these people upon it, I want to put my people upon it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator's argument yesterday was mostly based on his proposition that the Mississippi Choctaws ought to be enrolled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and that there ought not to be any distribution of the fund until they are enrolled, so that they can have their share of it. Now, here is a proposition to enroll certain persons not thus far enrolled, and to that I offer an amendment to enroll these people.

Mr. NORRIS. This amendment, then, is the real meat of the contention made by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a part of it. The other related to the holding back of the distribution until they were enrolled. Now, this provides that they shall be enrolled, provided these other people are enrolled.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Committee on Indian Affairs has never passed upon this proposition of the Senator from Mississippi, and I think I will be justified in saying that the Committee on Indian Affairs would not adopt such a provision, because the evidence does not justify it and because the Secretary of the Interior in report after report for seven years has strongly opposed the reopening of these rolls.

It is true that in 1898, 16 years ago, the Dawes Commission made a visit to Mississippi and spent about 30 days. In that time they made a schedule of people who came before them and whom they believed to be Indians. Upon that list were one thousand nine hundred and odd people. The Dawes Commission reported that those people who came before them could not furnish the proof which was necessary to establish their right under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830; that they could not prove who their ancestors were; that they could not prove that they were fourteenth-article claimants; and upon that report the Secretary of the Interior refused to recognize them.

Obviously in 30 days it would be impossible to pass upon 1,900 cases. But afterwards, under the instruction of Congress, up to the year 1907, for nine long years after that report was made, the Dawes Commission patiently examined case after case upon a review of the 1898 schedule, and finally listed 1,642 persons as Mississippi Choctaws, people who had been invited from 1830 to come West and had refused.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to propound a question to the Senator, and I ask it for the purpose of getting information. I am not well informed.

Mr. OWEN. I will be glad to give any information I can.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there any question as to whether these Mississippi Indians are members of the Choctaw Tribe? Is that question controverted?

Mr. OWEN. Of course, it is controverted. They are not members of the tribe. They are not entitled to membership in the tribe. Those who are entitled under the laws have already been admitted, amounting to 1,642 persons by the completed roll of 1907.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator contend that these 1,600 and more are not properly members of the tribe?

Mr. OWEN. They are properly members. There were 1,642 who complied with the terms of the act of Congress of 1902.

Mr. NORRIS. They are still in Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; they are in Oklahoma.

Mr. NORRIS. The point I wanted to inform myself on was in relation to the Indians who are still in Mississippi.

Mr. OWEN. There were some Choctaw Indians, or those of Choctaw blood who remained in Mississippi, who did not move to Oklahoma under the law of 1902, which required them to do so if they wanted to become citizens. The people who remained in Mississippi having failed and refused to comply with the conditions imposed by the act of 1902 have no legal right, and I insist that they have no moral right, because they have been invited, they and their ancestors were invited, from 1830 down to 1907 to move into Oklahoma, where they might join the Choctaw people west, and they could not under the Choctaw law and under the United States law enjoy such rights, even if full-blood Choctaws, unless they did remove before March 4, 1907.

Mr. NORRIS. I gathered the idea from the debate that took place yesterday that in a technical legal sense they probably were not members of the tribe. I want to ask the Senator if these Mississippi Indians called the Mississippi Choctaws had removed to Oklahoma would they have been entitled to enrollment? In other words, is there any other reason why they are not entitled to enrollment except the fact that they remained in Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. Yes. They would not only have been obliged to move into Oklahoma, but they would have been obliged also to prove that they were full-blood Mississippi Choctaws and descendants of fourteenth-article claimants of 1830, and they would have had to live for three years upon the land, and would have had to furnish proof within four years to the Dawes Commission that they had complied with those conditions.

Mr. NORRIS. On one of those propositions which the Senator has laid down, namely, that they would have had to prove that they were full-blood Choctaws, is there any evidence or is the Senator himself aware as to what the facts are in regard to that particular proposition? Are they Choctaws?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know the individuals who remained in Mississippi; I suppose that there might be some who were full-blood Choctaws in that country. But I will have to explain to the Senator that the agreement of 1902, by which this controversy of long standing was settled, related to property distribution involving very large values, and the Choctaws and Chickasaws west who had the legal right to these values were not willing to permit people to come in without a legal right, and the Mississippi Choctaws were unable to furnish any proof that would bring them within the rule. The compromise was effected, the western Choctaws buying their peace by waiving the legal evidence on condition of the above-named proposals being strictly observed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to suggest to the Senator, in view of his answer to the Senator from Nebraska, that the Choctaws in Mississippi made no effort to make proof. I understand that, as a matter of fact, a great many of them knew nothing in the world about the invitation to go to the Indian Territory. When the Senator says they failed to make proof, the point we make is that those people are very illiterate, a thriftless people without ambition, and a great many of them, I daresay, did not know anything about it. There is no evidence that these people ever undertook to make any proof of their lineage.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Dawes Commission published notices in the papers all over Mississippi in 1898. They sent runners out through Mississippi to see these people and call upon them. There were numerous attorneys who were interested in getting these people on the rolls and who were busy, therefore, to try to get them before the Dawes Commission. Every effort that could be made was made to get them there. That was done first in 1898, and it was continued during 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, up to 1907, and up to 1907 some of them were finally admitted, but those admitted were required by this compromise with the Choctaws and Chickasaws who lived west to conform to certain reasonable conditions.

I thought at the time that the conditions were rather hard, because they were required to move within six months. They were required to live there for three years. They were required to furnish the proof of such removal. But the Dawes Commission recognizing what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] says to be true, that they were ignorant people, took great pains to have their clerks look them up, to look after them and ascertain what the facts were, and it resulted in the enrollment of 1,642, amounting to property right estimated somewhere between $10,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Now, the question comes up as to their moral right. I suppose no one pretends they have any legal right. It is obvious that they have no legal right, because the treaty right which they claim, or which is claimed for them under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, was passed upon by Judge Clayton, of the United States court, having special jurisdiction in that regard, and he held that unless they had complied with the requirements and had moved and established residence they were not entitled, and he passed against their claim under the fourteenth article. It was passed on also by the Dawes Commission, acting as a special tribunal under the act of Congress of March 3, 1897. They found also that they were not entitled to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation unless they had removed and unless they should furnish proof that they were lineal descendants of fourteenth-article claimants. The nineteenth-article claimants, though full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, or the descendants of the nineteenth-article claimants of the treaty of 1830 had no right to citizenship whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. As tending to throw just a little light on the moral obligation, if any had existed, I want to ask the Senator what the facts were in regard to the property of the Choctaws who remained in Mississippi. Did they have property given to them?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. They had allotments of land?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; 640 acres for an adult; they had 320 acres for a child over 10 years of age and 160 acres for a child under 10 years of age.

Mr. NORRIS. I got an idea yesterday, from what was said here, that while that order was under a law passed by Congress, in fact it was never carried out—at least in full.

Mr. OWEN. It was not carried out in full, but the omission was corrected after that failure by Murray & Vroom giving land scrip to those who previously had not received land allotments.

Mr. NORRIS. Did these Indians in reality get any benefit from that or was it of such a nature that speculators got hold of the scrip and really deprived the Indians of it? I have been told by the Senators from Mississippi that these Indians are very poor, that they have no property, and that their cases are really pitiable. The idea struck me that before we attempt to give them a distribution of the property that is to go to the other members of the tribe, who, I understand, are very wealthy and have lots of property, we ought to ascertain as far as the moral obligation is concerned whether they have once been supplied with their share of the property and whether they have lost it or whether it has been taken away from them on account of the negligence of the Government; and if so, whether it ought not to be an obligation of the Government to take care of them rather than the other members of the tribe. I should like to get any light the Senator may be able to give me on that question.

Mr. OWEN. Murray & Vroom were charged by the United States with the duty of giving them this sum. They ascertained who the Indians were; they gave each his part—one-half of it in Mississippi, and they agreed to give the other half to them in Oklahoma when they moved. That led to an immigration to Oklahoma of all those who were found entitled by Murray & Vroom. Murray & Vroom found 4,100, and the muster roll shows that 3,400 moved prior to 1855 of the Murray & Vroom group and 728, I believe it was, afterwards moved, making something over 4,100—about 4,128, who afterwards moved, so that all of those who were found by Murray & Vroom to be entitled as fourteenth-article claimants appeared to have moved to Oklahoma. The rule of the Five Civilized Tribes is that when a man abandons his citizenship, abandons his residence with a particular tribe and moves, he becomes an alien, he ceases to be a member of the tribe, and he must be readmitted by order of the tribe. That is in the constitution of the Cherokee Nation, and that has been the practice in the other tribes. So they would readmit, if they wanted to, but they did that as an act of grace and not as a legal right under the Indian communal law, which they recognized and under which they lived. So that of the number that Murray & Vroom recognized—4,100—it appears that all of them moved over to Oklahoma.

There were a lot of the nineteenth-article claimants, full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, who did not have any right recognized or claimed by anybody. These full-blood Choctaws did not claim to have any right of citizenship. They got large grants of land; they did not claim any citizenship in Oklahoma. Yet the Senator from Mississippi makes a sweeping claim for all persons of Choctaw blood without discrimination. Obviously it was necessary for the Government of the United States within some reasonable time to determine who should be the people to whom the allotments should be made.

The Dawes Commission in 1893—21 years ago—were instructed to go and arrange a distribution of these Indian lands and properties, to make agreements with these people for that purpose. In 1896—18 years ago—the Dawes Commission was instructed by an act of Congress, which I read here yesterday, to make up the roll of citizenship. That roll was by act of Congress absolutely terminated on the 4th of March, 1907, after 11 years of controversy. Congress by that act declared that the roll should be permanently closed as of that date.

We now move to put on the roll about 400 people, because since that time, from 1907 to 1914, the department found about 400 people whom they thought were equitably entitled. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] takes advantage of our liberality in asking to have these people put on who have apparently an equitable right—and that is the language of the report, "apparently an equitable right"—our liberality in offering to put these Indians on the rolls and asking that this amendment should go on is taken advantage of by the Senator from Mississippi to ask a wholesale reopening of the rolls, to ask that all the 1,910 people who were put upon the rejected schedule of 1898 by the Dawes Commission, 16 years ago, be enrolled and to otherwise reopen the rolls.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the junior Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. I shall do so in just a moment. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] now asks to let nearly 2,000 people be put on the rolls, although the Dawes Commission, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Secretary of the Interior have scrutinized that rejected schedule and found there were a number of people who are on that schedule who ought not to be put on the roll. Now I yield to the junior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask the Senator did the Dawes Commission approve of adding to the rolls those that he proposes to enroll?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir; in part.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Did the Dawes Commission state that they were entitled to be enrolled?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir; in part.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Why is it that that has been delayed so long?

Mr. OWEN. The list, of course, includes a great many different kinds of people. I can not from my personal knowledge of it tell exactly what the action severally was, but the department, passing upon these cases, either had to disapprove or approve them. It disapproved some; some came in too late; that is, after the Dawes Commission had approved the enrollment and there were quite a few that came in too late for the department to act upon their cases.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it not a fact that in 1907, just at the close of the rolls, the Secretary of the Interior transmitted a letter to Congress, urging that the time be extended, because he said that he could not finish the roll, and that there were others who should be included?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; and Congress did not agree to change the law. The Interior Department found at that time quite a number of cases which they did not have full opportunity to carefully consider and review under all of the regular processes which the department follows, yet I remind the Senator that for 10 years these cases had been being heard; many of them had been heard by the Interior Department and sent back to the Dawes Commission, then sent back to the Interior Department, and then again sent back to the Dawes Commission, and were before the Secretary for a third time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But, Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if, as the guardian of these unfortunate people, if there are any people in Mississippi who are entitled to share in this benefaction, he does not feel that the Congress is morally bound to ascertain that fact and to permit them to so share?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, Congress has taken the most extreme pains by beginning in 1896 and only closing after 10 years of hearings——

Mr. VARDAMAN. As a matter of fact——

Mr. OWEN. Just a moment; let me answer. This Congress authorized the Dawes Commission to make up its rolls in 1896. The Dawes Commission was instructed in 1897 to report on the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. The Dawes Commission made a report that those Indians were not entitled to rights unless they moved to the western country, established a residence there, and proved that they were descendants of the fourteenth-article claimants. Judge Clayton held the same thing in effect, and he was authorized by Congress to pass upon it. The Supreme Court confirmed the Clayton decision in a group of cases—the Stephens case. After 10 years the Interior Department finally closed those rolls under the instruction of Congress, and the 400 whom we ask to have enrolled are simply those whom the department, after 7 years of inquiry, since that time—from 1907 to 1914—say they believe are equitably entitled.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is the Senator willing for them to be enrolled?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, the Senator is not sure, but I am certain that there are others in Mississippi, and probably elsewhere, that are entitled to the same consideration at the hands of Congress that the persons are entitled to who are included in this amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there are a hundred thousand Indian people in Oklahoma who are entitled to their peace. They have left this matter in the hands of the United States to distribute this property among them. From 1896 to 1907—11 years—these questions of citizenship were before the authorities, and finally Congress closed these rolls. Is it any wonder that the people down there do not want this Pandora's box opened, to open the matter widely to anybody on earth who claims to be of some Indian extraction, to come in and demand a part of that estate now, when the Indians have no longer any organized method by which to resist it, when they have no longer attorneys, with suitable expenses provided, representing them and paid to take care of their interests, and when perjury and fraud may be successfully used against them? It would be a ruinous thing to do; it would be grossly unjust to over a hundred thousand Indians to reopen these rolls now. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have repeatedly and steadfastly since 1907 refused to recommend it, but have recommended the contrary. I appeal to the Senate to give Oklahoma and its Indian people the peace they are legally and morally entitled to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, because I shall certainly not run over the whole ground that was run over a year ago and also upon yesterday.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. It strikes me the Senator's amendment is subject to this criticism: The provision made in the paragraph, from line 11, page 72, to line 5, page 73, and from lines 6 to 10, on page 73, in both cases, inclusive, are cases which the committee has gone over and is prepared to recommend specific action—in the one case to submit it to the commissioner for determination, and in the other case to take fifty-odd names enumerated on the list in the document referred to and enroll them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I assure the Senator that, so far as the committee is concerned, there is no difference between the two cases, except that the committee chose to consider one and chose not to consider the other. This amendment of mine was offered May 18, 1914, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAPP. That is true. The committee went over this matter for I do not know how long; I know I spent days upon it myself; and now the Senator proposes not simply to refer the subject for consideration and determination but to place the Mississippi Choctaws in the same category with those covered by the paragraph from lines 6 to 10 by a direction to enroll them. I should certainly, under those circumstances, feel constrained to vote against the Senator's amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. CLAPP. I borrowed the amendment from the Secretary and read it, and that was my reading of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee amendment reads:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enroll—

And so forth.

My amendment says that—

And the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to enroll on said citizenship rolls all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, in the roll and report of said commission dated March 10, 1899, and in subsequent reports of said commission, which persons have not heretofore been finally enrolled.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment. That refers to the 1,100 men to whom the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] referred in his brief, as shown on page 3981 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 20, 1914, which I quoted yesterday. The names of these 1,100 men were pigeonholed in the Department of the Interior for eight years, as he himself says, and as he thinks, by some underhand opposition; he can not understand it except in that way. The Senator from Oklahoma states further in his brief:

The report—

Referring to the Dawes Commission report submitting the names of 1,100 Mississippi Choctaws—

The report declares that the Mississippi Choctaws were poor, ignorant, and helpless. This report in behalf of the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, signed by the Dawes Commission, was disapproved eight years later by Mr. Secretary Hitchcock, on March 4, 1907, without notice or warning, so that no person upon this roll ever knew for eight years whether he was so far identified as to be entitled to remove as an identified Choctaw.

The remainder of my amendment does not go that far. It reads:

And he shall also enroll all full-blood Mississippi Choctaws not heretofore enrolled.

They are to be full-blood Choctaws. There is not any trouble about identifying full bloods. The Senator will agree with me about that. Then, the only part of it which is left in doubt is this that I am about to read:

And all persons who may satisfactorily establish their rights as descendants of Choctaws to whom privileges were guaranteed by the provisions of articles 14 and 19 of the treaty of 1830, known as the "treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek."

This last class can not be enrolled until they can satisfactorily establish their descent. In connection with that, I may say that we might entirely ignore that provision, because very few, if any, of them can satisfactorily prove who their grandfathers and great-grandfathers were.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator evidently does not catch my point, which is that the Senator's amendment proposes not to refer the matter, as we have in the amendment from line 11, page 72, to line 5, page 73, but to place these names in the same category with the names covered by the amendment from lines 6 to 10, on page 73—that is, without further consideration the Secretary must enroll them. I, for one, can not vote for that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I catch the Senator's point now.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall reserve the right to make a point of order against the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, I reserve the right to make a point of order against the amendment to which it is an amendment. Both must fall or both must stand.

Mr. OWEN. Then I make the point of order now, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the committee amendment is this:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enroll on the proper respective rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, as indicated, the persons enumerated in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

My amendment is:

And the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to enroll on said citizenship rolls—

Certain other Indians, to wit—all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, in the roll and report of said commission dated March 10, 1899, and in subsequent reports of said commission, which persons have not heretofore been finally enrolled.

It is self-evident that, if my amendment is out of order, the amendment to which it is an amendment is also out of order. They both have exactly the same object in view. I therefore make the point of order against the committee amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, of course I shall not debate the point of order; it is not debatable; but it is an unfortunate fact that here is one group of Indians whose names have been sent in and whom everybody is agreed should be enrolled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want any point of order made; I would rather not make it, and if the Senator from Oklahoma will withdraw his point of order, I will withdraw mine.

Mr. OWEN. I will not withdraw it.

Mr. CLAPP. That is not what I am talking about. Then, here is another group as to whom everybody concedes the question should be submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; but every time that we try to get justice done to the group in the second paragraph or to submit the claims of the Indians covered by the first paragraph, the proposition is made to add a further provision, to which, of course, the Representatives from Oklahoma can not consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I was just engaged in reforming my amendment to meet the views of the Senator from Minnesota, for I think that one point he made was a good one, and that I ought to heed it—when the Senator from Oklahoma made the point of order. Then I made the point of order to the committee amendment as well. If there is any fault in the matter of not permitting any of these people to get a hearing, it is not mine.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, what seems to me unfair is that one Indian, whose right is absolutely unquestioned anywhere, should be barred unless there is attached to his right the condition precedent of admitting another Indian to enrollment, about whose right there may be very serious question. I do not believe that one man's right in dealing with the Government, where it is at the mercy of those who administer the Government, should be made dependent upon the question of whether or not another man is able to secure his right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I not ask the Senator from Mississippi to offer his amendment as a separate paragraph? Is he not willing to do that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, Mr. President; I am not, for the very simple reason—the Senator sees the parliamentary situation as well as I do—that if I do that I shall then be forced to make a point of order to the committee amendment, or else I shall be forced to pass it without making it and allow it to be adopted, and then submit my amendment to a point of order; and, of course, it will go out on a point of order, and so will the committee amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the Senator stopped to consider that possibly putting out the other matter on a point of order will not be objectionable to the Senator who makes the point of order to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi? We have had a good deal of work in trying to get this matter consummated up to this time, and I confess that personally I have been in sympathy with having the matter of the right to be enrolled determined. I can not vote myself for the proposition offered by the Senator from Mississippi now, although I am in sympathy with the determination of that fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Oklahoma had not interrupted me, I was going to modify the amendment so as to meet this point. I think the Senator from Minnesota is right. I ought not to ask that these people be placed upon the rolls right now. I ought to ask simply that the matter be sent to the Secretary to be considered, with the qualification that, in considering it, he should consider no lapse of time in previous laws whereby they are barred.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The point I am trying to make to the Senator is that the fact that he insists that this shall be a part of that committee amendment, the former amendment which has been adopted, or that both shall go out, will not bring about the result that he desires, because, as I say, I think possibly the Senator who will make the point of order to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi had just as soon have the other amendment go out. Therefore, it seems to me, nothing, possibly, can be accomplished except the defeat of both amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the point of order be withheld for a moment. I think perhaps we can arrive at a conclusion that will suit all.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma, the Senator from Minnesota, and the Senator from Michigan. I am willing, if Senators are willing, to offer this amendment at the end of line 5 instead of at the end of line 10, on page 73, and have it read, as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to consider and determine the claims to enrollment on said citizenship rolls of all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21—

And have it read just like it does now down to the end, and then add this—and he shall determine their rights regardless of any limitations as to the time for their assertion hitherto fixed in any statute.

If the Senator will agree to withdraw his point of order, I will agree to withdraw my point of order to the language of the committee amendment; and by putting it in the other place, and changing the language to that extent, it will obviate the objections of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. At any rate, before that is done, and before the point of order is made—because I want the point of order to be made to the amendment as I now offer it—I ask to modify the amendment as follows:

After the words "directed to," in line 2 of the amendment, insert the words "consider and determine the claims to"; strike out the word "enroll" and insert "enrollment"; after the word "rolls," in line 2, insert "of"; and at the end of it insert the language which I a moment ago dictated to the Secretary.

It is as much subject to a point of order, of course, after that as it was before, but I want it to read in that way because I think that is fair. I think the criticism of the Senator from Minnesota in that respect was just.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the United States made a contract with the Choctaws and Chickasaws west by which the United States obtained the consent of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to give up their tribal governments, to give up their legislatures and their courts and their officers, to become part of a new State, and to distribute their property. The Indians consented with very great reluctance; but as a part of the consideration there was an agreement to have a distribution of their property and to have the rolls made up and concluded.

I should regard it as a breach of faith with these people—I think it would involve the United States in a very large claim, amounting to millions of dollars, which they would bring against the United States and demand to be repaid out of the Treasury of the United States—if we should pass any such arbitrary act. For that reason I can not consent to it, and I can not make a compromise which would lead to it.

I should be glad to enroll these 400 people who have been found by the department equitably entitled to enrollment; but if the Senator imposes the condition that they shall go out unless I consent to something which I do not think is right, I shall be obliged to yield to the conditions I find confronting me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, I make the point of order that the language in the lines from 6 to 10, on page 73, is new legislation upon an appropriation bill, and there is a law upon the statute books closing the enrollment, and any reopening of it at all is new legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Both points of order will be sustained. Is there any appeal from the ruling of the Chair? The Chair also sustains the point of order as to the succeeding paragraph. Is there any appeal from the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, is it in order at this time to make a point of order to the amendment on page 77, down to and including line 10, on page 78? If it is, I desire to make it, on the ground that it is not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill, nor is it an amendment to any item or clause of the bill to which it directly relates, and besides, it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Colorado that both points of order were presented. The Chair held that it was not general legislation, and the Senate held, by a vote of 40 to 15, that it was germane. It has already been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. If it has been disposed of, then I wish to inquire whether I can make the point of order after the bill comes into the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is going to be the ruling of the Chair as now constituted, if it happens to be occupied by the present occupant of the Chair—and it might as well be stated now for future information—that points of order must be made in the Committee of the Whole before amendments are agreed to, and if not made in the Committee of the Whole they can not be made in the Senate. The Chair believes, however, that under the rules of the Senate points of order may be reserved, if made in the Committee of the Whole, for the determination of the Senate, as an amendment may be reserved for determination in the Senate. The Chair has no doubt that the Senator from Colorado can reserve the point of order for the Senate, but what it amounts to the Chair is unable to determine, because the point of order has been once overruled.

Mr. THOMAS. I reserve the right to make the point of order against this particular amendment when the bill comes into the Senate. I refer to the amendment on page 77.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to this: At the end of the amendment offered by him yesterday, and which was adopted, on behalf of the committee I propose the amendment, which I send to the desk, to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following words:

Unless the consent of the United States shall have previously been given, all contracts made with any person or persons now applicants for enrollment as citizens in the Five Civilized Tribes for compensation for services in relation thereto are hereby declared to be void and of no effect, and the collection or receipt of any moneys from any such applicants for citizenship shall comprise an offense against the laws of the United States, punishable by a fine of not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or both.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that the amendment as amended was agreed to. I do not see how another amendment can be offered without reconsideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any suggestion of a point of order?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have read the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona, and it seems to me it is all right. It reads in this way:

Unless the consent of the United States shall have previously been given all contracts made with any person or persons now applicants for enrollment as citizens in the Five Civilized Tribes for compensation for services in relation thereto are hereby declared to be void and of no effect, and the collection or receipt of any moneys from any such applicants for citizenship shall comprise an offense against the laws of the United States, punishable by a fine—

And so on.

The point of doubt that arises in my mind about it is this—and I want to suggest a method of curing it, which I think will be accepted by the Senator from Arizona: It declares these contracts to be void and of no effect. There is some doubt about our right to do that. In the act of 1902 certain language appears which I shall ask the Senator to add to his amendment, so that if that should fail because of unconstitutionality this will hang. That language was as follows:

Lands allotted to members and freedmen shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated under this act, unless approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

I put in those words, "unless previously approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. ASHURST. So far as I have any authority so to do——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, that is the point about which all this controversy touching enormous fees has revolved—the power of the Secretary to approve these contracts—and Congress on two different occasions has deliberately decided that it requires the previous approval of Congress in the one instance or the previous approval of the United States in the other. Now, no man can penetrate the future far enough to tell what might happen, and I do not want any single officer of this Government given this authority.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma permit an interruption for a moment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I added to that language in the law of 1902, for the purpose of keeping in with the spirit of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona, the language:

Unless previously approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

I am perfectly willing, however, to strike that out, and then it will read as the Secretary will now read it; that is to say, that the land shall go on unencumbered by any debt, deed, contract, or otherwise made previously to that time.

Mr. GORE. That is it; make it absolute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That will make it absolute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But there is a parliamentary situation here. This amendment as amended has been adopted in Committee of the Whole, and now it is proposed to amend an amendment that has been adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the matter be reconsidered for this purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought we were still in Committee of the Whole, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are in Committee of the Whole, but the amendment has once been adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then we will have to get unanimous consent to go back to it, that is all.

Mr. GORE. I understand this is an amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a motion made to reconsider, and a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to. The Chair is compelled to decide that there can not be two motions to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair is clearly right.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, could it not be adopted by unanimous consent? I do not think there is a Senator upon the floor who would object to it. I ask that it be added by unanimous consent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am not yet familiar with that amendment. I have been trying to get into my mind just exactly what it purports to do, and before I will consent to it I should like to know exactly what the proposition is that is before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as was disclosed yesterday during the debate, and as the Senator from Michigan well knows, because he is a valued and faithful member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and as all of the Senators know, a large number of persons, composed in part of lawyers, in some of the cities of the Southwest have been very assiduously engaged from time to time in the matter of seeking out Indians, either full bloods or quarter bloods or whatever they might be, and getting contracts from them ranging all the way from 15 to as high as 40 per cent, to be paid to the attorney in the event that he secures a judgment for any money or property against the United States. The object of the amendment is to provide that no contract that may be secured with an Indian shall be of any validity unless it is approved in advance by the Interior Department or by the United States Government, and that any property or moneys that may come to an Indian by virtue of any allotment or otherwise shall not be subject to any lien or subject to any charge for any fee.

I need not make any extended remarks on the subject of the abuse. It is so flagrant that it seems to me legislation dealing with it ought to be provided.

The distinguished Senator from Michigan will remember that in the Indian appropriation act last year the Committee on Indian Affairs, after much discussion, added this provision:

No contract made with any Indian where such contract relates to tribal funds or property in the hands of the United States shall be valid, nor shall any payment for services rendered in relation thereto be made, unless the consent of the United States has previously been given.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator mean by "United States" the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ASHURST. No; the legislation of last year provided "unless the consent of the United States has previously been given," leaving it to the Congress of the United States to give the consent.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I heartily agree with the intention of the amendment. I do not think that the country can be worse afflicted than with scavenger lawyers who are out scouring the country to get cases. They do not deserve anything. They do not get any credit at the hands of the profession for any such conduct, and they are not entitled to any consideration at the hands of the public.

I want to ask the Senator from Arizona one question, however, and that question I am induced to ask by what was said by the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator from Mississippi seems to think that Congress has not power to invalidate these contracts. That, I think, would be true if the contract was made with a person sui juris, but is it true with reference to an Indian?

Mr. ASHURST. It is my judgment, as a matter of law, that a contract made with an Indian who has not yet severed his tribal relations with respect to property that is in trust by the United States would not be valid, and in the case of such a contract Congress would have full jurisdiction to invalidate it.

Mr. WHITE. Or impose any condition it pleases upon its appropriation of either lands or money?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir; manifestly.

Mr. WHITE. If that is true, it occurs to me that the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi would not be necessary, though I do not object to it.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is salutary and necessary. I think it is a wise amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the amendment?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not see how we can amend an amendment that has already been accepted by the Senate without reconsidering it. The chairman of the committee can offer this amendment in the Senate and there will then be no parliamentary situation to prevent it. Unless the amendment he proposes to amend is reconsidered I make a point of order that the amendment will not be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order if there is the least objection to it. There is objection made.

Mr. GORE. I should like to inquire if the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona can not be offered as an amendment to the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It may be offered in the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I mean in Committee of the Whole. I know no rule of the Senate which precludes a Senator from offering any amendment to a bill that is pending in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no rule of the Senate which precludes it, but it is not offered as an amendment to the bill. It is offered as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GORE. That would obviously be out of order. I suggest to the Senator from Arizona that he offer his amendment as an amendment to the bill to be inserted at this place.

Mr. ASHURST. I can not do that at this time when we are considering only committee amendments.

Mr. GORE. Very well, if the rule is that way. I did not know it was the rule.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw the amendment, and will offer it at another time. Before we pass from Oklahoma, I think there is one more item reserved.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the John West item, which went out on a point of order. I think if he would present it that there would be no point of order made against it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will ask the chairman of the committee, as I was absent from the Chamber for a little while, whether the item under South Dakota has been reached yet?

Mr. ASHURST. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that it has not been reached yet.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to offer an amendment to that.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the amendment on page 60 be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 60 the committee report to strike out line 14 to line 11 on page 61, the following words:

That the fourteenth paragraph of section 18 of the Indian appropriation act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stats. L., pp. 533, 534), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to cause to be delivered to the persons entitled thereto, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, checks payable to the order of individual Indians who are members of the Band of Mexican Kickapoo Indians residing in the Republic of Mexico, covering individual Indian moneys now on deposit to the credit of such Indians, or in any manner under the control of the superintendent of the Shawnee Indian School and other officers of the Interior Department or which may hereafter be deposited with or come under the control of the Department of the Interior or its representatives, except such moneys as may belong to members of said band who are under 18 years of age and the feeble-minded Indian known as Paw-kaw-kah, in which cases such moneys shall be paid to the proper custodians of the members of said band who are under 18 years of age, and the said Paw-kaw-kah."

And to insert:

That part of the act of Congress approved June 21, 1906 (34 Stats. L., p. 363), reading as follows: "All restrictions as to sale and encumbrance of all lands, inherited and otherwise, of all adult Kickapoo Indians, and of all Shawnee, Delaware, Caddo, and Wichita Indians who have heretofore been or are now known as Indians of said tribes, affiliating with said Kickapoo Indians now or hereafter nonresident in the United States, who have been allotted land in Oklahoma or Indian Territory are hereby removed: Provided, That any such Indian allottee who is a nonresident of the United States may lease his allotment without restriction for a period not exceeding five years: Provided further, That the parent or the person next of kin having the care and custody of a minor allottee may lease the allotment of said minor as herein provided, except that no such lease shall extend beyond the minority of said allottee," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the trust period on the lands allotted to said Indians now held in trust is hereby extended for 10 years from the date of the expiration of the present trust period on said lands, and the further sale of any of the lands allotted to or inherited by the Mexican Kickapoo Indians shall not be permitted without specific authority of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as it will be necessary for me to leave the Chamber in a short time I will ask the permission of the Senator in charge of the bill that I may offer an amendment of which I spoke to him and to which I have his consent, to be inserted on page 55, after line 14. I ask that the amendment be read. It is short, except the description of the land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, after line 14, insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant and convey to the Bismarck Water Supply Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, an easement or right of way for use for a pumping station and for other necessary buildings, railroad tracks, mains, water pipes, and wells on lands appertaining to the Indian school, Bismarck, N. Dak., for the purpose of pumping water from the Missouri River to its reservoir and to supply its patrons with water, such grant to be made upon such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, and such easement to continue so long as used for the aforesaid purposes; the said easement to cover the following described lands, to wit:

That part of lot 3 of section 31, township 139, range 80 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Burleigh, in the State of North Dakota, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point 50 feet easterly from the smaller spur track of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., running along the easterly side of the warehouse of the said railway company, and 1,075 feet southeasterly from the north line of said lot 3, said distance being measured parallel to or concentric with the aforesaid spur track and 50 feet easterly therefrom; thence northwesterly, parallel to or concentric with aforesaid track and 50 feet easterly therefrom, 260 feet; thence north 3° 55′ west 198.5 feet; thence along the southwesterly right-of-way line of the main track of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. 169.4 feet; thence south 13° 40′ east 314 feet, to the point of beginning; said tract of land containing 1.3 acres, more or less.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will briefly, in explanation of this amendment, state that the Bismarck Water Co. buildings for the operation of its waterworks were located on land purchased from the Northern Pacific very near the Northern Pacific bridge crossing the Missouri. A few years ago it was found—or, at least, it was thought—that the intake pipe at that particular point was more or less responsible for a settling of the abutment of the bridge. Therefore the Northern Pacific made an arrangement with the water company to convey it other land and to remove its buildings and structure a few hundred feet down the river. Subsequent to that, and after the tract had been agreed upon, the Northern Pacific conveyed the tract of land to the United States for the purpose of an Indian school. It was in two separate tracts. It made the reservation in one of the tracts granted, but failed, through inadvertence, to make the reservation in the other tract. Therefore this amendment is offered for the purpose of granting the easement over an acre and two-tenths, I think it is, approximately, for the use of the water company, upon such terms as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This not being a committee amendment, it can only be considered at the present time by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask now to recur to the Montana items on page 42.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Montana," in section 9, page 42, line 16, after the word "employees," to strike out "$12,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Flathead Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 19, after the word "employees," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Fort Peck Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 22, after the word "employees," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$20,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Indians at Blackfeet Agency, Mont., including pay of employees, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 2, after the date "1910," to insert "Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Belknap Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved; and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed," so as to make the clause read:

For maintenance and operation, including repairs, of the Milk River irrigation system on the Fort Belknap Reservation, in Montana, $20,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Belknap Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved; and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana offers the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amend by inserting, after the words "United States," in line 11, page 43:

If exercised within three years from the date of the proclamation of the President opening said reservation to settlement.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, this amendment on page 43 is in the exact language of amendments which have been made at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in three or four or perhaps a half dozen points in the bill. At the time this matter came before the Committee on Indian Affairs in the House the question was raised as to why this provision was put in. I read from the Indian appropriation bill hearings, commencing on page 379. Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, said:

Congress has passed in these cases laws extending the State laws for beneficial use to irrigation projects, and it is for the purpose of repealing all those laws so that the Indians will not be required to make beneficial use in accordance with the State laws or else lose their water rights under these projects.

If it is true as is claimed by those who insist upon this amendment that the Federal Government can pay out several hundred thousand dollars to impound waters for the benefit of an Indian reservation, and then pay out millions upon millions of dollars to build irrigating ditches to complete irrigation projects, and if within five years the Indians have not availed themselves of its beneficial use the white man may take the water and carry it elsewhere outside the reservation—I say, if it is true that that is the condition of affairs with reference to these irrigation projects, then I believe we should oppose the very large increases that have been made by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs to the appropriations made in the House until such time as this matter can be put upon some basis that will safeguard the Indians.

I remember that in the Senate discussions a day or two ago the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] demurred to a statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], when he said that these amendments had received the unanimous approval of the Indian Affairs Committee. I have no doubt the Senator states his belief about that, but if he had been present—he was in the hospital, I think—he would have known that this matter was brought up repeatedly in the committee, and that it was the unanimous sentiment of the committee that these large appropriations should not be continued unless the Indians were safeguarded substantially in the manner suggested by the amendment under discussion. It may be well to go back to the hearings had in the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs last year for a moment. I think last year we increased the appropriation for this item above the sum named in the bill as it came from the House something like a half million dollars, and all the time we were acting upon the supposition that the Indian was fully protected.

On page 272 of the hearing, under date of February 8, 1913, I find in the report the following:

Senator MYERS. When you come down to the merits of the matter, I wish I could in some way portray the situation out there.

Remember that the Senator was speaking of these appropriations for the irrigation of Montana Indian lands. I continue:

Senator MYERS. I want to indorse all that Senator Dixon has said, and to say a good deal more if possible. I will not say a good deal more, because you have not the time.

That Flathead Reservation is right in my part of the State. I am frequently on it, and I am thoroughly familiar with it. I live close to it, as well as Senator Dixon, and I am getting letters from people every day—reputable people, whom I can not doubt and who know the situation—portraying the situation there. The circumstances are that when that reservation was thrown open there was some promise on the part of the Government to put water on it at an early day, and those promises induced people to buy those lands and make the first payment; to break up housekeeping in the other States and move out there and go on the 80-acre tracts. The 80-acre tracts are worth nothing without water on them, and the Government led people to believe that water would be put on them. It is all reimbursable.

I want the Senate to especially note that in all these discussions it is apparent that nobody was speaking for the Indian. It was always the white man who was the subject of chiefest solicitude before that committee. I continue to quote from the hearings:

Senator PAGE. Why do you understand the House cut it down?

Senator MYERS. The Secretary of the Interior made it $250,000; but Mr. Newell, the reclamation officer, and the men on the ground who know what they are talking about, state that it ought to be $625,000.

* * * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Do you desire to postpone consideration of this matter until Senator Dixon comes into the room?

Senator MYERS. Yes, sir; if you are going to do anything with it. It is his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Or shall I submit it to the committee now?

Senator MYERS. I would like to ask the gentlemen of the committee a question or two about this. Do any of you doubt that the land is worth this money and that it will be reimbursed to the Government? Do you doubt that the security is sufficient?

Senator CURTIS——

I want to say here that Senator Curtis was quite often the court of final appeal in discussions before our Committee on Indian Affairs, because he had been on that committee for a great many years, was himself, I believe, a half or a fourth blood Indian, knew about all the treaties, and when he expressed an opinion it had great weight with the committee. Here is what he said at that time:

Senator CURTIS. I do not know anything about this particular tract. I have tried to find your last year's hearing, but did not have time. There is one of these reservations in your State where the property owned by the Indians is not sufficient to reimburse the Government. I do not know which one it is, but there is one of them, because——

Senator MYERS. This certainly is not it.

Senator CURTIS. Because they showed that if you got all the money that the land was appraised at it would not then pay back the amount of money that we had advanced for irrigation.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that we are mortgaging the Indian lands for these irrigation schemes, when s Senator Curtis says, with reference to some of them, "if you get all the money the lands were appraised at it would not pay back the amount of money that we had advanced for irrigation."

I want to say here that we have repeatedly had the statements made before the Committee on Indian Affairs that some of these irrigation ditches had been allowed to fill up, to become almost worthless, and yet year after year we are asked to increase these appropriations substantially as they are increased in this bill. As you see on page 43 of the bill before us the House provision called for only $100,000, but we are proposing to increase the sum to $250,000, and yet when you come to safeguarding the Indians by the amendment proposed by the Indian Bureau we are met by a proposal from the Senator from Idaho that the amendment go out on a point of order.

My insistence is that if we are going to rule out this protective clause on a point of order, we do not want to make the increase from $100,000 to $250,000 on this particular appropriation and hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars on other appropriations in this bill for irrigation projects in the one State of Montana. I think we have added half a million dollars in this State alone to what the House provisions called for for irrigation.

These appropriations may not be wrong if we will protect the Indians' rights, but, in my judgment, Mr. President, we are not doing this. We substantially say to the Indian "You must be a farmer. You must make beneficial use of this water." The Indian says, "I have no money; I have no horses; I have no wagons; I have no plows. Help me to the wherewith and I will do it." Our reply to him is substantially this: "No, sir; we are going to tie your hands. We will not give you anything to work with; and yet if you do not make beneficial use of this water within three years—that is the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]—your rights under these irrigation projects may be taken away from you."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from Vermont think that the Indians upon these reservations have a preferential right to the water?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I am not a lawyer and prefer not to express legal opinions, but I would like to read just a paragraph from the hearings. Congressman CARTER, the Indian Congressman from Oklahoma, asked Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs Meritt touching this particular amendment, and his reply was:

That is a general item that we are incorporating in connection with a number of these items. Congress has passed in these cases laws extending the State laws for beneficial use to irrigation projects, and it is for the purpose of repealing all those laws so that the Indians will not be required to make beneficial use in accordance with the State laws or else lose their water rights under these projects.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has not quite answered my question. My question was whether the Senator from Vermont thought the Indians upon these reservations had a preferential right to the water?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment to attempt to answer the question of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to do so, because I am not a lawyer and I am glad the Senator from Arkansas desires to come to my relief.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, the answer of the Senator from Arkansas alone might not answer the purpose I had in my mind. I desired to ascertain, if I could, what is the state of mind of the Senator from Vermont upon this question.

Mr. PAGE. Then let me answer before the Senator from Arkansas makes a statement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wanted to understand whether he thought the Indians had a preferential right.

Mr. PAGE. Some law has been submitted to me which would tend to show this, but whether it is a good or bad law I do not know. In volume 207 of the United States Reports——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the Winters case?

Mr. PAGE. It is the Winters case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am familiar with that case.

Mr. PAGE. It says:

The Government of the United States has the power to reserve waters of a river flowing through a Territory and exempt them from appropriation under the laws of the State which that Territory afterwards becomes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, now——

Mr. PAGE. I only give that for what it is worth. We have been led to believe that the Federal Government has a right to take care of the Indians. If it has not, we want to know it now, so as to better safeguard the matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I shall take occasion some time before this debate is ended to discuss that case; but still the Senator from Vermont has not replied to my question. Does the Senator from Vermont think the Indians have a preferential right?

Mr. PAGE. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that I decline to be catechised as a lawyer, because I am not a lawyer; I am simply giving the business view of the matter as it presents itself to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course it does not require the training of a lawyer for the Senator to make up his mind as to whether or not a right exists.

Mr. PAGE. I have been led to believe by the statement of the assistant commissioner, backed, as I understood, by the opinions of the attorneys of the Interior Department, that the Federal Government has the right to take care of the Indians in the way provided in this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What I was going to suggest to the Senator from Vermont, if he had answered my question, was that either these Indians have a preferential right to this water or they have not—one or the other. If they have a right, no statute can take it away from them; and if they have no right whatever, no statute can confer it upon them. So, as it seems to me, in either view of the situation this provision is of no value; it is of no consequence. That was the only suggestion that I desired at this time to make to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I have no doubt that his law is good, for I respect the Senator's legal abilities very highly. I come at the matter, however, in this way: If the law gives the State the right to take this water away from the Indian, then I do not want to continue year after year to take the Indian's money and put it into these irrigation projects.

I want to read a little further from the hearings upon that point, because I am very deeply interested in this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before the Senator reads the matter to which he refers will he permit me to make a suggestion in answer to his last proposition?

Mr. PAGE. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The attitude which we assume is very plain. It is that the Federal Government has no control or power or right over non-navigable streams in a State. The States own such streams by the very constitutions of the States. So the Federal Government's attempt to controvert the right of a State or the right of the people of a State as to the use of water is perfectly futile. Congress could not succeed in doing it if it tried to do so.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to interrogate the Senator from Arizona for a moment, as he has made a very pertinent suggestion.

Let us admit that the Senator's law is absolutely correct; I am not questioning that at all, for he is a lawyer, and I am not; but I desire to ask him if he would like to have us, as a Senate or as a Congress, appropriate the Indian's money when in one year, two years, or three years the States can step in and take away from the Indian the value which has been paid for with his money?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think there is a man on this floor or on the floor of any other respectable body who would desire to do anything of that kind. Certainly I should not.

Mr. PAGE. That is what we are doing, are we not?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think not, for it is reimbursable to the Indian, where the white man uses it it has to be reimbursed. Water being the life of those people, it can not stand idle for all time, dedicated to me or to anybody else. That would be contrary to the constitution of every one of the arid States. You would hold it up here; the interpretation you would put upon it by your action would be to reservoir this water and keep it there perpetually if some Indian did not take it. The law of the State would not permit such a thing; and the people who live there never would submit to it.

Mr. PAGE. Has the Senator from Arizona read this bill sufficiently to know that in one State alone, the State of Montana, the increase of appropriation by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has been half a million dollars over and above the House provision in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That might be; and yet that might not be half enough, and it might be twice too much.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question for information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator begrudge that appropriation if it goes to a good use? How much would he cut it down?

Mr. PAGE. I believe it is my duty to oppose to the extent of my ability any increase over the House provisions if the Indian's rights can not be safeguarded.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator if he can cite one instance where that has been the case heretofore in Montana?

Mr. PAGE. I simply say that in this matter I am guided by the opinions of the Indian Department. That department and its attorneys have said that this proviso was necessary to protect the Indian. Let me read it, for I want the Senate fully to understand just what we are discussing here:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Belknap Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved; and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States.

This is a precaution which the Indian Department says is necessary. Can I consistently and conscientiously stand here and say that I will approve the increase in the appropriation about which we are now talking, from $100,000 to $250,000, in the face of the statement of the department that this proviso is necessary to protect the Indian? Are we doing our duty as guardians of the Indian if we consent to the use of his money in this lavish manner when we know that he is liable to be deprived of the benefits resulting from these expenditures?

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator from Vermont again yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. PAGE. I first yield to the Senator from Montana, because he was first to ask me to yield.

Mr. MYERS. We have not yet reached the paragraph where there is an increase from $100,000 to $250,000. That paragraph is not the one now under discussion. The insignificant sum of $20,000 is proposed to be allowed for prosecuting the great reclamation project on the Fort Belknap Reservation. There is not one cent of increase provided for in this paragraph.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator from Montana will take the trouble to examine the bill, he will find that the very language, commencing on line 3 and ending in line 12, on page 43, is repeated on line 21 of the same page.

Mr. MYERS. We have not yet reached that.

Mr. PAGE. It is being repeated in practically every one of these irrigation clauses in this appropriation bill, because the Commissioner of Indian Affairs insists that it is necessary to put these provisions into every one of the paragraphs.

Mr. MYERS. I am talking about the pending paragraph now. What would the Senator do about that $20,000 where there is no increase? Would he take it away from them?

Mr. PAGE. I took up this feature of the bill at the very first point when we reached it. The Senator from Idaho gave notice yesterday that he would make the point of order on this proviso. I simply say that, if that point of order is to be made, then I do not want to increase the appropriations for irrigation purposes until some way is found to safeguard the Indian.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. BRADY. Did I understand the Senator from Vermont to say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had recommended this particular paragraph?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly. He has stated that it is absolutely essential to protect the Indian.

Mr. BRADY. Was that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. PAGE. It was the assistant commissioner; but I want to say in regard to that, that the commissioner was with us a part of the time. I am not sure whether he was with us at the particular time when this proposition was considered or not.

Mr. BRADY. Did the Senator from Vermont ever hear the Commissioner of Indian Affairs say that that paragraph ought to be in the bill?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I can not say that I ever did; but when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs comes to us and says, "I can not be with you; I leave with you the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs," then the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as I understand, speaks not only for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs but he speaks for the Secretary of the Interior and for the law department of the Department of the Interior. As I understand it, Mr. Meritt, the assistant commissioner, has been the law officer of the Indian Department for several years.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. BRADY. I can not agree with the Senator from Vermont that the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs always speaks for the Secretary of the Interior or for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I believe that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior understand irrigation law well enough to know that it would be useless to put such a provision in the bill. I have not discussed the matter with either of them, but I do know enough about irrigation law to make the statement that we can not change the laws of a State.

I am as much in favor of protecting the Indians as the Senator from Vermont can possibly be; I want to help them in every way I can; but the way to help them is to have this money expended in putting water on these Indian reservations to a beneficial use, for if you do not put it to a beneficial use they can not hold it, and there is no law that can be passed by the Congress that could enable the State to permit them to hold it.

I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation in Idaho have been provided not only with what water they need but with more water than they need. The discussion came up the other day in a manner that called my attention to a fact that I thought the Commissioner of Indian Affairs ought to be advised of, for I believe he is honestly endeavoring to do what is best for the Indian and for the Government. I wrote him a letter after the Senate adjourned, telling him the conditions in the Fort Hall Indian Reservation. I have his reply here, and I am going to ask the Secretary to read it. It states that there is more water there than the Indians can use, and that it ought to be sold. I should be in favor of that if it were not for contravening our own laws in passing a bill authorizing him to sell it so that the Government can get back some of the money that they have advanced. In all these cases this money is to be returned by the whites when they pay for the water and it is to be reimbursed to the Government.

The clause which the Senator read from the Montana item said that the money was to be reimbursed, that the white people were to pay it back, and that the Government was to be reimbursed for the construction of the canals. I fully agree with the Senator that we ought to be overly cautious in order to protect the Indian along the very lines that he suggests, but often these canals are built, unless you put water on the land, and unless you furnish these appropriations where necessary to construct the canals to put the water on the land, the Indians will suffer from the very fact that there is no law that will protect them from losing the water. Now, I want at this time to ask the Secretary to read the letter which I wrote to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his reply.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, before the letter is read I want to make one suggestion to the Senator, and that is to say that we are dealing with this bill; we are not dealing with conditions or circumstances which he suggests may exist; we are not dealing with any proposed change in the law which he says had better be made. I am taking this bill just as it reads, and saying that my objection to the bill is that before we increase these appropriations to such an inordinate amount we should know that they are going to be available for the benefit of the Indians. I will now be glad to hear the letter read.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I believe the Senator is absolutely right about that. I agree with him, but I want to call the Senator's attention to just one point, and I want him to give it careful consideration, and that is that these appropriations for maintaining canals or putting water on the land through a canal that is constructed must be made or the Indians will lose their rights. Where the canals are constructed the laterals must be built so that the water can be carried out over the sand. If it is not done, the Indians can not put the water to beneficial use. If a new canal is to be constructed, then the committee is justified in scrutinizing the item just as closely as it can, and if the very best reasons for it are not shown it should not be constructed, for there is no question that many times the Indian does not receive the value for the money that is charged up to him for canal construction, and that should not be so. I should like to have the Secretary read the letter written by me to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the reply of the commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. PAGE. I yield for the purpose of having the correspondence read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

JUNE 18, 1914.

HON. CATO SELLS,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: During the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill in the Senate yesterday and to-day the question arose as to the conditions existing on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation relative to the irrigated lands, and there was a point of order raised against an amendment offered by the committee reserving the Indians the right to the water to be used on their lands, whether they used it or not. While I did not raise the point of order, I think you will agree with me that the Presiding Officer was right in deciding that the point of order should be sustained. This incident has brought to my mind a question to which I have given considerable thought.

Under the constitution and laws of the State of Idaho water, when appropriated for irrigation purposes, must be put to beneficial use, and if not put to beneficial use within a reasonable time any citizen of the State can appropriate the unused water and, by putting the same to beneficial use, obtain clear and good title to the same. If I understand the conditions correctly, you have an appropriation on the Snake River of about 600 second-feet, which equals 30,000 inches of flowing water per second, the same being sufficient to irrigate, according to the usual estimates of the Government, about 48,000 acres of land. In addition to this you have for the use and benefit of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation a reservoir located on the Blackfoot River about 24 miles above the Indian reservation. This reservoir covers an area of about 15,000 acres and has a capacity of about 200,000 acre-feet. However, the flow of the river does not always fill this reservoir and, as I understand it, the average amount supplied by the river is not less than 163,000 acre-feet, and my judgment is that in an average year it will be sufficient to fill the reservoir.

On the Blackfoot River below this reservoir there are some prior water rights, consisting of water rights appropriated by farmers and the water decreed by the court for their benefit and use. The amount of those decreed rights, as I understand it, is about 232.78 cubic feet of water per second, which is equivalent to 41,481.49 acre-feet. On a basis of 163,000 acre-feet, which is certainly the minimum, this leaves 121,419.5 acre-feet as available reservoir capacity, which on a basis of 3 acre-feet per acre of land irrigated will irrigate approximately 40,506 acres of land. Therefore, you have sufficient water, if these figures are correct, to irrigate 88,506.6 acres of land.

Under the laws of Idaho and every other State where irrigation laws are in force the law and the rule is that water must be put to beneficial use and that no citizen or corporation can hold more water than is necessary to irrigate the specific lands for which the same was appropriated. This being the case, it seems to me that it would be good business for the Government to sell the water that it can never use, and from the proceeds reimburse the Government for a part of the money that has been spent in the construction of irrigation works and reservoirs.

I do not desire to be presumptious in this matter, but feel it my duty to call your attention to it, for I am convinced that if the Government does not take this course in time this surplus water, that can never be used on the lands for which it was appropriated, will be appropriated by some individual or corporation, and the Government will receive no benefit whatever from the same.

Very truly, yours,

——— ———.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 19, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRADY: Replying to your letter of June 18, as to the conditions existing on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation relative to the irrigated lands and water supply, I transmit herewith draft of an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which I suggest as proper for introducing at this session of Congress.

Apparently there is more water now available in the reservoir and natural flow-water rights in the Snake River for this project than can be economically distributed by the system of canals as constructed, and it is believed that authority of Congress should be given to sell whatever surplus of such water may be available for sale.

Cordially, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I did not yield the floor, except for the reading of the letters.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question in connection with the correspondence which has been read?

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understand, in the letter the Senator wrote he suggested that the United States should sell this water. Does the Senator maintain that the United States has the right to sell the water and yet has no right to impose restrictions or conditions as to its use?

Mr. BRADY. They would have the right in case nobody objected to it. In this case they have a reservoir to sell also. I want in some way, if it is possible, for the Government to get back its money from the sale of the surplus water, if it can.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator think that the Government has a legal right to sell that surplus water?

Mr. BRADY. The Government has appropriated the water and built a reservoir, and if the Government desires to sell it to somebody who wants to use it for a beneficial purpose, and nobody objects, the Government can do it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does not make any difference, so far as the legal right is concerned, whether there is objection or not, does it?

Mr. BRADY. If the title would pass, I do not think there would be any question but what the title would be good whether anybody objected or not, if the purchaser immediately put the water to a beneficial use.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator think the Government could pass a good title?

Mr. BRADY. In this instance the Government has made a proper and legal appropriation, has constructed a reservoir and impounded the water. I believe that the Government could sell an interest in the reservoir, and the Government could pass good title to the property.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Vermont will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say that I was rather careless when the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] attempted to interrupt me, and I want to surrender the floor to him now, because I ought to have done so some time ago.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can not surrender the floor to anybody.

Mr. PAGE. I mean I yield the floor for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Arkansas to make some remarks, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I merely desire to say a word to the Senator from Idaho, which perhaps may save time in the consideration of this bill. If the Senator from Idaho does not offer the amendment that is suggested in the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and refers it to the committee and the committee offers it, I am going to make a point of order against it in any event, because, Mr. President, the United States and no one else has any right to sell water which they have appropriated, and the only way in which they can acquire legal title to it is by beneficial use.

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. LANE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. PAGE. I yield to the junior Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, many of the Senators who have already spoken on this question are much more familiar with the subject of irrigation than am I. I believe, however, that there is a very important principle involved in this proviso and that it is effective to preserve the rights of the Indians on the various reservations to which it may be applied. I think there is a misapprehension as to the rights and power of the Federal Government in the reservation of waters flowing through territory of the United States and over lands which may constitute Indian reservations.

Prior to the decision in the Winters case, in Two hundred and seventh United States Supreme Court Reports, the opinion seemed to prevail, so far as I can tell, among lawyers generally and especially among lawyers in the West that the doctrine of prior appropriation governed exclusively or almost exclusively in the determination of water rights. The decision in the Winters case constituted an epoch in the history of Indian affairs in the United States, in that it suggested a way whereby, if Congress is prompt in acting, valuable rights which might otherwise be lost to the Indians may be preserved to them.

The Winters case lays down this doctrine—and I call the attention of Senators, especially those from the West, to it, although doubtless they are familiar with it—that the United States in setting aside by treaty for the use and benefit of the Indians reservations to be used for the raising of stock and for agricultural purposes impliedly reserved a sufficient amount of water flowing in the streams that pass through the reservation to carry out the primary purpose of its agreement with the Indians, and, second, that that reservation of water is prior and paramount to the actual appropriation of water under State and Territorial laws.

Mr. President, I am aware of the fact that this is a very far-reaching doctrine and a very important one, but if the decision in the Winters case is sustained it means that if Congress wants to carry out its agreements with the Indians whereby these reservations were set apart in order that they might become an agricultural people and advance to a high state of civilization it can by proper action reserve a sufficient amount of water to accomplish that purpose.

If the reservation of water is effective the States under their laws can not deprive the Indians of the right to this water, because the same is exempted from appropriation; but it is also true that the most complicated questions arise in such cases, questions of far-reaching importance. I will disclose by an illustration that when water has been actually diverted under State laws, even though it has been reserved by treaty for the benefit of lands on Indian reservations, when it is wrongfully appropriated under those laws——

Mr. WARREN. In order that we may follow the Senator—I am not familiar with the decision—I will ask the Senator, when was it made and where did the case arise?

Mr. ROBINSON. It was decided January 6, 1908, by the Supreme Court of the United States. I am going to read from it.

Mr. WARREN. Where did the cause of action arise?

Mr. ROBINSON. It was an appeal case from Montana and affected the waters of the Milk River in Montana. If I am permitted to do so, I will take just a little time to go into this subject, but before doing that I want to give the illustration which is familiar to the members of the joint commission created to investigate Indian affairs.

During the last session Congress appointed a joint commission, composed of four members, of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] was a member, I being the other representative on the part of the Senate, and two Members of the House, to work out some sort of an adjustment of the controversies that had arisen over water rights on the Yakima Reservation, in the State of Washington. Briefly stated, the facts under which that controversy arose were these: Many years ago the United States set aside a reservation, known as the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, for the benefit of the Yakima Indians and certain associated tribes. The Yakimas ceded a large territory to the United States. It was declared in the treaty that it was the purpose of the treaty to encourage agriculture among the Indians. With the passing of time, white persons settled on the other bank of the Yakima River and began to appropriate the waters of that river. Large irrigation projects were established under the laws of the United States, until the entire water flow of the Yakima River, which was the principal irrigation stream touching the Yakima Indian Reservation, had been actually appropriated under the laws of the State of Washington.

In the meantime it had become apparent that the waters of that river were not sufficient to supply the demands of the reservation and of the white users on lands off the reservation. Conflicts arose and litigation occurred in the courts of the State of Washington, and the controversy, as is known to Senators who are present, became one of the bitterest and most difficult that has arisen in connection with the irrigation projects of the United States. This commission was empowered to investigate that matter. Until the decision in the Winters case it was almost universally contended that the prior appropriation of these waters and their application to actual beneficial use under the laws of the State of Washington gave the white settler the prior right to the water; but, applying the decision in the Winters case, it was found that as a matter of equity, if not as a matter of law, when that reservation was set aside there was an implied reservation of enough water flowing in the Yakima River to irrigate the lands of the Indians on the Yakima Reservation. That theory is supported by the doctrine in the Winters case. Nevertheless, practically all of the water having been diverted for use by white settlers on nonreservation lands, we are now in this bill, as the result of that investigation and in an attempt to adjust that controversy, entering upon a policy of making gratuity appropriations which contemplate large sums for the purpose of reimbursing the Indians for the waters that were wrongfully taken from them under the laws of the State of Washington.

I have said that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided in the Winters case that whenever the Government by treaty with the Indians makes a reservation of land for the benefit of the Indians, it impliedly reserves for those Indians enough water to make those lands productive; that is, conceding in the beginning that it is the design of the treaty to promote agriculture among the Indians. I have also said that that reservation is paramount to any actual appropriation of the water under the laws of the State or Territory in which the stream flows. I do not know that I shall read the entire decision; it is a very long one and a very interesting one; but I will read——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Who decided that case?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Supreme Court of the United States decided it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Who wrote the opinion?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Justice McKenna wrote the decision. I will ask to insert the entire opinion as a part of my remarks, but unless some Senator wants to hear it all, I will only read the syllabus or such parts of it as I think are germane:

In view of all the circumstances of the transaction this court holds that there was an implied reservation in the agreement of May 1, 1888 (25 Stats., 124), with the Gros Ventre Indians and other Indians establishing the Fort Belknap Reservation, of a sufficient amount of water from the Milk River for irrigation purposes, which was not affected by the subsequent act of February 22, 1889 (25 Stats., 676), admitting Montana to the Union, and that the water of that river can not be diverted so as to prejudice this right of the Indians by settlers on the public lands or those claiming riparian rights on that river.

That is a clear assertion of the doctrine.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Was that a unanimous decision?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think one justice dissented.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Justice Brewer dissented, did he not?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Justice Brewer dissented. Otherwise the opinion was unanimous.

The Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit, in passing upon the same case, on February 5, 1906, used this language. I read from the syllabus:

Held, That the land reserved to the Indians being barren and worthless for agricultural purposes without irrigation, the treaty so confirmed should be construed as reserving for the use and benefit of the Indians residing on the reservation a portion of the waters of the Milk River for the irrigation of the reservation lands.

Upon the other proposition—that is, as to whether this reservation on the part of the Government, implied reservation though it be, is superior to the actual appropriation of the waters for beneficial use under State laws—I call attention to another feature of the decision:

The Government of the United States has the power to reserve waters of a river flowing through a Territory and exempt them from appropriation under the laws of the State which that Territory afterwards becomes.

Briefly stated, then, since the Winters case the doctrine has become generally accepted and is at least fairly well established that when the United States by treaty sets aside an Indian reservation for agricultural or stock-raising purposes it also impliedly sets aside sufficient water, if there be so much in the streams flowing through or upon the reservation, to carry out the primary purposes of the treaty, and that even though the Indians are slow—and they are always slow—in using their water. If you make it merely a question of practical or beneficial use of the water, the white man will always beat them to it, as he has beaten them to it in the past.

The doctrine of prior appropriation means that practically all of the waters available for use on Indian reservations where there is not a sufficiency for all lands will be used by the white man and the Indian's land will become useless. If you are to protect the rights of the Indians, you may work some little hardship upon your white citizens by reserving to the Indian lands a sufficient amount of water to make them useful. You can not apply a limitation of two or three years, because the Indians are not quick to avail themselves of benefits of this sort.

We are now engaged in a great effort to stimulate the spirit of agriculture among the Indians. As a rule Indian tribes are not devoted to agriculture, and, just as indicated in the illustration which I have cited in the State of Washington, if you permit white people to take waters that justly belong to Indian lands you will be making gratuity appropriations to compensate the Indians for water of which they have been wrongfully deprived by prior appropriation under State laws.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator what would be his proposition as to the legal and proper manner of determining how much water should be reserved at or near the head of these long streams that flow through many States?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will not undertake to determine that. I am discussing now another proposition.

Mr. WARREN. That is a matter that enters very largely into the consideration of this question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I realize that the Senator presents a difficult question.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Did not the case quoted by the Senator go up when they were Territories and not States?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Those things occurred while Washington was a Territory, according to the Senator's statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. That makes no difference.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It does make a difference under the Constitution.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me to state my own conclusion with regard to the matter——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am simply asking the Senator a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the doctrine of the Winters case is that whenever the Government creates an agricultural Indian reservation, the lands of which must be irrigated to profitably cultivate, under a treaty or agreement with the Indians it impliedly reserves water for the use of that reservation, and that you can not, under State laws, deprive the reservation of that water.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is all right. Now, how about an executive-order reservation, which most of these are, where there is no treaty at all with the Indians?

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, Mr. President, the water rights as to any particular reservation would depend in part, at least, upon the terms whereby the reservation was created. If it is a treaty or an agreement reservation, as in many cases, the terms of the agreement would govern; but if the reservation is established for the purpose of improving agriculture among the Indians, the doctrine of that case, as set forth by the highest court in this land, is that you can not deprive the Indian of the primary benefits of his agreement by appropriating his waters to actual use.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit one more question, would that apply to any other nationality except Indians? Suppose this was a grant to a lot of Americans under the same terms, in the case of an executive-order reservation, which is what the great majority of these cases are. Scarcely any of them come under the Senator's case, according to the facts stated. Suppose that that agreement——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit me to finish my question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; I have not even come to the question yet.

Mr. ROBINSON. All right; go ahead.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was asking, Does this peculiar right rest inherently in an Indian, as different from a Mexican or an American, if he should do the same thing? Suppose it was a lot of Americans in favor of whom this had been made. Would not the same argument in the Winters case say that under that power of Congress in a State, having under the Constitution all rights to all the water, and under the constitutions of these States, as well as the United States, having exclusive ownership of them, the same thing would apply to Americans who went there, because they were not industrious, and it would hold as long as you are claiming it should hold in the Indian case? I am simply testing the position the Senator holds, or that he claims the opinion holds.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has already asked me about fifty questions in one.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Would that apply to Mexicans under similar conditions?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Supreme Court and the courts of the United States have recognized some difference in these rules as applied to Indians, who are the wards of the Government, and citizens of another class. There has been no determination as to rights as between Indians and Mexicans, and I shall not attempt to do so, because no Mexican right is involved in any subject that I am discussing or that is even remotely under consideration.

The circuit court of appeals in 1908, in confirming an opinion of the lower court, used this language, as reported in One hundred and sixty-first Federal Reporter, at page 829, the Conrad Investment Co. case:

Manifestly, the Indians can not be expected to acquire water rights to any considerable extent through prior appropriation, because they are not far enough advanced in the art of agriculture to reduce the water to a continuous use, and the water of the public streams that they shall finally need depends largely upon their progress in this art. The Government, however, being their guardian—

There is the doctrine that I have already laid down to the Senator from Arizona. The Government does recognize a higher obligation, if you please, to one of its wards than it does to one of its ordinary citizens—

The Government, however, being their guardian, has a most important trust to perform in this relation—that is so to conserve the waters of such streams as traverse or border the reserve as to supply the Indians fully in their probable or, I may say, even possible future needs when they have ultimately secured their allotments in severalty.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In answer to that argument, then, it is so high that it overrides the hundreds of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States? That obligation is so high that it overrides the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no, Mr. President. I can not yield further to that kind of an argument. The Senator from Arizona can take his own time to belittle the arguments I am undertaking to make.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not know it was worrying the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not worry me in the least; but I will be frank with the Senator from Arizona. I do not think such an observation as that elucidates or illuminates this question, but I recognize his right to make it in his own time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was simply suggesting the Constitution; that is all.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think it is fair——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. I want to answer the last statement of the Senator from Arizona. I do not think it is fair for the Senator from Arizona to say that a decision like that which I have read overrides the Constitution of the United States and all the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I think that decision is founded in reason and in justice; and if you read the history of this country, and if you study the history of these irrigation projects—my colleague from Michigan will confirm me and the Senator from Oregon will confirm me—you will find that under the operations of these irrigation projects, constructed in many instances on Indian reservations at Indian expense, the principal benefits of those projects have gone to white men.

I ask the Senator from Michigan now if his experience in the investigation of that subject does not confirm my statement?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely so.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Senator from Oregon the same question.

Mr. LANE. Unquestionably.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President, I repeat that it does not lie in the mouth of any Senator here to denounce a doctrine such as that asserted in the Conrad Investment Co. case, declaring the Indians to be wards of the Government, declaring it to be the duty of the Government to see that its agreements with the Indians are kept and are carried out in good faith, as overriding the Constitution of the United States and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, acknowledging the validity of the decision in the Winters case, and that case applying to the Fort Belknap Reservation, the same reservation to which this paragraph of the bill applies, if, as the Senator from Arkansas says, it is impossible under that decision for the State of Montana or any of its white citizens to take any of the water of the Milk River to the detriment of the Indians, and this amendment merely saying "such water as is needed by the Indians is hereby reserved," what iota of weight or efficiency does this amendment add to the law?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will show the Senator. I cited an illustration awhile ago where legally the Indians on the Yakima Indian Reservation were entitled to sufficient water from the Yakima River to irrigate their reservation. The public generally in the State of Washington understood, however, that those who got the water first, and actually applied it to practical use, had a paramount or a prior right to any claim that the Indians might have, and so they appropriated all of that water. One benefit of this provision is to put white settlers on notice that the lands reserved for the Indians on that reservation will have enough water to make them profitable and to carry out the purposes of the reservation. If that notice had been given in the State of Washington, the Government of the United States would have been saved a gratuity appropriation of perhaps a million and a half dollars that we are now called on to make, not because any wrong was done, except that the white settlers had appropriated to actual use all of the waters, including that impliedly reserved by treaty to the Indians, and we either had to take the waters away from the white settlers or make an appropriation to provide water for the Indians, and we are doing the latter thing.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, one other question, if the Senator please.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I yield with pleasure.

Mr. MYERS. Speaking of notice, what notice is the white settler going to get of how much or what quantity of water is to be reserved indefinitely, without any limit, by this provision?

Mr. ROBINSON. The question which the Senator from Montana asks is analogous to the question which was asked me a moment ago by some Senator on the other side, I think, or perhaps by the Senator from Arizona. It is impossible to determine in advance just what the amount of this water will be; and that was one of the arguments which was used prior to the Winters case, and in the argument of the Winters case, to discredit the right of the Indians; but the point is that those who take water from the streams which flow upon that reservation take it with notice that it is subject to a prior right whenever exercised by the Indians themselves. That is as definite a statement of it as I can make.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will state that I am the Senator who asked the Senator from Arkansas that question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; it was the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator did not answer it, and I doubt if any Senator can answer it.

Mr. ROBINSON. It can not be definitely answered.

Mr. WARREN. For instance, take a reservation at the head of a stream, the waters of which flow through perhaps 20 States or 10 States, and the rights are identical in the entire length of stream and extend all the way. The policy which the Senator advocates would simply lock up and play dog in the manger with the entire irrigation water supply of the country. The United States had better pay tenfold over in such exceptional cases as the Senator has stated was the amount paid in Washington than undertake to paralyze the entire country subject to irrigation and reclamation by retaining and tying up all of the water and keeping it unused.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that argument is forceful, but it was made in the Winters case in almost the exact language which the Senator from Wyoming has used, and I must admit that it is supported with some reason and logic; but the court decides—and I believe the decision is right, notwithstanding the difficulties that arise out of the question—that the paramount duty of the Government is to keep faith with the people who are under their control, their wards, the Indians.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think, although that may be a decision of the court, that we ought to add fuel to the flame by tying up still stronger than it is already tied up our entire irrigation country?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will be frank with the Senator from Wyoming. I think that whenever a controversy arises between an Indian and a white man as to water rights, and the legal right is with the Indian, Congress ought not to exercise its great powers to divest him of that right. I think the Indian is exceedingly fortunate if he gets what he is entitled to, and I think the history of our dealings with the Indians shows that to be true.

Mr. WARREN. It is not a matter of divesting; but are we to wait two or three hundred years to know whether or not this water is to be used?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. That is the point. There has got to be some end and some determination somewhere as to what the water rights are.

Mr. ROBINSON. They made exactly that same argument in the Winters case, and made it with great force, as the Senator will see on page 570. It was a part of the brief of those who opposed the rights of the Indians.

Mr. WARREN. I will say very frankly that I never read the Winters case and do not remember that I ever heard of it until the Senator brought it up to-day; so if my argument is along the same line, if the gentlemen who preceded me and who gave their attention to the case used the same language, I have not plagiarized, because I never read it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; I hope the Senator did not think I implied that. If anything I have said implied that the Senator had plagiarized anything, I am very unfortunate in my expressions.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; I did not mean that the Senator had implied that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I meant to say that whatever force that argument might have it has been considered in almost the same language as that now presented to the Senate by the Supreme Court of the United States, and held by that court not to be a controlling consideration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Arkansas, I take it, believes that the Indians upon any of these reservations that have been made have the right to divert all of the water from the stream or streams if it is necessary to irrigate their land?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; I do not state the proposition so broadly as that. If the Senator will permit me, I will answer his question in the language of the Supreme Court. That body, in deciding the case I have already referred to—and I will say that it is strongly supported in doctrine by a number of other cases—holds that it is not within the power of the States to deprive the Indians of water which has been reserved to them under treaties between the Indians and the United States, and that when the United States makes an Indian reservation for agricultural purposes it reserves a portion of the waters for the irrigation of the reservation lands.

Now, there is no decision as to the amount of waters which are reserved. There is considerable indefiniteness about it, and I would not undertake now to pass upon what the court would say was the extent of the reservation in these treaties. I do say, however, that the limitation which has been inserted in this provision by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, namely, the water "necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes," is a reasonable limitation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is exactly the question I put to the Senator. I think perhaps the Senator did not hear the latter part of it, and therefore I repeat the question:

Does the Senator from Arkansas believe that the Indians upon these reservations have the right to divert from the stream or streams upon the reservation all of the water, if all of it be necessary for their use, for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is a question that is not involved in this controversy. That is an academic question; it is a hypothetical question, and I would not care to answer a question of that sort in categorical terms. I would not care to say "yes" or "no," because I do not think it would throw any light on this controversy. I will say, however, that I think the Indians on the Fort Belknap Reservation ought to have reserved for them enough water for cooking and laundry purposes, and to water their stock, and to cultivate the small acreage of land which they will probably cultivate in the next 20 or 25 years; and that, I think, is what is sought to be accomplished by this proviso.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose all of it be necessary for that purpose; then have they a right to divert it all? That is the question I put to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should think they would.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator thinks they would?

Mr. ROBINSON. However, I am not willing that the Senator shall ask me a question which I have stated is hypothetical in connection with the discussion I am now making, and secure from me an answer which he thinks is erroneous, and then proceed to correct my answer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I do not think the Senator's answer is erroneous, if we assume the accuracy of the Senator's premises. I think the Senator is quite logical in saying what he does.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, as the Senator has asked me some questions, may I ask him one?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to ask the Senator a question if he will permit me to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but I think I will take my turn now and ask you a question. Will the Senator from Utah tell me whether he thinks it is sound doctrine that when the Government of the United States enters into a treaty with the Indians, taking from them a cession of a part of their lands as a part of the consideration of the treaty, and agreeing with them that a certain area of land shall be held and owned by them for agricultural and other kindred purposes, there is no implied obligation on the part of the United States to provide sufficient water to make those lands reasonably useful for agriculture? Does the Senator stand for the doctrine that the United States has no obligation to provide water for those lands?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think it has not.

Mr. ROBINSON. I mean, of course, in the natural streams. I do not mean in artificial channels.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is not a question of the power of the United States at all. The question I was going to ask the Senator next will disclose my position, perhaps.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can not hear the Senator distinctly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I say, I think it is a matter wholly outside the powers of the United States Government. The question whether or not the water shall be diverted from the stream and the corpus of it consumed in irrigating lands is a question for the State.

The question I want to put to the Senator is this: The rule of the common law, of course, is that water runs and must be permitted to run as it has been wont to run. That is the doctrine of riparian rights. Under the common law water can not be led away from its channel and consumed upon the land. It must be permitted to flow in its accustomed channel. Now, if these Indians in Montana or elsewhere have the right to divert water from the streams in derogation of the common-law rule, where do they get the right? Is it not from the statute of the State, which has enacted a rule different from the rule of the common law? And if it is under the State statute that they get the right, in exercising the right must they not comply with the conditions of the statute, one of the conditions of the statute being that the water shall be put to a beneficial use within a reasonable time?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think I have already shown that as to Indians that doctrine is correct only in part, and that a doctrine which is paramount to it is that the United States has such an interest in and a control over waters flowing through lands which it owns, through a territory which it controls, that when it enters into an obligation with these Indians to assist them in becoming an agricultural people by reserving lands for them it also reserves for them such part of the waters which it controls as may be reasonably necessary to carry out the treaty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the question is, What does it reserve? Can the United States reserve any more or greater right than the Indians have? That right, in the absence of some local rule to the contrary, is to permit the water to run unintercepted through their lands, not to divert it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I admitted in the beginning that the subject is not without difficulties. I admit now that by the reservation of indefinite quantities of water for the benefit of Indians, development in localities may be embarrassed or hindered; but I do believe that Senators who are interested in this subject have exaggerated the detrimental effects of this provision and have overlooked the very wholesome and beneficial design of it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator one more question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. Conceding that the Winters case applies to this proposition, and that it is the law that sufficient water for the use of the Indians in this reservation is reserved by law, and the Senator claiming that Congress has the jurisdiction to legislate on the subject, does the Senator think the Indians ought to have that reservation forever, time without end, without Congress adopting some reasonable rule and regulation with which they must comply in order to exercise the rights conferred by the Supreme Court in that case?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I think the Senator answers his own question, because to give any other answer I would have to make an unreasonable answer according to his hypothesis, and I certainly do not intend to do that. I think every right, to be exercised, must be exercised within reasonable limitations, and I do not stand for the doctrine of forever locking up these waters or forever holding these reservations in the possession of the Indians; but I do stand for the doctrine that whenever we expend the money of the Indians for the construction of Indian irrigation works, we ought not to put a limitation in the legislation authorizing them which in the very nature of things will deprive the Indians of benefits under the appropriation and divert those benefits to white settlers, who are quicker and readier and more capable of grasping those benefits. Now, as to what a reasonable limitation would be——

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. I hardly think three years a sufficient length of time, and I will tell you why. You can not make farmers out of those Indians, and nobody expects to do so, inside of three years. You are doing two works at the same time. You are giving the Indian an opportunity and at the same time you are trying to teach him to avail himself of that opportunity. If you were dealing with white persons, a limitation of three years would perhaps be reasonable, but my attention has been called to the fact that there has been a limitation sometimes as much as 20 years as to white persons.

Mr. MYERS. I do not know of any.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no justification for putting a shorter limitation on an Indian, who is less qualified to exercise such privileges or enjoy such rights, than you put upon a white man. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator whether in the Winters case it was a question between persons who had already appropriated the water, or whether it was a question as between those who desired to file upon and appropriate the water? While the Senator is looking it up, I will state to him that the law in the West, particularly in the State of Colorado, does not fix a limit as to the time the appropriation shall actually be applied to the land. The spirit of the law of irrigation is that you can file a plat of your irrigation enterprise in the office of the State engineer, and you can begin the construction of your work, and the right of your water dates from the time of the filing of your plat, provided you, within a reasonable time, appropriate the water which is set forth in the declaration that you make at the time of the filing of the plat. Now, as to what is a reasonable time, there has never been a fixed time designated.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me, the idea of the Senator from Montana is to fix a limit of three years; and I think, in view of the circumstances and in view of the fact that we are dealing with Indians who are not agricultural people and are not ready to avail themselves of that right, the limitation is too brief.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is the enterprise already entered upon and the work constructed?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And the question is as to applying the water to the land?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; availing themselves of the water right. I think the reservoir has been completed. Has it not?

Mr. MYERS. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON. The appropriation is for the maintenance and repair of the Milk River irrigation system on the Fort Belknap Reservation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Senator looked to see whether that was a case as between parties who had already appropriated water, as to whether it was the junior appropriator or the senior appropriator, or whether it was the inception of the matter before any right whatever had accrued?

Mr. ROBINSON. This Winters case does not apply, as I said in the beginning, to every Indian reservation. It sets forth the general doctrine which is a principle of law that I think applies to many reservations. But it would make no difference, as far as the right of the Indian lands to the water is concerned, whether the controversy arose through some one who had actually appropriated or some one seeking to appropriate, because the doctrine of the case is that it could not be diverted to their detriment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Still you recognize that failure on their part, with an unreasonable limitation of time, would vitiate their right.

Mr. ROBINSON. I recognize this fact. The whole subject of irrigation in its practical aspect, of course, presents many and serious difficulties. I recognize the further fact that in asserting the doctrine in the Winters case you are confronted with the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Montana, and that is that unless there is some limitation upon the time when this right may be availed of, it may constitute an embarrassment to the development of the whole community, and a needless embarrassment at that.

I recognize all that, but I am saying that it is fair and right that Congress should seek to preserve a water supply for these Indians for the purposes set forth in this bill. It is apparent to anyone here that the total water available for irrigation will not be appropriated by those Indians. This contemplates the reservation of only a supply for domestic purposes, stock watering, and for irrigation purposes, and the area to be irrigated in the most hopeful view for the Indian will be small; that provision would be reasonably construed. There is no legal or definite limitation upon the time in which water reserved for Indian lands must be used, yet at the same time all laws must have a reasonable construction, and for my part—now, Senators, hear me—for my part I would rather err in favor of the Indian than err against him, and that is the conclusion of the argument with me.

Mr. LANE. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that in these cases the appropriations for the Indians call for but a minor portion of the water in the particular instances I know of, and that, on the other hand, they are allowed only three years under the law, and are given no manner of implements or means to make use even of this minor appropriation. There is the injustice of it.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to suggest that the bill carries hundreds of thousands of dollars for the benefit of Indians in that respect. It is loaded with provisions giving them tools and implements.

Mr. LANE. That is a separate appropriation. The object here is to relieve a condition which has been found to be deleterious and which would bring ruin upon the Indians.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask to have inserted at the close of my remarks a copy of the opinion of the Supreme Court (207 U. S.) in the Winters case. There is no clear statement of facts in that case, but the circuit court of appeals, in One hundred and forty-third Federal Reporter, page 740, makes a definite and very clear statement of the facts involved in the Winters case. I wish to insert that along with the opinion in the case.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. Justice McKenna, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court.

The question of jurisdiction is presented by the United States. Five of the defendants named in the bill failed to answer, and a decree pro confesso was taken against them. The other defendants, appellants here, after the affirmance by the circuit court of appeals of the interlocutory injunction, filed a joint and several answer. On this answer and the bill the case was heard and a decree entered against all of the defendants. From that decree the appellants here appealed to the circuit court of appeals without joining therein the other five defendants. The contention is that the circuit court of appeals had no jurisdiction and that this court has none, because the five defaulting defendants had such interest in the case and decree that they should have joined in the appeal, or proceedings should have been taken against them in the nature of summons and severance or its equivalent.

The rule which requires the parties to a judgment or decree to join in an appeal or writ of error or be detached from the right by some proper proceeding or by their renunciation is firmly established. But the rule only applies to joint judgments or decrees. In other words, when the interest of a defendant is separate from that of other defendants he may appeal without them. Does the case at bar come within the rule? The bill does not distinguish the acts of the defendants, but it does not necessarily imply that there was between them, in the diversion of the waters of Milk River concert of action or union of interest. The answer to the bill is joint and several, and in effect avers separate rights, interests, and action on the part of the defendants. In other words, whatever rights were asserted or admission of acts done by any one defendant had no dependence upon or relation to the acts of any other defendant in the appropriation or diversion of the water. If trespassers at all, they were separate trespassers. Joinder in one suit did not necessarily identify them. Besides, the defendants other than appellants defaulted. A decree pro confesso was entered against them, and thereafter, according to equity rule 19, the cause was required to proceed ex parte and the matter of the bill decreed by the court. Thomson v. Wooster (114 U. S. 104). The decree was in due course made absolute, and granting that it might have been appealed from by the defaulting defendants, they would have been, as said in Thomson v. Wooster, absolutely barred and precluded from questioning its correctness, unless on the face of the bill it appeared manifest that it was erroneous and improperly granted. Their rights, therefore, were entirely different from those of the appellants; they were naked trespassers, and conceded by their default the rights of the United States and the Indians and were in no position to resist the prayer of the bill. But the appellants justified by counter rights and submitted those rights for judgment. There is nothing, therefore, in common between appellant and the other defendants. The motion to dismiss is denied and we proceed to the merits.

The case, as we view it, turns on the agreement of May, 1888, resulting in the creation of Fort Belknap Reservation. In the construction of this agreement there are certain elements to be considered that are prominent and significant. The reservation was a part of a very much larger tract which the Indians had the right to occupy and use, and which was adequate for the habits and wants of a nomadic and uncivilized people. It was the policy of the Government, it was the desire of the Indians, to change those habits and to become a pastoral and civilized people. If they should become such, the original tract was too extensive, but a smaller tract would be inadequate without a change of conditions. The lands were arid and, without irrigation, were practically valueless. And yet, it is contended, the means of irrigation were deliberately given up by the Indians and deliberately accepted by the Government. The lands ceded were, it is true, also arid; and some argument may be urged, and is urged, that with their cession there was the cession of the waters, without which they would be valueless, and "civilized communities could not be established thereon." And this, it is further contended, the Indians knew, and yet made no reservation of the waters. We realize that there is a conflict of implications, but that which makes for the retention of the waters is of greater force than that which makes for their cession. The Indians had command of the lands and the waters—command of all their beneficial use, whether kept for hunting "and grazing roving herds of stock" or turned to agriculture and the arts of civilization. Did they give up all this? Did they reduce the area of their occupation and give up the waters which made it valuable or adequate? And even regarding the allegation of the answer as true, that there are springs and streams on the reservation flowing about 2,900 inches of water, the inquiries are pertinent. If it were possible to believe affirmative answers, we might also believe that the Indians were awed by the power of the Government or deceived by its negotiators. Neither view is possible. The Government is asserting the rights of the Indians. But extremes need not be taken into account. By a rule of interpretation of agreements and treaties with the Indians, ambiguities occurring will be resolved from the standpoint of the Indians. And the rule should certainly be applied to determine between two inferences, one of which would support the purpose of the agreement and the other impair or defeat it. On account of their relations to the Government, it can not be supposed that the Indians were alert to exclude by formal words every inference which might militate against or defeat the declared purpose of themselves and the Government, even if it could be supposed that they had the intelligence to foresee the "double sense" which might some time be urged against them.

Another contention of appellants is that if it be conceded that there was a reservation of the waters of Milk River by the agreement of 1888, yet the reservation was repealed by the admission of Montana into the Union February 22, 1889 (ch. 180, 25 Stat., 676), "upon an equal footing with the original States." The language of counsel is that "any reservation in the agreement with the Indians, expressed or implied, whereby the waters of Milk River were not to be subject of appropriation by the citizens and inhabitants of said State was repealed by the act of admission." But to establish the repeal counsel rely substantially upon the same argument that they advance against the intention of the agreement to reserve the waters. The power of the Government to reserve the waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied and could not be. The United States v. The Rio Grande Ditch & Irrigation Co. (174 U. S., 690, 702; United States v. Winans, 198 U. S., 371). That the Government did reserve them we have decided, and for a use which would be necessarily continued through years. This was done May 1, 1888, and it would be extreme to believe that within a year Congress destroyed the reservation and took from the Indians the consideration of their grant, leaving them a barren waste—took from them the means of continuing their old habits, yet did not leave them the power to change to new ones.

Appellants' argument upon the incidental repeal of the agreement by the admission of Montana into the Union and the power over the waters of Milk River which the State thereby acquired to dispose of them under its laws is elaborate and able, but our construction of the agreement and its effect make it unnecessary to answer the argument in detail. For the same reason we have not discussed the doctrine of riparian rights urged by the Government.

Decree affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer dissents.

WINTERS ET AL. v. UNITED STATES.

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit. Feb. 5, 1906.)

No. 1243.

1. INDIANS—TREATIES—RESERVATIONS—WATER FOR IRRIGATION.

Act May 1, 1888, c. 213, 25 Stat., 114, art. 2, reduced the size of the Montana Indian Reservation under an agreement providing for Congressional donations in order to enable the Indians to become self-supporting as a pastoral and agricultural people. By the treaty the Indians ceded and relinquished their rights to certain lands not then reserved; the reservation being described as beginning at a point in the middle of the main channel of Milk River opposite the mouth of Snake Creek, thence south to a point, thence east, thence in a northerly direction, in a direct line, to a point in the middle channel of Milk River; thence up the Milk River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the place of beginning, etc. Held that the land reserved to the Indians being barren and worthless for agricultural purposes without irrigation, the treaty so confirmed should be construed as reserving for the use and benefit of the Indians residing on the reservation a portion of the waters of the Milk River for the irrigation of the reservation lands.

2. WATERS AND WATERCOURSES—APPROPRIATIONS OF WATER—DESERT-LAND LAW—PUBLIC RIGHTS.

A portion of the waters of Milk River having been impliedly reserved for the benefit of Indians cultivating the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation by the treaties with such Indians, grantees of public lands outside of the reservation could not acquire the exclusive right to appropriate all the waters of the river for irrigation under the desert-land act (act of Congress, March 3, 1877, ch. 107, 19 Stat., 377, as amended by act of Congress, March 3, 1891, ch. 561, 26 Stat., 1096), authorizing appropriation by such owners of water for irrigation "subject to existing rights."

3. SAME—WATERS SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION.

Desert-land act (act Cong. Mar. 3, 1877, ch. 107, 19 Stat., 377, as amended by act Cong. Mar. 3, 1891, ch. 561, 26 Stat., 1096), authorizing the appropriation of waters of holders of land acquired under such acts, applies only to waters of the United States.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Montana:

"This is an appeal taken from an order secured by appellee (complainant in the court below) enjoining appellants (defendants in the court below) from interfering in any manner with the use of 5,000 inches of the waters of Milk River in the State of Montana. The order was made by the court upon a hearing under a rule to show cause why the preliminary injunction should not be granted. The suit involves the right of the appellee and of the Indians residing upon the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation to the use of the waters of Milk River for useful and beneficial purposes. This Indian reservation was established by the treaty or convention between the Government of the United States and the Indians May 1, 1888 (25 Stat., 113–133, ch. 213). Appellee's complaint is quite lengthy, as are also the affidavits and statements presented by the appellants at the hearing. We shall endeavor to condense the facts derived from the pleadings and evidence and make a general reference to the statutes and treaties bearing upon the issues raised herein. The Indian reservation comprises an area of about 1,400 square miles, embracing about 1,000,000 acres of land, the greater portion of which is grazing land, 'well adapted to stock raising.' (Act June 10, 1896, ch. 398, 29 Stat., 351.) There are, however, some portions thereof that are suitable for agriculture, and of these portions 'approximately about 30,000 acres are susceptible of irrigation with the waters of Milk River.' There is but little water to be found upon the reservation itself, and this scarcity of water 'renders the pursuit of agriculture difficult and uncertain.' (29 Stat., 351, ch. 398.) The center of Milk River is the northern boundary line of the reserve throughout its entire width, and this stream is the only source of supply for the various uses of the Government and the Indians at the agency, and for irrigation purposes generally on the reserve. Since 1889 and 1890 a portion of the waters of the stream have been continuously used by the Government and the Indians for household, domestic, and irrigating purposes, at and near the agency proper, and this is the only source of supply from which to satisfy their requirements and necessities at that place. Since the year 1898 water has been taken from Milk River by means of a canal and used on the reservation for the purpose of irrigating the cultivable lands susceptible of irrigation with the waters of that stream. As alleged in the complaint, 'approximately 5,000 acres of land are being irrigated upon said reservation for the purpose of producing thereon crops of hay, grass, grain, and vegetables with the waters diverted by means of said canal and lateral ditches distributing said waters from said canal over the lands.' This canal has a carrying capacity of at least 5,000 inches of water, and such amount of water is required for the present needs and requirements of the Government and the Indians for household, domestic, agricultural, and irrigating purposes on said reserve. Besides, stock raising, principally horses and cattle, has always been and is now extensively carried on by the Indians everywhere on the reserve. 'The main reliance of these Indians for self-support is to be found in cattle raising.' (29 Stat., 351, ch. 398.) And the stock ranging and feeding in the northern portion of the reserve all along the channel of the stream, from the eastern to the western limits of the reserve, must depend principally upon Milk River for drinking water. At the time of the institution of this suit no water reached any part of the reservation, the same having been diverted by the appellants.

"Prior to the enactment of any law recognizing the right of appropriation to the waters on the public lands all of the country within the State of Montana was Indian country. By the provisions of article 4 of the treaty of October 17, 1855, proclaimed April 25, 1856, there was established and reserved to the Fort Belknap Indians, and other Indian tribes, as and for their home and abiding place, nearly all that part of the State lying north of the Mussel Shell River, and extending from the crest of the main range of the Rocky Mountains eastward, approximately to what is now the western boundary line of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. (Revision of Indian Treaties, p. 7; 11 Stat., 658.) By the terms and provisions of this treaty the Fort Belknap Indians reserved to themselves the 'uninterrupted privileges of hunting, fishing, and gathering fruit, grazing animals, curing meat, and dressing robes.' (Article 3 of treaty, 11 Stat., 657.) The territory which was so set apart and reserved to them at that time embraced the channel and the waters of Milk River from its source to its mouth lying within the confines of the United States. This continued to be the abode of these Indians until 1874, at which time their territory was reduced so as to embrace nearly all that part of Montana lying to the north of the Missouri River, and extending from the Rocky Mountains eastward to the Dakota boundary line, including Milk River. (Act of Apr. 15, 1874, ch. 96, 18 Stat., 28.) The tract so set apart remained Indian country and the Indian reservation of these Indians until 1888, at which time the present Fort Belknap Indian Reservation was carved out of the larger reserve established in 1874 as their 'permanent home,' with the center of Milk River as the northern boundary line of the reservation, and which is now its northern boundary line. The diversion of the waters by appellants is admitted by them, but they claim the right to divert the waters of Milk River on the ground that the waters of the stream in question were legally and properly appropriated by them and each of them for a beneficial and useful purpose, under the laws of the State of Montana authorizing the appropriation of the waters of the streams within that State for household, domestic, agricultural, irrigating, and other proper purposes as the same are sanctioned, recognized, and confirmed by the Federal Statutes. Their rights to the water are based upon the appropriation of the waters, and the rights relied upon and asserted by them are those, and those only, that inure to appropriators of water under State and Federal laws.

"The proofs show that the individual appellants are owners of different quantities of land acquired by them under the desert-land laws of the United States; that their title to a large portion of the lands was obtained from the Government of the United States under said laws. Others had settled upon and applied to enter the land claimed by them under the desert-land laws. Some of them had appropriated different quantities of water from the West Fork of Milk River and others from the North Fork of Milk River, and all claim that at the time the waters were appropriated and diverted by them the lands along the bank of said stream above the point of said diversions were unappropriated public lands. Large amounts of money, exceeding over $100,000, had been expended by them in diverting the water and in making other improvements on their lands. The acquisition of their lands under the desert-land laws and appropriations of water were made during the years 1895, 1900, and 1903. That in all said acts they relied upon the land laws of the United States and upon the rights granted to appropriators of water for the purpose of reclaiming desert lands; made entries under the land laws of the United States of the lands held by them, respectively, and diverted and appropriated the waters of the West Fork and North Fork of Milk River, outside of the limits of the Indian reservation, and the appropriations were made to be used upon lands which were thrown open to settlement upon the extinguishment of the rights of the Indians thereto. All of the lands owned or claimed by appellants, as well as the land owned by appellee and occupied by the Indians, under the treaty with the Government, are dry and arid, and crops can not be grown thereon without sufficient water to irrigate the same. Unless water is obtained, the lands and homes of the respective parties would be rendered valueless and useless.

"There are four assignments of error: '(1) The said circuit court erred in holding that by the treaty made and entered into the 1st day of May, 1888, between the United States and the Indians residing upon the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, there was reserved to the said Indians the right to the use of the waters of Milk River to an extent reasonably necessary to irrigate the lands included in the reserve created by the said treaty, and that by the said treaty there was reserved to the said Indians the right to the use of said waters at all. (2) The said circuit court erred in holding that the reservation of the waters of Milk River, if any, contained in the treaty of May 1, 1888, entered into by the United States, to the Indians residing upon the Fort Belknap Reservation, was binding upon respondents or any of them so as to affect the rights of the respondents to the use of the waters of the tributaries of said Milk River based upon acts of appropriation done and had in pursuance to the laws of the United States, the laws of the State of Montana and decisions of its courts, and the customs of the country. (3) The said circuit court erred in holding that the rights of the Indians living upon said reservation to the use of the waters of Milk River were superior to the rights of the respondents or either of them, for the reason that the proof showed affirmatively and without contradiction that the respondents and each of them had diverted, appropriated, and applied to a useful purpose the waters of the said river or its tributaries, according to the laws of the United States, the laws of the State of Montana and decisions of its courts, and customs of the country to the extent claimed by them, and there was no proof showing that there had ever been an appropriation of the said waters according to the said laws, decisions, and customs of the said waters or any thereof according to the said laws, decisions, and customs by the said Indians, or on their behalf. (4) The said circuit court erred in holding that the Indians residing upon said reservation, or the United States for their use and benefit, were entitled as against these respondents or either of them to the prior right to the use of 5,000 inches of the waters of Milk River, or to the prior right to the use of the said waters at all.'"

Before Gilbert and Ross, circuit judges, and Hawley, district judge.

Hawley, district judge, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The first, and in our opinion the most important, question to be determined in this case is in relation to the construction and true interpretation of the treaty of May 1, 1888, between the Government of the United States and the Indian tribes therein mentioned. What rights, if any, did the Indians obtain by virtue of their consent to the terms of the treaty as ratified? The situation of the Indians and the rights held by them under the prior treaties must be considered. What were the inducements which caused them to give up their abiding places under the original conditions which existed, and to cede and relinquish to the Government many of the rights and privileges which they had previously enjoyed? Their former homes and abiding places, their hunting grounds, and their rights of fishing in the streams and lands over which they roamed were not voluntarily abandoned, were not surrendered to the Government without consideration, or without an object or purpose on their part. The territory over which they previously had occupancy and dominion was very large. They were evidently induced by the commissioners representing the Government to relinquish the greater portion of the vast territory over which they claimed control and had possession by the promise of the Government to aid them with money, and to furnish them with stock and farming implements whereby they could better their condition in life. The "act to ratify and confirm an agreement" with the several tribes of Indians in Montana, "and for other purposes" (act May 1, 1888, ch. 213, 25 Stat., 113 et seq.), of itself clearly specifies the causes which induced the Indians to make the change. "Whereas the reservation set apart by the act of Congress approved April 15, 1874, for the use and occupancy" of the Indians named in the act, "is wholly out of proportion to the number of Indians occupying the same, and greatly in excess of their present or prospective wants, and whereas the said Indians are desirous of disposing of so much thereof as they do not require, in order to obtain the means and enable them to become self-supporting, as a pastoral and agricultural people, and to educate their children in the paths of civilization," the agreements were entered into. It was for that purpose, and other reasons mentioned in the different articles of the treaty, that the Indians ceded and relinquished to the United States "all their right, title, and interest in and to all the lands embraced within the aforesaid * * * reservations, not herein specifically set apart and reserved as separate reservations for them, and do severally agree to accept and occupy the separate reservations to which they are herein assigned as their permanent homes." (25 Stat., 114, ch. 213, art. 2.) "In consideration of the foregoing cession and relinquishment, the United States hereby agrees to advance and expend annually, for the period of 10 years after the ratification of this agreement," sums of money amounting to $430,000, "in the purchase of cows, bulls, and other stock, goods, clothing, subsistence, agricultural and mechanical implements * * * in assisting the Indians to build houses and inclose their farms, and in any other respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement: Provided, That in the employment of farmers, artisans, and laborers, preference shall in all cases be given to Indians residing on the reservation who are well qualified for such position." (25 Stat., 114, ch. 213, art. 3.) "In order to encourage habits of industry and reward labor, it is further understood and agreed that in the giving out or distribution of cattle or other stock, goods, clothing, subsistence, and agricultural implements, as provided for in article 3, preference shall be given to Indians who endeavor by honest labor to support themselves, and especially to those who in good faith undertake the cultivation of the soil or engage in pastoral pursuits as a means of obtaining a livelihood, and the distribution of these benefits shall be made from time to time as shall best promote the objects specified."

In connection with the provisions and terms of the articles of the treaty to which we have specifically referred, attention is called to the boundaries of the Fort Belknap Reservation:

"Beginning at a point in the middle of the main channel of Milk River opposite the mouth of Snake Creek, thence due south to a point * * *; thence due east * * * thence following the southern crest of said mountains; * * * thence in a northerly direction in a direct line to a point in the middle of the main channel of Milk River opposite the mouth of Peoples Creek; thence up Milk River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the place of beginning."

Now we have the basis from which to determine whether or not the Indians were, by the terms of the treaty, given any right on the reserve, which they accepted, to the flowing waters of Milk River from which to irrigate their lands, so as to enable them to cultivate the soil on the lands of the Government set apart to them for the purposes mentioned in the treaty. The Indians are not the owners of the land included in the reservation. They are, however, occupants of the land which was by the Government set apart and reserved for their occupation and use. The title to the lands is still in the Government. The contention of appellants is that when Congress, under the treaty, declared the land to which the rights of the Indians had been extinguished to be a part of the public domain, the water of the river and other sources, unless expressly reserved, became subject to appropriation under the terms of the act of Congress of March 3, 1877 (ch. 107, 19 Stat., 377), as amended March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1096, ch. 561), and that the Government did not reserve any right to the waters of Milk River which it or the Indians can assert against appellants, who appropriated the waters on the public domain, or to any of the water that flows through or past lands owned by the Government.

To quote the language of counsel:

"The Government, having the absolute title and right to dispose of all its lands, including the lands within the Fort Belknap Indian reservation, had authority to grant the right of appropriating water upon those lands and upon the reservation. No reservation or restriction having been made, the Government can not now, after these defendants have accepted the grant, acquired vested rights, and expended a large amount of money in improving their lands, enjoin them from using the waters which they have appropriated."

We are of opinion that, when all the facts, circumstances, conditions, and surroundings of the Indians at the time the treaty was entered into are considered, it can not judicially be said that no portion of the waters of Milk River was reserved by the terms of the treaty for the use and benefit of the Indians residing upon the reservation. Such a construction would be in violation of the true intent and meaning of the terms of the treaty. We must presume that the Government and the Indians, in agreeing to the terms of the treaty, acted in the utmost good faith toward each other; that they both understood its meaning, purpose, and object; that they knew that "the soil could not be cultivated" without the use of water to "irrigate the same." Why was the northern boundary of the reservation located "in the middle of Milk River" unless it was for the purpose of reserving the right to the Indians to the use of said water for irrigation, as well as for other purposes?

It is admitted by appellants that "the irrigation and cultivation of the Indian lands is a policy of the Indian Department." The Indians in their untutored and uneducated minds might not have known the exact meaning of the word "irrigation" had it been used in the treaty, but in their wild, and to some extent uncivilized, condition they knew the use of forests, of lands, and of water. If they were to graze cattle and cultivate the soil, they knew it could not be done successfully without the use of water. They knew, as well as the officers of the Government, where the boundaries of their reservation were, and that their rights, under the terms of the treaty, extended to the middle of the channel of Milk River, and believed they had as much right to the water as to the land included in the boundaries for their permanent homes for the uses and purposes of the agreement made with the Government. The signing of the treaty was not an idle ceremony. The absence of the words "to irrigate their lands" did not abrogate and destroy their rights as guaranteed by the terms of the treaty. We are of opinion that it was the intention of the treaty to reserve sufficient waters of Milk River, as was said by the court below, "to insure to the Indians the means wherewith to irrigate their farms," and that it was so understood by the respective parties to the treaty at the time it was signed.

It is true that in the treaty of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat., 351, ch. 398), reference is made in article 5 to a scarcity of water which renders the pursuit of agriculture "difficult and uncertain"; yet it will be observed that article 2 of that treaty appropriates certain sums of money for divers purposes, among others, "to inclose and irrigate their farms, and in such other ways as may best promote their civilization and improvement." In arriving at this conclusion we have followed the rules that should govern the courts in the construction of treaties made by the Government with the Indians.

In Jones v. Meehan (175 U. S., 1, 11; 20 Sup. Ct., 1, 5; 44 L. Ed., 49) the court said:

"In construing any treaty between the United States and an Indian tribe, it must always * * * be borne in mind that the negotiations for the treaty are conducted on the part of the United States, an enlightened and powerful nation, by representatives skilled in diplomacy, masters of a written language, understanding the modes and forms of creating the various technical estates known to their law, and assisted by an interpreter employed by themselves; that the treaty is drawn up by them and in their own language; that the Indians, on the other hand, are a weak and dependent people, who have no written language and are wholly unfamiliar with all the forms of legal expression, and whose only knowledge of the terms in which the treaty is framed is that imparted to them by the interpreter employed by the United States; and that the treaty must therefore be construed, not according to the technical meaning of its words to learned lawyers, but in the sense in which they would naturally be understood by the Indians. (Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet., 515, 8 L. Ed., 483; The Kansas Indians, 5 Wall., 737, 760, 18 L. Ed., 667; Choctaw Nation v. United States, 119 U. S., 1, 27, 28; 7 Sup. Ct., 75; 30 L. Ed., 306.)"

To accept the contention of appellants' counsel would certainly be, as was said by Mr. Justice McKenna in United States v. Winans (198 U. S., 371, 380; 25 Sup. Ct., 662, 664; 49 L. Ed., 1089), "an impotent outcome to negotiations and a convention, which seemed to promise more and give the word of the Nation for more. And, we have said, we will construe a treaty with the Indians as 'that unlettered people,' understood it, and 'as justice and reason demand in all cases where power is exerted by the strong over those to whom they owe care and protection,' and counterpoise the inequality 'by the superior justice which looks only to the substance of the right without regard to technical rules.'"

It is undoubtedly true, as claimed by appellants, that the grants of the Government for lands bounded on streams and other waters without any reservation or restriction of terms are to be construed, as to their effect, according to the law of the State in which the lands lie. It was so held in Hardin v. Jordan (140 U. S., 371, 384; 11 Sup. Ct., 808, 838; 35 L. Ed., 428). See also Whitaker v. McBride (197 U. S., 510, 512; 25 Sup. Ct., 530; 49 L. Ed., 857; and authorities there cited). It is also true, as appellants claim, that the desert-land acts upon which they rely recognize the doctrine of appropriation of water under State laws; but this right of appropriation can only be acquired "subject to existing rights." The language of the proviso in the act of 1877 is:

"That the right to the use of water by the person so conducting the same on or to any tract of desert land * * * shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation * * * necessarily used for the purpose of irrigation and reclamation; and all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights."

The appropriations by appellants from the tributaries of Milk River were made with notice of and subject to the "existing rights" of the Government and of the Indians on the reservation. Kinney on Irrigation, section 133. In Story v. Woolverton (Mont.) (78 Pac., 589), where the Government had abandoned a military reservation and passed an act granting to the State of Montana a portion thereof, and there subsequently arose a question of water rights between the parties to the suit, the court, in discussing the statutory requirement governing the acquisition of water rights by appropriations, made by individuals, said:

"Prior to the time of settlement upon the lands in question, and prior to the appropriation of the waters of Bear Creek by anyone, both the land and the water were the property of the Government. When the Government established the reservation, it owned both the land included therein and all the water running in the various near-by streams to which it had not yielded title. It was therefore unnecessary for the Government to 'appropriate' the water. It owned it already. All it had to do was to take it and use it."

It necessarily follows from the conclusions we have reached as to the proper interpretation of the treaty that the appellants did not acquire any exclusive or superior right to all the waters of Milk River by virtue of the appropriation of said waters under desert-land act, March 3, 1877 (ch. 107, 19 Stat., 377), as amended by act March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1096, ch. 561; 1 Supp. Rev. Stat., 137). The law is well settled that the doctrine of appropriation under said statutes, which is recognized and protected by section 2339 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St., 1901, p. 1437), applies only to public lands and waters of the United States. Sturr v. Beck (133 U. S., 541; 10 Sup. Ct., 350; 33 L. Ed., 761), Smith v. Denniff (24 Mont., 20; 60 Pac., 398; 81 Am. St. Rep., 408), Cruse v. McCauley (C. C.) (96 Fed., 369, 373, 374). And it is equally well settled that when the lands of the Government have been legally appropriated or reserved for any purpose they become severed from the public lands, and that no subsequent law or sale should be construed to embrace or operate upon them.

In Kinney on Irrigation, section 124, the author said:

"The term 'public domain' in its broadest sense comprehends all lands and waters in the possession or ownership of the United States, and including lands owned by the several States, as distinguished from lands possessed by private individuals or corporations. The term 'public lands' only embodies such lands as are subject to the sale or other disposition by the United States under general laws. It is a well-settled principle that land once reserved by the Government or appropriated for any special purpose ceases to be a part of the public lands, and in all grants or proclamations declaring public lands open to settlement the portion already reserved is always excepted, though the exception is not specifically mentioned."

In the application of these principles to military reservations, see Wilcox v. Jackson (13 Pet., 498, 513; 10 L. Ed., 264). In Leavenworth R. R. Co. v. United States (92 U. S., 733, 742, 745, 747; 23 L. Ed., 634) the court, in discussing the question whether certain lands granted to the railroad company conveyed lands which had previously been reserved for the Indians, said:

"As long ago as the Cherokee Nation v. Georgia (5 Pet., 1; 8 L. Ed., 25), this court said that the Indians are acknowledged to have the unquestionable right to the lands they occupy until it shall be extinguished by a voluntary cession to the Government; and recently, in United States v. Cook (19 Wall., 591; 22 L. Ed., 210), that right was declared to be as sacred as the title of the United States to the fee. * * * With the ultimate fee vested in the United States, coupled with the exclusive privilege of buying that right, the Indians were safe against intrusion, if the Government discharged its duty to them. * * * We are not without authority that the general words of this grant do not include an Indian reservation."

After quoting from Wilcox v. Jackson, supra, the court said that the rule therein announced "applies with more force to Indian than to military reservations. The latter are the absolute property of the Government. In the former other rights are vested. Congress can not be supposed to grant them by a subsequent law general in its terms. Specific language leaving no room for doubt as to the legislative will is required for such a purpose. * * * The treaty reserved them as much to one as to the other of the contracting parties. Both were interested therein and had title thereto. In one sense they were reserved to the Indians, but in another and broader sense to the United States for the use of the Indians. Every tract set apart for special uses is reserved to the Government to enable it to enforce them." In United States v. Carpenter (111 U. S., 347, 349; 4 Sup. Ct., 435, 436; 28 L. Ed., 451), where the court held that the location of land scrip upon lands reserved for Indians under the provisions of a treaty with an Indian tribe, and the issue of a patent therefor, are void, Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"It matters not whether the land had been surveyed or not, the treaty was notice that a part of the quarry could be retained by the Government, and that the whole might be for the use of the Indians. This purpose and the stipulation of the United States could not be defeated by the action of any officers of the Land Department."

In Missouri, etc., Railway Co. v. Roberts (152 U. S., 114, 118; 14 Sup. Ct., 496, 498; 38 L. Ed., 377) the court, in discussing the general question, said:

"It has always been held that the occupancy of lands set apart by statute or treaty with them—the Indians—for their use can not be disturbed by claimants under other grants of the Government not indicating its intention, either in express terms or by the uses to which the lands are to be applied, to change the possession of the lands. And the setting apart by statute or treaty with them of lands for their occupancy is held to be of itself a withdrawal of their character as public lands."

In United States v. Rio Grande Irrigation Co. (174 U. S., 690, 702; 19 Sup. Ct., 770, 774; 43 L. Ed., 1136) the court, in considering the congressional legislation which recognizes and sanctions the right to appropriate water and defines the operative effect of this legislation, and limits and confines it to the public lands, among other things, said:

"The unquestioned rule of the common law was that every riparian owner was entitled to the continued natural flow of the stream. (Quoting the language of Chancellor Kent, 3 Kent Com., sec. 439.) While this is undoubted, and the rule obtains in those States in the Union which have simply adopted the common law, it is also true that as to every stream within its dominion a State may change this common-law rule and permit the appropriation of the flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise. * * * Although this power of changing the common-law rule as to streams within its dominion undoubtedly belongs to each State, yet two limitations must be recognized: First, that in the absence of specific authority from Congress, a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States, as the owner of lands bordering on a stream, to the continued flow of its waters, so far at least as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the Government property; second, that it is limited by the superior power of the General Government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States."

These rules are distinctly recognized and approved in the subsequent case of Gutierres v. Albuquerque Land Co. (188 U. S., 545, 554; 23 Sup. Ct., 338; 47 L. Ed., 588).

The views which we have expressed are conclusive upon the questions herein involved, and render it unnecessary for us to review the statutes and decisions of the courts of Montana upon the questions pertaining to the rights of appropriation, as distinguished from the rules of the common law as to riparian rights.

In conclusion, we are of opinion that the court below did not err in holding that "when the Indians made the treaty granting rights to the United States they reserved the right to use the waters of Milk River, at least to an extent reasonably necessary to irrigate their lands. The right so reserved continues to exist against the United States and its grantees, as well as against the State and its grantees."

The order appealed from is affirmed, with costs.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the proposition which has been presented is in some respects one of universal concern to all the arid-land States, and if any precedent were going to be established it would be worthy of the consideration of all Senators in arid States to consider it gravely before it should have their approval.

So far as the situation in my State is concerned, I do not know of any injury which is likely to follow to the Indian by reason of the failure to put in this amendment, even if the amendment would have any legal worth after inserted. There may be other places where that would be true with which I am not familiar. The proposition which they seek to establish here would create this kind of a precedent: That Congress could, in effect, distribute the waters flowing in a stream of the arid-land States.

If the Winters case does go to the extent to which the Senator from Arkansas believes it goes, it would, in my judgment, override a number of decisions which the court had theretofore rendered, and it would be in the teeth of decisions which the Supreme Court has since rendered.

On the other hand, if I understand the facts of the Winters case correctly, it can be harmonized with the contention which the Senators from the arid-land States make. If we will look back of the opinion into the pleading and ascertain what the facts were, we will find that the Winters case does not necessarily establish a new or an exceptional doctrince such as is supposed on the part of those who have just read it. Now let us see. The complaint in that case said:

In 1889 the United States constructed houses and buildings upon the reservation for the occupancy and residence of the officers in charge of it, and such officers depend entirely for their domestic, culinary, and irrigation purposes upon the water of the river.

The Senator from Colorado put a question which touched the heart of this controversy, and that is whether there was not some question of priority here.

In the year 1889 and long prior to the acts of the defendants complained of the United States, through its officers and agents at the reservation, appropriated and took from the river a flow of 1,000 miner's inches, and conducted it to the buildings and premises, used the same for domestic purposes and also for the irrigation of land adjacent to the buildings and premises, and by the use thereof raised crops of grain, grass, and vegetables.

Now, there had been an actual appropriation upon the part of the United States by and for the Indians under the law of prior appropriation, which obtains in the arid-land States. No one contends here that there may not be an appropriation upon the part or on behalf of the Indian under the law and doctrine of prior appropriation the same as is permitted for the white man. No one contends that you can deprive the Indian of the right to go upon the stream in the State where his land is situated and make his appropriation from the stream under the laws of the State or in accordance with the doctrine of private appropriation.

Afterwards—

Now, mind you, that was a thousand inches—

Afterwards, but long prior to the acts of the defendants complained of, to wit, on the 5th day of July, 1898, the Indians residing on the reservation diverted from the river for the purpose of irrigation a flow of 10,000 miners' inches of water to and upon divers and extensive tracts of land, aggregating in amount about 30,000 acres, and raised upon said lands crops of grain, grass, and vegetables. And ever since 1889 and July, 1898, the United States and the Indians have diverted and used the waters of the river in the manner and for the purposes mentioned, and the United States "has been enabled by means thereof to train, encourage, and accustom large numbers of Indians residing upon the said reservation to habits of industry and to promote their civilization and improvement." It is alleged with detail that all of the waters of the river are necessary for all those purposes and the purposes for which the reservation was created, and that in furthering and advancing the civilization and improvement of the Indians, and to encourage habits of industry and thrift among them, it is essential and necessary that all of the waters of the river flow down the channel uninterruptedly and undiminished in quantity and undeteriorated in quality.

What do we have here upon which to base the decision of the Supreme Court in the Winters case?

I was reading from the Winters case the facts as they are disclosed in Two hundred and seventh United States, pages 566 and 567. Of course, the Senator from Arkansas, able lawyer that he is, knows that the court decides a case upon the facts which are before the court and the decision must be interpreted and construed in the light of the facts which are before the court.

Now, what have we in this case? We have this situation: A reservation had been created by treaty. The Indians had gone upon the reservation and the United States through its officers and through the action upon the part of the Indians had gone upon the public streams, had diverted the water, had applied it to beneficial use, and was claiming the water by virtue of prior appropriation. No one contends that that was not the law with reference to the Indians the same as it is with reference to the white man.

As the Senator from Colorado said, there is another principle which adheres which justifies this decision, and that is that having gone upon the stream, having given your notice of appropriation, having constructed your canal and given evidence of your good faith, the court always permits any reasonable time within which to complete your appropriations. If you show that you originally intended to appropriate a certain amount of water and that you have land which will ultimately be covered by that water, and your diligence and your activity are sustained by the facts, the court will protect you from the date of the first effort to appropriate to the full extent which is necessary to irrigate your land.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to state to the Senator that we had a test in the State of Colorado upon what is termed the procedure of appropriating water. It arose in a case where a ditch did not comply in any respect with the prescribed statutory provision relating to the filing with the State of the plat of the ditch to appropriate water. The supreme court of that State in a contest as against an irrigation enterprise that did file held that the person who appropriated the water in the first instance would be protected in his right absolutely, notwithstanding he had not complied with the statutory provision in relation to the manner in which it should be taken out; that it was the appropriation of the water which controlled.

Mr. BORAH. I recognize that principle; and when you examine the facts upon which this case was determined, while some of the language of the opinion I confess would lead one to believe that a rather exceptional doctrine had been stated, we must take into consideration the fact that the court was really considering the facts relative to a contest between two appropriators.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague if he does not believe that if in the case he is now discussing the defendant had been a white man the evidence as submitted would justify the defendant, in this case the Indian, in the use of the water fo beneficial purposes?

Mr. BORAH. In other words, as I understand my colleague's question, this matter would have been no different if it had been between white men upon both sides.

Mr. BRADY. That is what I intended to ask my colleague.

Mr. BORAH. Let me read further. There is more in this statement of facts, which shows that it does not fall outside of the general rule when you come to measure the decision by the rule of facts stated in the complaint. The court goes on to say:

It is alleged that "notwithstanding the riparian and other rights" of the United States and the Indians to the uninterrupted flow of the waters of the river the defendants in the year 1900 wrongfully entered upon the river and its tributaries above the points of the diversion of the waters of the river by the United States and the Indians, built large and substantial dams and reservoirs, and by means of canals and ditches and waterways have diverted the waters of the river from its channel, and have deprived the United States and the Indians of the use thereof. And this diversion of the water, it is alleged, has continued until the present time, to the irreparable injury of the United States, for which there is no adequate remedy at law.

The Senators from the arid-land States recognize that that is nothing but an ordinary complaint with reference to a contest between prior appropriators. If the Senator from Arkansas will bear with me a moment, they have not set up here in the complaint a treaty right; they have not set up here a contract right. They have alleged that they went upon the stream and diverted and appropriated the water and applied it to a beneficial use, and upon that they based their right of action, and upon no other state of facts could the court have sustained it without an obiter dictum, because there were no other facts before the court.

It seems that this turns not upon the question of the original grant or the original contract, but upon the question whether or not the Indians having appropriated this water afterwards ceded away the right, an entirely different proposition from the one suggested by the fact that they were relying upon their original contracts. As I understand it, this reservation was a large reservation, and after a time the Indians ceded away certain of their lands, and the question was whether or not they had not ceded away these water rights. The court said it could not be presumed that they had intended to cede away their water rights, having diverted the water and applied it to a beneficial use.

But there is still another proposition. The court says in the opinion—and I read upon page 557 in support of its contention—that it relied upon the case of the United States v. The Rio Grande Bridge & Irrigation Co. (174 U. S., 690).

Let us turn back for a moment to One hundred and seventy-fourth United States and see what it says. We shall find again that this authority is not in conflict with the contention made here that the State controls the water of the State.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have before me a part of the decision to which the Senator refers. I want to call his attention to the fact that in that case the court uses the following expression:

Although this power of changing the common-law rule—

Referred to a while ago by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]—

Although this power of changing the common-law rule as to streams within its dominion undoubtedly belongs to each State, yet two limitations must be recognized: First, that in the absence of specific authority from Congress a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States as the owner of lands bordering on a stream, to the continued flow of its waters; so far at least as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the Government property. Second, that it is limited by the superior power of the General Government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. I accede to both those propositions, although I desire to say that as to the first proposition I think it has been modified by subsequent decisions or, rather, it has been made clear as to the meaning of the court.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was quoted approvingly in the Winters case——

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. By the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. BORAH. Now, let us take this case, if you please, as a whole and see what it says. The syllabus says:

The unquestioned rule of the common law was that every riparian owner was entitled to the continued natural flow of the stream. But every State has the power, within its dominion, to change this rule—

And that is reasserted in the Colorado case, in Two hundred and sixth—and permit the appropriation of the flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise. Whether a Territory has this right is not decided.

Turning to the body of the opinion, we find that the court says:

The bill further charges that the purpose is to obtain control of the entire flow of the river and divert and use it for irrigation and supplying waters for municipal and manufacturing uses; that, by reason of the porous soil, the dry atmosphere, and consequent rapid evaporation, but little water thus taken from the river and distributed over the surface of the earth will ever be returned to the river, and that this appropriation of the waters will so deplete and prevent the flow of water through the channel of the river below the dam as to seriously obstruct the navigable capacity of the river throughout its entire course, even to its mouth.

I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that this case in the complaint in the statement of facts was based upon the proposition that this diversion would destroy the navigability of the river, and therefore it invoked the power of Congress, which is recognized as the legitimate power, to preserve the stream for navigable purposes and to prevent its destruction for that purpose. No one doubts, I presume, that Congress may protect a navigable stream from a diversion of the waters so as to preserve its navigability. That was the bone of contention or the gravamen of the charge in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States. The court further says:

The bill charges that such appropriation of the entire flow will seriously obstruct the navigability of the river from the place of the dam to the mouth of the stream.

Then the court says:

The unquestioned rule of the common law was that every riparian owner was entitled to the continued natural flow of the stream. It is enough, without other citations or quotations, to quote the language of Chancellor Kent (3 Kent Com., sec. 439).

But, mind you, you are not here relying upon the doctrine of riparian rights. You are relying upon the doctrine of prior appropriation and the right of the Indian to go upon the stream and secure his right under the State law. If he had no right other than that of an owner of the land, all he could do would be to insist that the waters should continue to flow as they had theretofore flowed. All he could insist was that they continue to pass by his holdings as they had hitherto done. That was the doctrine of riparian rights. He could not take the water from the stream and divert it and spread it over hundreds and thousands of acres of land. You abandon that proposition and go to the other proposition, which has no foundation save and except in the laws of the respective arid-land States. You claim your right of prior appropriation under the State law.

The Indian in the case to which I have reference—I do not know how the other cases are—went upon the stream, appropriated the water, impounded it, and claimed his right under the laws of the State of Idaho. Can he then, or anyone else, turn around and deny the source from which he claims his right? He is not claiming any right here by virtue of a treaty, but by reason of the doctrine that is found in the constitution of my State. No one denies that he has a right to avail himself of all the privileges of any other citizen or any other party who desires to go upon the stream and claim this right.

So far as I am concerned, if I were dealing with the matter in a State I would give him an additional privilege for the very reasons which had been advanced here by the Senator from Arkansas and others. It is true that he is not so agile and so quick to protect his right or is not prepared to do so with as full means as a white man. But that does not change the proposition as to the source to which he must go in order to get this additional privilege and to get this additional right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In line with what the Senator has stated I should like to make an observation, and that is that the power of the Government over a stream in a State in order to protect the navigability of the waters below is a negative or a veto power, in order to prevent something; but it can not create anything by virtue of any law which it may attempt to exercise over the stream of a State. In other words, even in the construction of a bridge across a navigable stream, the United States Congress can not provide that a bridge shall be constructed; it can give its consent to the construction of a bridge, but you have also to get the consent of the State in order to construct the bridge. The power of the Government, therefore, is simply negative.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is quite correct. The court in this case, on which Senators rely, further says:

> While this is undoubted, and the rule obtains in those States in the Union which have simply adopted the common law, it is also true that as to every stream within its dominion a State may change this common-law rule and permit the appropriation of the flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise. Whether this power to change the common-law rule and permit any specific and separate appropriation of the waters of a stream belongs also to the legislature of a Territory we do not deem it necessary for the purposes of this case to inquire.

But this was a territorial instance which came under the Two hundred and seventh United States in the Winters case:

> Although this power of changing the common-law rule as to streams within its dominion undoubtedly belongs to each State, yet two limitations must be recognized.

These are the ones to which the Senator from Arkansas called attention:

> First, that in the absence of specific authority from Congress a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States as the owner of lands bordering on a stream.

You notice that they are not discussing the doctrine of prior appropriation there, but of the riparian owner, a man who has land bordering upon a stream. The court says that the Government of the United States, without its consent, can not be deprived of its riparian rights, and I will call attention in a few moments to some statutes which I think the court was overlooking at the time; but I accept that proposition nevertheless, and I do not quarrel with it, so far as the questions now being discussed are concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, just a minute. Would the Senator hold that the United States would have to make an appropriation of the waters for beneficial use of land they own and that the appropriation would have to be made under the State laws? I think the courts hold otherwise.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator——

Mr. BORAH. I do not think the courts do hold otherwise. The fact is that the practice of the United States has been universal in all these reclamation projects to go upon the stream and appropriate the water. I can not put my finger on a Federal decision, but there have been State decisions sustaining the doctrine of prior appropriation between the Government and the individual, the same as between two individuals; but in all instances the Senator will find that the United States Government has never taken the chance of claiming anything by virtue of its being a government; but it has gone upon the stream the same as the individual and appropriated the water when it was desired for the purpose of irrigating its land.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Arkansas that the very act creating the reclamation fund provided specifically that the rights of the States with respect to irrigation should be observed in the construction of the dams and reservoirs under that act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly, that is true; but if the United States owns the land through which a stream flows, it would not be, in my judgment, compelled, in the absence of an act of Congress—of course, Congress could require it—but otherwise it would not be compelled to make an appropriation under the State law. I think the courts have so held, and I think I shall be able to show that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in this connection I wish to make a suggestion. Suppose, as in this case or in some other cases, the Government has, with the consent of the State or without it, established a reservation and has erected irrigation works by the use of the money of the Indians, and a reservoir is established there, what right would the Government have over the water there impounded?

Mr. BORAH. It has just the same right precisely, in my judgment, as if the water had been diverted from the flowing streams of the States or water which otherwise would be the subject of appropriation. If it is not water which by a natural reservoir rises and can not be taken off the land except by trespassing upon it, if it is an ordinary instance of impounding water which has been gathered up somewhere, the only right the Government would have would be the same right as an individual. The Government would have to show that it had appropriated this water, and that it had used reasonable diligence to apply it to a beneficial use or was preparing to apply it to a beneficial use within such time as the court would say was the usual limit.

Mr. TOWNSEND. So that the Government would have no more right, no more authority, over that impounded water than it would have over any stream if it had not gone to the expense of constructing the work?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. The Senator can see that the Government of the United States could protect itself.

It is said here that the Indians are powerless to protect themselves. The Government of the United States can go upon these streams and protect all Indian reservations by appropriation of water and by providing for its application and use, with all reasonable diligence, and protect the Indians just as fully and completely, in my judgment, as an individual may protect himself in regard to this matter. If the Government sits idly by and does not try to protect the Indian, the Indian, as a ward, may lose; but there is no reason why the Government should sit idly by and not do these things; there is no reason why a State should be ravaged because the Government fails to do its duty.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I asked the Senator from Idaho a while ago whether he thought if the Government owned land and desired to make a beneficial use of the waters thereon it would have to appropriate the waters under a State law, and the answer was made by a number of Senators that that was the universal custom, implying that it was obligatory upon the Government to do that. I want to call the Senator's attention on that point to a case which I had in mind, but could not cite at the time I asked him the question. It is cited, however, in the Winters case, on page 747 of One hundred and forty-third Federal Reporter. In that decision the court, in the Winters case, used this language:

> In Story v. Woolverton (Mont., 78 Pac., 589); where the Government had abandoned a military reservation and passed an act granting to the State of Montana a portion thereof, and there subsequently arose a question of water rights between the parties to the suit, the court, in discussing the statutory requirement governing the acquisition of water rights by appropriations made by individuals.

The court then quotes the following language:

> Prior to the time of settlement upon the lands in question, and prior to the appropriation of the waters of Bear Creek by anyone, both the land and the water were the property of the Government. When the Government established the reservation, it owned both the land included therein and all the water running in the various near-by streams to which it had not yielded title. It was therefore unnecessary for the Government to "appropriate" the water.

The Government already owned it, and all it had to do was to take it and use it.

Mr. BORAH. That was a decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Montana?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, in one sense that decision would be perfectly correct. Under that decision prior to appropriation any citizen could have gone upon that stream and appropriated that water as against the Government. That has been decided too often, I think, to admit of discussion.

Mr. ROBINSON. The doctrine in this case is that, since the Government owns the land and the water, it does not have to go to the State under State laws to use its water, but can take and use it by virtue of its proprietorship.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think, if the Senator will look into the facts of that case, he will find that the United States Government did not comply with the terms of the statute with respect to filing upon the water.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And on that account they were attempting a contest with the United States to take the water.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the court held they did not have a proprietary right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no conflict in that theory with the theory for which the Senator from Idaho is contending. It is just like the decision which the Senator quoted to the Senator from Idaho, namely, that actual appropriation is the test; priority of appropriation is priority of right; and even if a proprietor does not comply with the State laws with respect to filing his plats and things of that kind, if he appropriates the water he gets it, no matter if a subsequent appropriator should comply with the exact terms of the statute.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator allow me to reply to his last statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just one further word. I wish to say that the doctrine of prior appropriation under State law does not apply in a case of that kind. I refer the Senator from Colorado to a case which has been cited by both the Senator from Idaho and myself, that of the Conrad Investment Co. against the United States (161 Fed. Rep., p. 832). We there find this language:

> The lands within these reservations are dry and arid, and require the diversion of waters from the streams to make them productive and suitable for agricultural, stock-raising, and domestic purposes. What amount of water will be required for these purposes may not be determined with absolute accuracy at this time; but the policy of the Government to reserve whatever water of Birch Creek may be reasonably necessary not only for present uses, but for future requirements, is clearly within the terms of the treaties as construed by the Supreme Court in the Winters case.

That shows, Mr. President, if I may be pardoned just a further brief statement, that in cases of this kind involving Indian reservations—certainly where treaties exist fixing the rights of the parties—the Government impliedly reserves whatever amount of water is reasonably necessary both for present and future uses; and it follows, as a matter of course, that the doctrine of prior appropriation can not apply, because otherwise there would be no necessity for the reservation.

Now, I also call attention to the fact that in the same decision from which the Senator from Iowa quoted a while ago, on page 181, the court quoted approvingly the following language from a decision of the court:

> The power of the Government to reserve the waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be. (United States v. Rio Grande Ditch & Irrigation Co. (174 U. S., 690, 702; 19 Sup. Ct., 770; 43 L. Ed., 1136); United States v. Winans (198 U. S., 371; 25 Sup. Ct., 662; 49 L. Ed., 1089).) That the Government did reserve them, we have decided, and for a use which would be necessarily continued through years.

The result of a reservation of water by the Government is to exempt the water from appropriation under State law, so that when the time comes that the Indians need these waters for the irrigation of their land, they will have them in spite of the fact that under State laws appropriations of water have been going on.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have concluded all I desire to say.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think, if the Senator will examine those cases, he will find that the facts do not bear out the construction which he is placing upon the decisions. It is true that where a large irrigation enterprise is undertaken it often takes many years to complete it, and that appropriation of the water is reserved for it may be 10 years, it may be 15 years, it depends upon the magnitude of the work very largely; but if the Senator will examine the authorities, I am confident he will find that there has been a failure to comply with some statutory regulation, some regulation with respect to filing upon the water or with relation to filing in the office of the State engineer a plat of the irrigation enterprise, and that that does not conflict with nor abrogate the right of the first appropriator; in other words, they hold that statutory provisions can not abrogate the right given in State constitutions to appropriate water and that priority of appropriation is priority of right in its use.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will yield to me to interject this observation: The Senator from Arkansas, I understand, read a decision a while ago to the effect that the United States Government could in Montana take water out of streams and put it on land owned by the United States Government without going through the formula of making a statutory appropriation. I merely wanted to observe that that gets the Senator nowhere and proves nothing, because the United States Government in doing that is doing no more than any individual resident of Montana can do. Any resident of Montana who owns land which is arid and which needs water to make it productive and who wishes to cultivate it can take water out of any stream and put it upon that land without the scratch of a pen in compliance with the statutory provisions for appropriation. The laws of Montana recognize common-law appropriations according to custom and usage, and the United States Government did no more than any individual citizen can do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me suggest, in reply to what the Senator from Montana has said, that that is all true; but I cited that case as bearing upon the effect of the reservation of water by the Government. If the Government reserved the water from appropriation under State laws, and had the power to use the water without appropriating it under the State laws, it follows, as a matter of course, that whenever the Government wants to do so it can take that water and use it, having reserved it from appropriation under the State law.

Mr. MYERS. I did not catch all the Senator read. There was no question of regulation in the case he read, was there?

Mr. ROBINSON. There was not in that case, but I thought I had previously established the doctrine, as decided in the Winters case, that the effect of setting aside an Indian reserve was to reserve the water necessary for irrigation purposes, and the effect of the reservation was to exempt the water from appropriation under State laws; and if then, according to the case which I cited and which the Senator has just been discussing, the Government can use the water without appropriation under the State law, it follows, as a matter of course, that the effect of the reservation is to withhold it from all appropriation.

Mr. MYERS. Any citizen may do the same thing; so, I repeat, that I do not see that there is any differentiation there.

Mr. ROBINSON. No citizen can reserve water rights in the sense that the Government reserves water rights for these Indians by the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the case which the Senator from Arkansas cited a few moments ago simply goes to the extent of making the Government the first appropriator on that stream, and nothing more; and, as the Senator from Montana says, any individual can go upon that stream and reserve those rights in precisely the same way. If he began the construction of his ditch or provided any method or means of diverting the water and had actually diverted it, that amount of water was reserved to him, and any more was reserved to him which he had shown the capacity to take out and put upon his land, provided he used reasonable diligence.

Some time ago, when I was diverted, I was calling attention to the case to which the Senator has just adverted in connection with the Winters case. I refer to the case in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States. Let me read another paragraph from it:

> Second, that it is limited by the superior power of the General Government to secure the uninterrupted navigability of all navigable streams within the limits of the United States. In other words, the jurisdiction of the General Government over interstate commerce and its natural highways vests in that Government the right to take all needed measures to preserve the navigability of the navigable water courses of the country even against any State action.

That, Mr. President, is the authority upon which the court relies in the Winters case, and the authority upon which the court relies in the Winters case bases its decision upon the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution giving Congress power over interstate commerce and thereby the power to keep open the stream over which that commerce may flow; and nobody, of course, is contending against that proposition.

Now, Mr. President, let us come back to the original principles for one moment. I think that I am familiar enough with the views of the Senator from Arkansas upon some questions to present two or three propositions on which he will agree with me. The first is this, that when the colonies seceded from Great Britain they were the sole and exclusive owners of the waters and all the streams which flowed within their borders. There was nobody else to own them; they belonged exclusively to the States and were subject alone to their sovereignty. Will the Senator tell me under what provision of the Constitution those waters were transferred to the National Government? How did they get there? If the National Government owns and controls the waters of the States, under what provision of the National Constitution does it do so? As has been said by the Supreme Court time and time again, the waters of the streams belong to the States and are subject to their control; and no provision of the National Constitution ever transferred any right over them save and except that of keeping the streams open for navigation for the purposes of commerce.

The second proposition that I will state to the Senator is, that the National Government owns its public land wholly and solely as a proprietor; not as a sovereign, but solely and alone as Jones or Smith or anyone else owns land as proprietor. In a proprietary capacity the National Government can not add to its proprietorship its sovereign power. Therefore the National Government in my State, owning its public lands, stands in the same position as any other proprietor; it has the same rights. If it is in a State where the common-law doctrine of riparian rights prevails, it may insist upon waters flowing by its lands as they were wont to flow. If it is in a State where the doctrine of prior appropriation obtains, any individual may go upon a stream, although it flows over the public lands, and appropriate every particle of the water in the stream, if he applies it to a beneficial use. It is not necessary that he keep off the public lands or that he refrain from interfering with the water that flows over the public lands. The National Government as a proprietor is in the same position as any individual, and must yield to the laws of the State the same as must an individual.

I will take a moment to read from some of the decisions upon this question briefly. I would not detain the Senate if it were not for the fact that this is a matter of more than ordinary concern to us:

The United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain, within the limits of the State or elsewhere, except in cases in which it is expressly granted.

The Supreme Court further says:

First, the shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution to the United States and were reserved to the States respectively. Second, the new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States. Third, the right of the United States to the public lands and the power of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the land in controversy in this case.

Again, the court says in Martin v. Lessees (16 Pet., 410):

When the Revolution took place the people of each State became themselves sovereign, and in that character held the absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soils under them for their own common use, subject only to rights since surrendered by the Constitution to the General Government.

Says the Supreme Court in Seventh Howard:

It is not questioned that land within a State purchased by the United States as a mere proprietor and not reserved or appropriated to any special purpose might be liable to condemnation for streets or highways like the land of other proprietors under the rights of eminent domain.

* * * * * * *

Every State in the Union comes, and must come, in on the same basis as every other State. The State has the absolute right to control the game and the manner of hunting the same within the State. The admission of a Territory to statehood abrogates the terms of a treaty with Indians as to the right to hunt upon the public lands. The sovereign rights of the State can not be taken away by treaty or act of Congress.

In Two hundred and sixth United States the Supreme Court says:

In other words, the determination of the rights of the two States inter se in regard to the flow of waters in the Arkansas River is subordinate to the superior right on the part of the National Government to control the whole system of reclamation of arid lands. That involves the question whether the reclamation of arid lands is one of the powers granted to the General Government.

* * * * * * *

Clearly, it does not grant to Congress any legislative control over the States, and must, so far as they are concerned, be limited to authority over the property belonging to the United States within their limits.

During the discussion of one of these cases before the Supreme Court Mr. Justice White, now Chief Justice, said from the bench in a colloquy with one of the attorneys:

You constantly talk about the public lands. When you speak of the public arid lands, are you deducing from the fact that they are public lands a governmental right or power in Congress? Do you suppose if there are 100 acres of public land in a State, the existence of that public land in the State invests Congress as a Government with the power to destroy the law of the State because it owns land in the State which an individual would not have?

That states the matter, Mr. President, in a nutshell. The fact that the National Government owns lands in a State does not empower the National Government to interfere with the laws of the State in any respect whatever. The land is subject to the control of the State just the same as it would be if it belonged to any other proprietor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in that connection, will the Senator from Idaho permit me to suggest, in support of what he is saying, that whenever we provide for the erection of a public building in one of the States the State government has absolute control over it, unless we have procured from the State the cession of jurisdiction?

Mr. BORAH. The Supreme Court said in another case:

But it is useless to pursue the inquiry further in this direction. It is enough for the purposes of this case that each State has full jurisdiction over the lands within its borders, including the beds of streams and other waters.

Now, with reference to the right of individuals to appropriate the waters of public streams flowing over public lands, I will not stop to read, but I desire to put in the RECORD the statutes of 1866 and 1877.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What statutes?

Mr. BORAH. United States statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, that whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals, for the purposes aforesaid, is hereby acknowledged and confirmed: Provided, however, That whenever, after the passage of this act, any person or persons shall, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injure or damage the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

This statute, after providing for the sale of desert lands and the appropriation of water for the reclamation of the same, declares that "all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes subject to existing rights."

Mr. BORAH. The constitution of the State of Idaho provides on this subject as follows:

APPROPRIATION OF WATER—PRIORITIES.

SEC. 3. The right to divert and appropriate the unappropriated waters of any natural stream to beneficial uses, shall never be denied. Priority of appropriation shall give the better right as between those using the water; but when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient for the service of all those desiring the use of the same, those using the water for domestic purposes shall (subject to such limitations as may be prescribed by law) have the preference over those claiming for any other purpose; and those using the water for agricultural purposes shall have preference over those using the same for manufacturing purposes. And in any organized mining district those using the water for mining purposes or milling purposes connected with mining shall have preference over those using the same for manufacturing or agricultural purposes. But the usage by such subsequent appropriators shall be subject to such provisions of law regulating the taking of private property for public and private use, as referred to in section 14 of article 1, of this constitution.

The doctrine of prior appropriation has been established in our State by the constitution.

As I have said, I am not familiar with the Montana situation, but, so far as the Fort Hall situation is concerned, the parties went upon a public stream, complied with the State law, appropriated the water, diverted it from the stream, put it into a reservoir, and took it from the reservoir and put it upon the public lands. Whatever rights they have there they claim by virtue of having complied with the State law. They conceded the jurisdiction of the State, and, having conceded the jurisdiction of the State, having secured whatever rights they had by virtue of having complied with the laws of the State, enjoying all they do enjoy because of the laws of the State, I think it will not be seriously contended that, so far as that right is concerned, it is not subject in all its ramifications and the effects of distribution to the laws of the State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent to withdraw a point of order which I made. I offered an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 73, from line 6 to line 10. The Senator from Oklahoma made a point of order upon my amendment, and then I made a point of order upon the committee amendment to which it was an amendment.

I have been looking into the matter, and I believe the committee amendment is a meritorious one, as was my amendment to it, and I do not think I ought to defeat one meritorious thing because somebody else, by a point of order, has defeated another meritorious thing.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order I made to the committee amendment, on page 73, lines 6 to 10, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. The proper way, of course, if we are going to do it in violation of the rule, would be to reconsider the vote by which the point of order was sustained.

Mr. NORRIS. It was not sustained by a vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not move to reconsider a ruling of the Chair. I have just taken stock of the question, and I have found out that I have no right to withdraw it, because it has been passed upon and has gone out of the bill; that I can not even do it by unanimous consent after we get back into the Senate out of the Committee of the Whole, and the only way to do it is to get unanimous consent in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator referred to the amendment which was offered by the Senator and referred to the Senate and voted upon by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; this is in another part of the bill, and this amendment went out altogether upon the ruling of the Chair on the point of order. There was no reference of the matter to the Senate at all.

I ask that consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I understood the ruling of the Chair on that subject—I may have misunderstood him—he took out the amendment prior to that also. I take it the request applies also to that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, Mr. President; my request for unanimous consent applied only to what I have mentioned.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; but my point is that the amendment just before this also went out with it. If I understood the Chair correctly, he said both went out together.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; somebody else made a point of order on the balance of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, the point of order to which was withdrawn, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, the paragraph beginning on line 6 and ending with line 10 on that page, reading as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enroll on the proper respective rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes, as indicated, the persons enumerated in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of entering a point of order against the amendment which has been discussed this afternoon; but if my colleague desires to address the Senate I will withhold it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to say something on this question before we finally pass away from it; but there are several other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the senior Senator from Utah yields to his colleague?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not at all particular whether I say what I have to say now or later on some of the other amendments.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator nor break in on the thread of his discourse. I understood that I should be recognized after the Senator from Utah, but I understand he yielded to his colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. So I will ask permission to be recognized after the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That certainly will be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in this discussion we have rather lost sight of the language of the proposed amendment. It is:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Belknap Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved; and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

I do not know exactly how this reservation was created. I know that some of the reservations in Montana are what are called treaty reservations; that is, they were created under the terms of a treaty entered into between the United States and the Indians. Other reservations to which this same amendment is directed were created by Executive orders. That was the case with reference to the Uintah Reservation in my own State. That reservation was created in 1864 by an Executive order issued by President Lincoln.

The position of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] seems to be that no matter how the reservation was created the United States has the power to reserve these waters from the operation of the laws of the States. Whatever construction may be given to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Winters case, it certainly does not go to that extent, because it dealt with a reservation that was created by a treaty, and the full extent to which the decision of the Supreme Court can by any possibility go is to hold that under that treaty there was an implied reservation of the waters, which would be in legal effect the same as though it had been expressly reserved.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I stated in the beginning of my remarks that the Winters case applied to such reservations as were created by treaty or agreement stipulations between the Government and the Indians, and that it might be that that doctrine would not apply to other reservations, but that a different doctrine would apply. I made that statement distinctly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The same amendment, however, is found with reference to the Uintah Reservation, which, as I say, was created by an Executive order and is not a treaty reservation at all. However that may be, the amendment ought not to be put upon the appropriations for any of these reservations.

What is it that this amendment proposes to do? It proposes, first of all, to reserve waters so far as they may be necessary for irrigation purposes, and, further, to provide that the failure of any Indian or Indians to use the waters for a beneficial purpose shall not in any manner defeat his or her right to the same.

Either the Indians upon that reservation have a superior right to this water or they have not, as I suggested to the Senator from Vermont. If they have a superior right, that is a right which can not be added to by any act of Congress. It is a right which exists independently of any act of Congress. So, in that view of it, this amendment is absolutely needless. If, on the other hand, they have no right superior to that of any other resident or citizen of the State of Montana, then no act of Congress can confer it upon them. In that view of the matter, while the amendment is inoperative, it is mischievous, because it attempts to assert a power upon the part of Congress which it does not possess, and is likely to come up hereafter as an embarrassing circumstance in any contentions which may arise between different claimants. In either view, it ought not to be adopted as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is more familiar than I am with these irrigation projects. Is it not an act of declaration of intention to make beneficial use of the land in an Indian reservation when the Government constructs an irrigating plant for the purpose of irrigating that particular tract of land? What further notice must be given that there is an intention to apply it to that particular use on that reservation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would depend upon the law of the State. In the absence of a law to the contrary, no notice at all would be required. It would simply be necessary that the appropriator should begin his work of appropriation, follow it up with reasonable diligence, and make an application of the water to his land and to a beneficial use within a reasonable time. That was the law of all the arid-land States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course, in every one of the cases where this provision is attached there had been an appropriation made by the Government, and I assume that they had complied with the laws of the State up to that point; at least that they had a right to do what they did in making the appropriation and constructing the irrigation plant. That provision was intended, if I understood it correctly, that if anything should happen so that this water which had been appropriated or which had been impounded, which had been provided for through the appropriation, should not be within a certain time or within any particular time applied to the reservation for which it was appropriated the Indian should not lose his right under it. Now, do I understand the Senator to say that the Federal Government—the Congress of the United States—has no right to prepare for such an emergency as that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not the slightest doubt about it in my own mind. Of course I may be mistaken; but I was going on to discuss that very matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then I want to say this, in order that the Senator may discuss it if he thinks it worth while: It seems to me it has been a most serious mistake on the part of the Government to expend the amount of money it has expended in the construction of irrigation projects at the expense of the Indians, if in the end the only people or largely the only people who are going to get the advantage of it are white people who have simply taken advantage of this investment of the Indians.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it turned out in that way the Senator would be quite correct; it would be a mistake, or at least a partial mistake, and at any rate it would be most unfortunate. There is, however, no necessity of its turning out in that way. What is a reasonable time within which to complete the works and to put the water to beneficial use depends upon circumstances. If a single individual is appropriating water for a 10-acre tract of land from a nearby stream, three months might be a reasonable time and anything beyond that an unreasonable time. In the case of an enterprise involving several thousand acres of land and bringing water from a remote distance, two years might be a reasonable time. In a case of this kind, where hundreds of rights are involved, where an immense tract of land is involved, and where a large irrigation plant must be established, a reasonable time may go far beyond that. It depends upon the circumstances of each case.

All that the Government of the United States is obliged to do is what any corporation would be obliged to do in a similar situation, namely, to do its work with reasonable diligence, complete the canals, the reservoirs, the dams, if there are any, within a reasonable time and make the application of the water within a reasonable time.

It has been held repeatedly that it is not even necessary, when the water is taken out, to apply it to the entire tract of land the first year. A settler may take up 160 acres, and after he has completed his ditch the first year he may be able to apply it only to 5 acres. That is not the measure of his right. The next year he can apply it to an additional 5 acres, and the next year to an additional 10 acres, if that is all he can reasonably do; and he can continue to apply the water until he has redeemed his entire 160 acres, all of this being done within a reasonable time, having in mind, as I have said, the circumstances of each individual case, his right will relate back to the time when the initial steps were taken.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I wish to say to the Senator that that was the very wrong we were trying to remove. Under the law of 1907 the Indians were allowed but three years within which to make their improvements upon the land and to bring it under cultivation after they had brought the water to it; and they were not then given by the Government—through the neglect, of course, of their guardian—the means, the tools, and the implements with which to bring it under cultivation. They were absolutely shut out. That was what we were trying to remedy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know nothing about the conditions in Montana, but in my own State there is a provision that the appropriation must be completed within a reasonable time, and there is a limitation upon that, as I remember, of five years. The State legislature recognized the fact that in this great enterprise that would not be a sufficient time, and by act of the legislature we have extended it until the year 1919. The work was begun in 1906, and although the citizens of the State, the water corporations of the State, must in any event complete their appropriations within 5 years, we have so amended our law that the Indians may have 13 years within which to do it; and that time will not expire, as I say, until 1919.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. It seems to me the suggestion just made is a very happy solution of this matter. Does not the Senator think it might be proper to add to these amendments here, if points of order are not made against them and they are allowed to remain, a provision that these appropriations shall not be made unless the State, through its legislature, shall provide that the Indian shall have so many years in which to make his beneficial use?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should not like to pass upon that question. It is not necessary to be done in the case of my own State.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator says his own State has provided in that way.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My own State has done that.

Mr. PAGE. So that is all right. Now, why not let the other States that want this do the same thing?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should prefer to have the Senators from those States determine that matter. I am not familiar with their laws. They may have done it.

Mr. PAGE. My idea is that there is no question about these amendments being open to points of order; but then we come back to the other proposition. The State of Montana, for instance, is asking that we add $500 000 to the appropriation made by the House. Does the Senator think that we, as legislators, are doing our duty by the Indians if we add these appropriations unless we protect them by saying that they shall not be granted unless some protection is given to the Indians?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that if I felt that in the end these Indians were going to lose their water I certainly would not appropriate money to build works; but I can only speak of the situation in my own State. The people of Utah are quite as careful of the rights of the Indian as the Congress of the United States, and they have been far more careful of their rights in times past than Congress has been.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to what I am about to say.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will let me complete what I was going to say about this matter before he does that.

Mr. PAGE. Just one word, and then I will. The Senator from Montana, you will bear in mind, has just introduced an amendment that provides, substantially, that unless they make their improvements within three years the right shall lapse. The Senator from Utah says that in his State the Indians have 13 years; and still Montana is asking that we add to the appropriation to the extent of half a million dollars.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to complete what I have to say upon this question, and I shall be very brief. I do not want to undertake to settle for Montana what should be done in that State.

As it seems to me, the question involved here is, after all, a comparatively simple one. The rule of the common law was that the water of a stream should be permitted to run in its accustomed channel. Under the common law—and that is the rule in all of the Eastern States to-day—an owner of land can not divert the water for the purpose of irrigating his land or leading it away from the channel of the stream. It is true that the riparian proprietor may utilize the water to a certain limited extent for the purpose of flooding his meadows and for other purposes, but it must be returned to the channel.

That rule of the common law was found to be entirely inapplicable to the conditions in the arid-land States, because crops could not be grown simply by the fall of the rain. That rule of the common law originated in England and was adopted in this country because the conditions were such that it was not necessary to resort to artificial irrigation. The rain which fell from the heavens took care of the crops. In the arid section, however, when it was discovered that the rainfall was wholly insufficient, and that water must be diverted from the streams in order to grow crops, the courts at a very early day held that the rule of the common law, being entirely inapplicable, ceased to have any existence. Indeed, that was based upon a larger and more general rule of the common law itself, namely, that the reason of the rule ceasing, the rule itself ceases. So they held that the reason of the common-law rule having ceased in the arid-land region, the rule itself ceased.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held repeatedly that in the absence of local laws or local customs which prior to the adoption of the statutes had the force of laws, the rule of the common law applies. So far as the public lands of the United States are concerned, the United States is a proprietor, the same as any individual is a proprietor. In the absence of any rule of the State to the contrary, the United States would have a right to rest upon the common-law rule that the water should run as it had been accustomed to running.

Now, if the United States or an Indian tribe or an individual within a State seeks any other rule than the common law—that is, seeks the right to divert the water and consume it in the irrigation of land—he can not resort to any law of the United States, nor to the rule of the common law, because the rule of the common law is against him. He must go to the State law; and the State, having the right to say that the common law in that respect shall be departed from and appropriation for a beneficial use take its place, has the right to condition its exercise. Therefore, if the United States or an Indian tribe undertakes to appropriate water in derogation of the rule of the common law and in conformity to the law of the State, the law of the State must be complied with because the law of the State is the measure of the right.

Mr. PAGE. And under the law of the State, or under the common law, is it true that the man who first makes appropriation of this water holds it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Under the law of the State, the man who first appropriates it and puts it to a beneficial use.

Mr. PAGE. That is the statement made by the Senator from Idaho this afternoon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is a correct statement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not under the common law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not under the common law. The common law did not recognize the right at all. As the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] says, that was really the common law of these arid-land States, because, as I say, the old rule was departed from in pursuance of the controlling rule, that the reason of the rule ceasing, the rule itself ceases.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] calls my attention to a recent decision of the Supreme Court in Two hundred and thirteenth United States, the case of Boquillas Land & Cattle Co. against Curtis, the syllabus of which reads:

Under section 3198, Revised Statutes of Arizona of 1887, the common-law doctrine of riparian rights does not now obtain in that Territory, and, as held by the supreme court of the Territory, the doctrine of appropriation was recognized and to some extent in force prior to and since 1833 in the State of Sonora, now a part of that Territory.

Confirmation of an estate does not enlarge it, and where the original Mexican title did not carry riparian rights, the mere confirmation thereof by the United States does not give such rights to the confirmee.

The rule is laid down and the limit of the authority of the United States in matters of this kind is nowhere more clearly stated than in One hundred and seventy-fourth United States, from which the Senator from Idaho read. Let me repeat a sentence or two from that case.

That was a decision by Mr. Justice Brewer, who, by the way, dissented in the Winters case. I may say not only that Justice Brewer was one of the greatest judges who has ever sat upon that bench, and one of the greatest of the judges who sat upon it at the time he occupied it, but no judge has ever sat upon that bench who was so familiar with western questions as Mr. Justice Brewer. He was a judge upon the bench in Kansas for many years, and in Colorado, a circuit judge holding court in Colorado, trying upon the circuit these irrigation cases and mining cases; and it is no secret that the bench turned to Justice Brewer as an authority upon irrigation and mining questions whenever such cases came before the Supreme Court. He speaks with peculiar authority upon matters of this kind. He dissented, as I say, in the Winters case.

Justice Brewer, in the Rio Grande case (174 U. S.), after calling attention to the rule of the common law which I have stated, says:

> While this is undoubted, and the rule obtains in those States in the Union which have simply adopted the common law, it is also true that as to every stream within its dominion a State may change this common-law rule and permit the appropriation of the flowing waters for such purposes as it deems wise. Whether this power to change the common-law rule and permit any specific and separate appropriation of the waters of a stream belongs also to the legislature of a Territory, we do not deem it necessary for the purposes of this case to inquire.

He proceeds:

> Although this power of changing the common-law rule as to streams within its dominion undoubtedly belongs to each State, yet two limitations must be recognized.

And, of course, when the court states that two limitations must be recognized, the converse of that naturally follows that only the two will be recognized.

> First, that in the absence of specific authority from Congress a State can not by its legislation destroy the right of the United States, as the owner of lands bordering on a stream—

Now, to what? Not to divert the water for purposes of irrigation; not to take it up and consume the corpus of the water as irrigation renders necessary, but—> to the continued flow of its waters; so far, at least, as may be necessary for the beneficial uses of the Government property.

It is not stated in very precise terms, but whatever the right may be it is not a right to divert water; it is a right to the continued flow of the water.

But the thing which is sought to be reserved here is not the right to the continued flow of the water, so far as that may be necessary, in the language of this case, for the beneficial use of the Government property or the Indian property, but it is a proposition to reserve the water for irrigation purposes; that is, to reserve the water under the rule laid down by the State laws. It is a direct recognition of the rule of the State, and not the rule of the common law or the rule announced by this case.

Of course, if the United States relies upon the local law—a State law—it must act in accordance with the conditions of the local law. If the State has the power to confer the right to appropriate water in derogation of the common law, it of course has the lesser power to condition the exercise of that right in any way it pleases; and when the United States relies upon that right conferred by the State to appropriate water in derogation of the rule of the common law, it must accept the conditions which the local law has imposed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to state to the Senator, as references have been made to decisions to the effect that a State has the right to change the mode of appropriation to that of riparian ownership, the legislature, of course, has no such right, but it must be done by a constitutional amendment of the State. That is the only way by which it can be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. The other limitation which this case announced is one that I need not read. It is simply the right to protect the navigability of the streams. Of course, that right arises from an express provision of the Constitution of the United States. That is a right which exists under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say that this matter was brought before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and on page 378 of the hearing we have the law given by the law officer of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in reading it, but——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What law does the Senator refer to?

Mr. PAGE. Let me read it, and the Senator will see:

> The climatic and physical conditions are such that this project—

Referring to the Fort Hall project—> has given considerable trouble and anxiety since its construction. Moving sands, weeds, and animals in the summer and ice in the winter have given more than the usual amount of trouble and expense, but it is hoped that with the proper seasoning of the structures and an increase in farming some of these difficulties will disappear or at least become less.

> Referring to the proviso clause regarding water rights, I wish to say: The purpose of this and other similar legislation in this bill is to protect the rights of Indians to water on Indian reservations and on allotted Indian lands held under trust or by other patents containing restrictions on alienation.
>
> To establish more certainly and securely water rights of Indians is a matter of the greatest importance in administering satisfactorily their affairs. On a number of reservations where Indians have been allotted the land is practically of no value for agricultural purposes without irrigation. Water on these reservations is a vital factor in developing the Indians living thereon, so that they may become self-supporting and be raised to a higher standard of civilization.
>
> The Supreme Court, in the case of Winters v. United States (207 U. S., 564), said that "the power of the Government to reserve waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be."

I will take only a moment. Here is the law given with citations. Then we come to the conclusion:

> I have quoted the laws referred to and shown the money expended on the reservations named—

Three million three hundred and twenty-one thousand five hundred and twenty-three dollars and eighty cents—> in order to indicate the great importance of the matter under consideration and the necessity of conserving the water rights of Indians on the large number of Indian reservations throughout the United States.

> The Indian water-right situation is one of the most acute and important questions relating to Indian matters now before the Indian Bureau.

So they emphasize that in the strongest possible way as one of the most acute and important questions before the bureau at this time.

> There are dependent upon the solution of this question not only property rights involving millions of dollars, but the success or failure, prosperity or poverty, of thousands of Indians who are the wards of the Government and whose interests it is the duty of the Indian Bureau to protect.
> The CHAIRMAN. Why do you add this provision which materially modifies the law which has existed heretofore?

That is the provision we are talking about.

> Mr. MERITT. We are asking that this proviso clause be incorporated in the bill in connection with a number of irrigation projects for the reason that we find it necessary if the water rights of the Indians are to be protected. Congress has appropriated in a number of cases a large amount of money for irrigation projects on various reservations and has required that those appropriations be made reimbursable out of the funds of Indians. States have passed certain laws which make it desirable, in certain cases, that the water be made beneficial use of by the Indians; otherwise the Indians stand a chance of losing their water rights or else taking their water-rights status to the courts for determination. This item, we believe, will protect the water rights of the Indians on a number of reservations where large appropriations have been made, and where, if they lose their water rights, they will receive no benefit from the irrigation projects heretofore constructed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have read all that before. The quotation that is made from the Winters case is accurately made, but it is one of those unfortunate statements that sometimes courts, and the highest courts, lapse into. It is an obiter dictum. It was not involved in the case. Two cases are cited as authority for the proposition by the court which do not bear out the statement. One of the cases is the one from which I have just been reading, and which clearly does not bear out any such statement as that. It has not the remotest connection with it. The other is a case that has not yet been referred to, a case in One hundred and ninety-eighth United States, which involves the fishery rights of the Indians. That was a case arising either in Oregon or Washington, I have forgotten for the moment which, where the Indians had entered into a treaty with the Government by which they ceded certain lands, but the treaty expressly stipulated that it reserved their rights of fishery. It was held, and properly held, that under that treaty the reservation was effectual; that they still continued to have the right to fish upon the stream. That is obviously a very different thing from this matter of utilizing the waters of a stream. So neither of those cases will bear out the statement of the court, and, moreover, the statement, as I have said, is a mere dictum.

Mr. PAGE. Conceding that the Senator from Utah is absolutely correct in regard to the law we have before us, the caution is given by the Indian Commissioner that the Indians are liable to lose what they are putting into these lands. If that is true, if these waters which have been impounded for the benefit of the Indians may be diverted at any time to the first man to make a beneficial use of them, are we doing right by the Indians to continue to appropriate millions of dollars every year when the commissioner tells us those rights are liable to be taken away from them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This legislation will not help him. Suppose that we were to pass an act of Congress with all due solemnity to-day that the Senator from Vermont should have the right in the State of Vermont to appropriate the water of some particular stream and turn it out of the stream and use it upon his land, would it give the Senator any right?

Mr. PAGE. The Senator does not get my point.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, I do.

Mr. PAGE. The point is, In the name of all that is good, shall we keep on taking the money to build these projects?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I had answered that. We are building these projects because we think the agents of the Government of the United States who have these matters in control will be sufficiently diligent to secure the rights of the Indians precisely the same as white people are compelled to secure their rights in these States.

Mr. PAGE. As a matter of fact, I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me say to the Senator it is perfectly futile for us by a piece of legislation to attempt to confer upon an Indian a right which he does not have under the law of the State. We can no more confer a right upon the Indian to get something that he has not a right to get under the law of the State than we can confer the same right upon a white man.

Mr. PAGE. But the poor Indian is not here to say, "You shall not put your hand down into my pocket and take my money." He is not here to say, "You shall not mortgage my farm and then within three years deprive me of all." He is not here to defend himself, and I appeal to the Senator as a friend of the Indian to stand up and say we are not doing a good thing if we permit his farm to be mortgaged.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All I am saying is that we can not do him any good by this legislation.

Mr. PAGE. Then we should not legislate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We can not do him any good by this amendment. We can do him good by appropriating money and building irrigation works and appropriating water, but it must be done under the law of the State. We can not create the right; in other words, we can not extend his rights under the laws of the State.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator said that has been done in one State. Why has that not been the condition in other States?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have answered that question. I say the amendment is not necessary in my own State, and so far as Montana and Idaho are concerned the Senator from Vermont must fight out that question with the Senators from those States. I am not going to discuss it.

Mr. PAGE. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, just a word with reference to what this would result in if it has any effect at all. There is no limitation as to the amount of water which is to be reserved and no limitation as to the length of time the right will exist without the Indian doing anything to carry it into operation. Therefore we may have this situation, and it will be an actual situation if it could apply to the Uintah Reservation. Here is a stream of water rising upon that reservation and flowing out of the reservation to land to be occupied by settlers. The water is being appropriated by these white settlers clear away from the reservation all the time. At the end of 50 years, when some of the descendants of these Indians finally conclude that they want to divert some water from this stream in what was a former part of the reservation, can they divert it and take it from the white man and his successor in interest who has been utilizing it for 50 years? Is that the intent of the legislation? Is that the effect of it? If it has any effect at all, it might result in exactly that sort of a situation.

So, take another stream which rises out of the reservation and flows entirely through it. It rises up in Wyoming and flows through a part of Utah into the reservation and out of the reservation again. Suppose in the meantime during the next 50 years the Indians are not utilizing the water which has been reserved to them or attempted to be reserved on this reservation. White settlers above divert the water and utilize it. White settlers below divert it and use it. At the end of 25 or 30 or 50 years these Indians suddenly conclude that they want to cultivate some land there. Should they be permitted to take these rights from the white men? If the white men are not willing to take rights of that character that are subject to be put an end to in the way I have indicated, is that stream to be perpetually dedicated to idleness during all the years to come by this sort of legislation?

We say that this water is reserved to the Indians. We do not require that they utilize it at any time, and therefore we dedicate it perpetually to waste until the Indians use it unless those white people are willing to make an appropriation subject to having it taken by the Indians for their land, their own land to be rendered valueless whenever the Indian gets ready to do it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I will take but a moment of time. Here is the opinion of Mr. Meritt, the law clerk of the department. I want again to read what he says about the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will be brief, because I will yield the floor in a moment, and let him take all the time he wants.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Meritt says:

According to estimates of the Reclamation Service——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. PAGE. Page 454 of the 1913 hearings:

According to estimates of the Reclamation Service it will require nearly $3,000,000 to be further appropriated by Congress to complete this project, the money appropriated to be reimbursable out of the proceeds of the sale of land and timber of the Flathead Indians.

Here we are going to ask the Indian to mortgage his land and his timber, for a $3,000,000 project has already been appropriated, and then you state the law is, that if a white man is quicker than an Indian and can appropriate that water quicker than he can, the Indian loses his right. Why do you take the Indian's money unless you can protect him?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, all these rights have been initiated already. The Government of the United States has filed upon these waters for the benefit of the Indians. In my own State they have a clear right, at any time up to the year 1919, to put it to a beneficial use. The effect of the action of the legislature of my State is to permit the Government of the United States to file a caveat upon those waters which will last for 13 years.

Mr. PAGE. Do they do that also in Montana? We are talking about Montana now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have already said to the Senator that I will not discuss Montana.

Mr. PAGE. But Montana is the State we are now legislating for.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well; the Senator must discuss that matter with the Senator from Montana, who knows about it. I do not know what the laws of Montana provide on the subject.

Mr. President, just another reference and then I am through. It was suggested by somebody when we were discussing this question the other day that a citizen of Utah or any of these other States would have no right to initiate a water claim upon a reservation. This claim was made in my own State some years ago. In 1902, when some citizens of that State initiated a water claim upon the Uintah Reservation, in what is called the Strawberry Valley, the question arose as to whether they had a right to initiate a claim upon these waters within the reservation. I argued the case for them before the district judge, and he held that they did have a right to do it; that the waters were subject to the jurisdiction of the State the same as waters upon any other part of the public domain; and that right was initiated and the work was done by them. It was finally turned over by the citizens, and the great Strawberry Valley project is built upon that filing. The Government of the United States, upon the filing made by these citizens upon the reservation, has spent more than a million dollars in building a reservoir and other works under the reclamation act.

The question finally came—not in that particular case, but in another case—to the supreme court of the State. The case is reported in Thirty-seventh Utah. I read from page 217. The court said:

It is now well settled and recognized that there is a distinction between initiating or acquiring a right to the use of unappropriated public waters on public domain and a right or interest in or to the public lands themselves, and that the former is not dependent upon the latter. To initiate and acquire a right in and to the use of unappropriated public water, whether on the public domain or within a reservation or elsewhere, is dependent upon the laws or customs of the State in which such water is found. Property in and to the use of unappropriated waters of a stream or spring or lake on the public domain or within a reservation—

And this was within the Indian reservation—or within a reservation, may be acquired for a beneficial purpose by mere appropriation, and the first appropriator, to the extent of his appropriation when completed and established, is the owner as against all the world. In order that the appropriator may be entitled to the use of such water, it is not essential that he should have located or taken possession of any tract or parcel of the public domain bordering upon the stream or lake from which the appropriation is made, or that he even have an interest in or to the lands proposed to be irrigated if such be the beneficial purpose of the appropriation. An appropriation may be made of such water for the irrigation of lands not situated upon or near the stream or lake from which it is taken, and the water may be conducted by means of ditches or channels, or otherwise, across the intervening public lands, to irrigate lands possessed by the appro-priator or others, or he may sell and dispose of the water thus conducted to others to use it for a beneficial purpose on claims or lands possessed or owned by them, or in which they have an interest and upon which the water may be and is applied for a beneficial purpose. These views are discussed and enlarged upon by Mr. Kinney in his work on Irrigation (chs. 6, 7) and by Mr. Farnham in his work on Waters and Water Rights (vol. 3, ch. 22). And it also has been held that a valid water right may be acquired even though there had been no compliance with the statute regulating the appropriation of unappropriated public waters, where the unappropriated water was actually diverted by means of a ditch or canal or otherwise and applied to a beneficial use before the inception of any adverse statutory claim. (Murray v. Tingley, 20 Mont., 260; 50 Pac., 723, and cases there referred to.)

I come to the concluding part of it, on page 219, which reads:

We have no doubt that unappropriated public water on a reservation or on the public domain is subject to appropriation, and may be appropriated for a beneficial purpose, though the appropriator has not, when his application is filed with the State engineer, a present right in or to the lands along the stream from which the water is proposed to be diverted, or in or to the lands proposed to be irrigated by him. In this respect the appropriation of unappropriated public water on a reservation and the loction of a mining claim or other lands on or within a reservation rest on different foundations, and are controlled by different principles. The one is a proper subject of rightful acquisition. The other is not.

That is, the power to acquire the water upon the reservation is a proper subject, while the right to acquire a mine upon the reservation is not.

An appropriation made of such waters will be protected—

Now, I ask the Senator from Vermont to listen to this:

An appropriation made of such waters will be protected—

Mind you this is an appropriation of water upon this very reservation, the Uintah Indian Reservation—

An appropriation made of such waters will be protected, even as against the Government of the United States. The location of mining claims or the taking up of lands on or within a reservation is void and of no effect, because the ores or lands sought to be taken, or acquired, are not then subject to private ownership or acquisition.

That is a clear and emphatic decision in favor of the contention which I am making.

I also call attention, and then I am through, to the fact that in 1906, when we first began the work of constructing for the Indians canals and reservoirs, Congress itself thrashed out the subject. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] will remember the discussion which took place in the committee. I remember that Senator Teller was also a member of the committee at that time, a lawyer of great ability with very pronounced views upon these western questions. The then Commissioner of Indian Affairs insisted that we should undertake then to reserve these rights, and the whole matter was discussed pro and con before the committee. The Senator from Minnesota heard the discussion, I believe, and will bear me out in what I am saying. Even Mr. Roosevelt, the then President, took some hand in the matter and attempted to have a different form of legislation, but that committee after full consideration finally wrote into that law this language:

Provided, That such irrigation systems shall be constructed and completed and held and operated, and water therefor appropriated under the laws of the State of Utah, and the title thereto until otherwise provided by law shall be in the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the Indians, and he may sue and be sued in matters relating thereto.

There could not be a more unequivocal recognition of the limitation upon the power of the United States to initiate these water rights than that. It is expressly recognized with reference to this very enterprise that the water must be appropriated under the laws of the State of Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that is now under discussion that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a motion, but I will yield for a short time to the Senator from Oklahoma.

DUTY AND OPPORTUNITY OF THE PRESENT RULING MAJORITY IN CONGRESS.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Democratic national platform includes the following pledge:

We call attention to the fact that the Democratic Party's demand for a return to a rule of the people, expressed in the national platform four years ago, has now become the accepted doctrine of a large majority of the electors. We again remind the country that only by the larger exercise of the reserved power of the people can they protect themselves from the misuse of delegated power and the usurpation of governmental instrumentalities by special interests. For this reason the national convention insisted upon the overthrow of Cannonism and the inauguration of a system by which the United States Senators could be elected by direct vote. The Democratic Party offers itself to the country as an agency through which the complete overthrow and extirpation of corruption, fraud, and machine rule in American politics can be effected.

No plank in the Democratic platform was of greater importance than the pledge to overthrow corruption, fraud, and machine rule in politics. Machine rule and corruption in party government has been the bane of both the Republican and Democratic Parties and one of the greatest difficulties in the way of perfecting true and honest democratic government.

The means by which machine rule and corruption have accomplished their sinister designs are perfectly well understood, and the remedy is perfectly well understood by students of government.

The Democratic Party, and the members of the Republican party as well, should join with enthusiasm in eliminating corruption and machine rule. The Republican Party was torn in half by machine rule in Chicago in 1912. No Senator on this floor, I believe, would venture to say that he thought it a wise policy to permit in any way machine rule, fraud, or corruption in our election machinery. But no individual seems to feel charged with the responsibility of preparing the necessary measure and urging its passage which will make effective the right of the people to express themselves freely and to have authoritative knowledge of the claims of the candidates and of measures and have their will made effective.

I propose, therefore, a resolution charging the Committee on Privileges and Elections with this duty, in the hope that it may meet with the sympathetic cooperation not only of all Democrats, but of all the Republican and Progressive Senators as well.

To facilitate these reforms I have prepared and submit herewith four proposed bills.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES.

First. The first law requiring important amendment is the law preventing private individuals from contributing unlimited amounts of money in the campaigns relating to the Presidency and to the Members of Congress and Senators. I have had this statute carefully examined and prepared by one of the ablest experts in the United States on this question, Mr. George H. Shibley, and I have introduced it and had it referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, Senate bill 5810.

The present law permits any amount of contribution to be made and expended by private persons in relation to these elections and permits intrastate committees the liberty of doing as they please with regard to the nomination and election of Senators and Congressmen, without any conditions being imposed by the Federal law. The plan which I have proposed is to lay down a minimum of requirements in the way of contributions and expenditures by corporations, committees, or individuals; and if passed, this bill will have an important effect upon diminishing fraud in the election of Congressmen and Senators, and would have an important effect on overthrowing machine rule and corruption.

PUBLICITY PAMPHLETS.
